Senator MORGAN was born in Athens, Tenn., on the 20th day of June, 1824. He came to Alabama to live when he was 9 years old, and received most of his education in the State of his adoption. He was admitted to the bar to practice law when he was 21 years old, and continued in the practice for thirty-two years, until he was elected to the Senate of the United States. He was a Presidential elector in 1860 and voted for Breckinridge and Lane. He was a member of the State convention that proposed the ordinance of secession. He joined the Confederate army in May, 1861, and rose from a private soldier successively through the grades of major, lieutenant-colonel, and colonel to the rank of brigadier-general. As a Presidential elector from Alabama he voted for Tilden and Hendricks in 1876. He was elected to the United States Senate in 1877, and continued to represent his State in that Chamber of the Congress until his death.

Senator PETTUS died in harness at the age of 86 years, the senior Senator in age in the Senate, and one of the most interesting figures that has ever appeared in public life. He was born in Limestone County, Ala.; was educated in the common schools of the State and at Clinton College in Tennessee. He studied law; was admitted to the bar to practice when 21 years of age; was elected solicitor of the seventh judicial circuit of Alabama within two years after he came to the bar; went with a party of neighbors to California in 1849 on horseback; served as a lieutenant in the Mexican war, and was judge of the seventh Alabama circuit from 1855 to 1858. He entered the Confederate army as major of the Twentieth Alabama Infantry in 1861, and was soon after promoted to be lieutenant-colonel, and in 1863 was made a brigadier-general for leading the troops of a Texas battalion to retake a salient of the works in which the Union forces had found a formidable lodgment. Senator PETTUS was without military training, but he was the highest type of military soldier, always ready and courageous, fearless of danger, and able to rise above adversity.

For three decades after the civil war he refused to hold office, and he was 75 years old when the Alabama legislature first elected him to the Senate. He was twice thereafter elected without opposition, and died with eight years yet to serve.

Senator PETTUS was a man of strong convictions, the growth of years of experience; he was both wise and courageous as a public servant. From the first he took a prominent position in the Senate, and possessed the confidence and respect of his colleagues at all times.

The passing away of these two great men marks the close of an era; they came down to us from times that have gone—from a civilization that has passed away. They stood like great trees on a mountain peak that have breasted the storms of centuries, and stand as grim, old sentinels of an age that has passed.

They have gone from us; new officers command the ship of state, and new soldiers are here to answer duty's call; but the names of MORGAN and PETTUS will go resounding down the path of time, marking the road to patriotism, courage, honor, and statesmanship for generations of Alabamians yet to come.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, having had the honor of living since my birth in the same town with both General MORGAN and General PETTUS and having always thought of them together, I trust the House will grant me the high privilege of saying something about both of them.

On one of the stone pillars supporting the gate leading into the cemetery in which both of these illustrious men sleep is a tablet upon which is this inscription:

They are not dead who live in the hearts of those they loved.

How fitting an inscription and how applicable to our two late Senators. Well might it be said of them they are not dead, but live in the hearts of a grateful people, who loved them and delight to honor their memory.

The lives of Senator MORGAN and Senator PETTUS were so closely interwoven that they came to be thought of together as almost the last representatives of the old style of statesmen. The people whom they represented never in any way showed or had any preference for one over the other, but loved and honored both alike. When but young men they practiced law in the same little town of Cahaba, now itself only a memory, and in later life they both moved to Selma, in the same county, where they lived for forty years or more. When the day came for every true patriot to take up arms in defense of Alabama and the South we find them among the first to enlist. Alike they started at the bottom of the ranks, and, alike, they were promoted time after time for bravery and efficiency until each was a brigadier-general. When the war was ended they both, like Cincinnatus of old, laid down the sword and returned to their peaceful avocations to do each his part in rebuilding the apparently prostrate South. Together they labored in that cause and together helped to lead their people through the dark days of reconstruction. So nobly did they serve their State as private citizens that first General MORGAN and then General PETTUS was sent to represent their Commonwealth in the highest branch of the National Legislature. So, together again, they labored, always untiringly, always with the highest degree of efficiency, always well, always honorably for the State and the nation which had claimed for their own the major part of the lives of both these magnificent American citizens. Yes, together they had served, in one way or another, for more than the ordinary lifetime, and almost together they died, and lie to-day in the same cemetery in the beautiful city of Selma not more than a hundred yards apart. How fitting and appropriate it is, then, Mr. Speaker, that they should be considered here together to-day. To pay a tribute to one of them is but to eulogize the other, for in all that goes to make men great, in capacity, in devotion to duty, and integrity, they were alike; and yet so different in so many respects.

General PETTUS towered above his colleague in physical stature; he was of massive build and rugged countenance, and deliberate in all that he did and said. Though profoundly learned, he was a man of few words. He was possessed of a remarkable sense of humor and a sparkling wit, though always of serious mien. A most delightful companion, though seemingly austere; blunt of speech, but filling his remarks with wisdom and force. In argument or debate, deliberate in everything, but putting so much force in few words that every blow was the blow of a sledge hammer, and every remark, though not eloquent, was delivered in such forceful manner and backed by such wisdom that conviction was invariably carried to the hearts of his hearers. His early life of campaign and adventure made of him more a strong man of action than anything else.

General MORGAN was of slighter build and shorter stature than General PETTUS; he was quick and versatile, a conversationalist of powers to charm his hearers, even upon the most ordinary subjects; a speaker of eloquence and forcefulness unsurpassed. A student from his childhood, his four years in the civil war, filled with hardships and adventure though they were, failed to leave him more a soldier than a scholar, and he continued to his death preeminently happy when exploring the realms of knowledge, or enlightening an audience with his rich flow of eloquence upon important topics, of which he was always a complete master.

SENATOR JOHN T. MORGAN.

Senator MORGAN was born in Athens, Tenn., on June 20, 1824, but removed to Alabama when he was but 9 years of age. In those days an education of much scope was a thing beyond even the brightest hope of any of the youth of that far Southern State, except where the parents were in affluent circumstances; and his parents being of moderate means, the education obtained by MORGAN was from the ordinary schools of the day and at his mother's knee. But by natural inclination he was studious, and full of the desire to acquire knowledge and excel his fellows by the possession of information and the art of knowing how to use his store of knowledge to the best advantage. Never did he swerve from his course of acquiring knowledge and more knowledge and yet more knowledge, until his mind became a veritable encycolpedia upon not only the important questions confronting the nation and its statesmen, but upon every imaginable subject. To the youth of our land who must make their own way in the world and gain for themselves the education that a lack of means denies them, no greater inspiration can come than the magnificent struggle and achievements of this sparingly schooled but nevertheless most highly educated scholar and statesman. When but a youth he studied law in the office of William P. Chilton, of Talladega, and when scarce 21 was admitted to the bar. His progress in the profession was rapid, and ten years after his admission to the bar he removed to Dallas County and continued his practice at Cahaba, then the county seat. Here he remained until the breaking out of hostilities between the North and South. During all the stirring times preceding the war he took an active part in the politics of his State, and in 1860 was elected an elector on the Breckinridge and Lane ticket. In his canvass of the State on that ticket he first came into State prominence as an orator, and from that time was destined to hold a place as one of the ablest leaders the people of Alabama have ever known. To such an extent had that canvass and his untiring efforts for States rights placed him in the forefront of the battle in which the State then found herself that his presence as a member of the convention, commonly known as the "secession convention," was imperative, and accordingly he was sent by Dallas County as her representative in that body. His wonderful eloquence and his strength as a debater won for him in that convention still greater renown among the people, who, later, were to call him from private life and make him their representative in the highest deliberative body in the world.

In 1861 he enlisted as a private in the Cahaba Rifles, a company of the Fifth Alabama Regiment, and his services as a soldier of the Confederacy ended only with the Confederacy itself. As he had led in the pursuits of peace, so was he to lead his countrymen in war, and in a brief space of time he had risen from the ranks to a colonelcy, and thence to the rank of brigadier-general. When first appointed a brigadier-general he resigned the commission, because he thought his regiment needed him and he could do more good there, and not until his place in his regiment was filled to his satisfaction would he consent to accept the higher commission, which he held to the close of the war, thus demonstrating that in the truly great solicitude for the welfare of the country's cause is greater far than ambition for glory and command. Oh, what a lesson such patriotism would be to the hustling, shouldering self-seekers of to-day, if they would only stop in their mad race for plaudits and place and look upon the life of this truly great man, so strikingly outlined in this one unselfish, patriotic act!

Great though his achievements as a soldier were, the greatest achievements of General MORGAN were in times of peace, when he lent his matchless mind and energies to working out the great problems that confronted him as a statesman. Rising high above the plane of the politician and measuring every inch a statesman of the purest type, it was but natural that as soon as the reconstruction period in the South was past and the yoke of the Federal soldier and the carpetbagger had been thrown off, making it possible for a true representative of the people to be elected, he should have been chosen to represent Alabama in the United States Senate. His first term in the Senate began in March, 1877, and without interruption he served until his death, on the night of June 11, 1907, four months after he had commenced the service of his sixth term, the result of a unanimous election at the hands of the people of his State.

His services in the Senate were a constant source of pride to his constituents, and the impress which he has left upon American legislation is lasting in character and marked by the profound wisdom and farsightedness of the man. His great ability as a lawyer stood him in good stead in the Senate, and his merciless cross-examination of certain railroad magnates during the investigation of the refunding grabs of the Pacific railroads, soon after his advent into the Senate, placed him among the best lawyers in that body. An incident is told in connection with that investigation which indicates most strongly his high character. Not long after the investigation had closed, the particular railroad magnate who had received the most thorough drubbing at the hands of Senator MORGAN called at the Senator's house. He was most cordially received, as were all visitors to that most hospitable home. During his call the railroad man referred to the impression that had been made upon him of the great legal abilities of the Senator, and told him that he had called to engage his services as counsel for his road, saying that they wanted him, and that he might himself fix his salary, no matter if it went as high as $50,000 a year. The reply of Senator MORGAN was, that so long as he served his country in the Senate he would serve no corporations; that he had severed his connections with the railroads for which he was counsel at the time of his election, and that he would consider it a favor if the railroad magnate would leave his house. He often said that that offer was the greatest insult ever offered to him during his whole service in the Senate.

Though an intense party man, he always considered his duty to his country paramount to his party allegiance, and whenever his judgment led him contrary to the measures of his party leaders, he did not hesitate to act upon his judgment. Such was the case in the annexation of Hawaii. On that question he stood steadfastly against the policy of President Cleveland, and it is due more to his farsightedness and determined stand than to anything else that the revolutionists in Hawaii were not turned over to a cruel monarchy to be mercilessly butchered, while America stood aloof, little dreaming of the need she was soon to have for those islands as a halfway station in the Pacific during the Spanish war. His work in shaping the course of the United States in this instance and in promulgating a system of laws for the Hawaiian Islands goes far toward proving him one of the greatest statesmen of his time. His services in the Bering Sea arbitration and his numberless other achievements are still bright in the memory of the generation and will take their rightful places in history. More than any other man may he be called the "father of the Isthmian Canal," for, while the route that he favored was not ultimately adopted, it is due more to his ceaseless labor in educating Congress and the people upon the necessity for an interoceanic canal than to any other agency that the project of connecting the two oceans was finally undertaken by this country. How much, Mr. Speaker, might be said of the great work of this wonderful man! But I will mention but one more of his services to his State, and that is his part in defeating the infamous "force bill." His speech upon that subject is one of the most remarkable efforts of his splendid career, and I say, and believe that I speak for every white man in Alabama and the South, that had he never accomplished anything in all his career save the defeat of that bill, he had by that deserved and gained the everlasting love and gratitude of a people who felt that the very life of their institutions was dependant upon his success in that fight.

SENATOR EDMUND W. PETTUS.

Senator PETTUS was of the kind of American fashioned in the school of adventure and trained and developed by the life of a soldier and pioneer. Born in 1821, he grew up with the country, and himself helped to make its history. Like his colleague, he was trained to be a lawyer, and in very young manhood was elected solicitor of the seventh judicial circuit of Alabama. Soon after he entered upon the duties of that office our nation became entangled in disputes with Mexico, and war was declared. True to every patriotic impulse, this sterling young lawyer at once volunteered his services to his country, and went to Mexico as a lieutenant in the United States Army, serving gallantly and efficiently until the end of the war.

In 1849 his adventurous spirit led him to the gold fields of California, but the thirst for wealth and gold, for gold itself, having no place in his nature, he returned to his native State, where, in 1855, he was elected judge of the seventh judicial district. In 1858 he resigned the judgeship and moved to Dallas County, where he entered upon the practice of the law and where he lived for the remainder of his life. Settling in the town of Cahaba, then the flourishing county seat of the rich county of Dallas, he built up a lucrative practice, but when the rupture between the North and the South could no longer be averted and hostilities were about to commence, he again left the peaceful pursuit of his practice and took up the sword to do his duty as he saw it. Starting at the rank of major, in two years he had risen to the command of a brigade, which he led during the remaining days of the war. In the discharge of this, as in the discharge of every other duty imposed upon him, he was conscientious, untiring, and brave, and was always looked to in times of great stress to lead his followers to victory. The military records of the Confederate government tell in no uncertain terms of his bravery and devotion to duty, and to such men as he and his illustrious colleague the people of the South owe their victories in that bloodiest of wars.

The war being over, General PETTUS returned to Dallas County, and this time located at Selma, to which place the county seat had been moved. Invaluable though his military services had been, no one can say that any less valuable were his services to his people during the days that followed the closing of the war; days that tried the soul of every true Southern man, for the great problem of dealing with a race of slaves, made citizens overnight, and drunk with their supposed power and the vain hopes placed in their hearts by unprincipled adventurers, had to be dealt with with a firm purpose and by men equipped with courage and capacity for the fight. And so, again, did he endear himself to his people. I say his people, for he was always one of them, never placing himself above them or seeking his own ends, but always by them placed in the lead where danger threatened or great problems were to be solved. Is it strange, Mr. Speaker, that we should love such a man as that? Is it strange that when he would, in later years, return to Selma after an arduous session of the Senate, his friends, young and old, would gather around him and bid him warm welcome back to his home and Godspeed in his good work?

After the war, though always at his State's command and always in her councils, never did he accept a public office until, when he was 76 years old, he was sent to represent Alabama in the United States Senate. He was sent by a loving people who longed to honor him. How well do I remember the day when the news reached Selma that the legislature at Montgomery had elected him to the Senate. The news flashed like wildfire over the town. The people were so happy that one would have thought that every man in the town had been elected instead of only one. General PETTUS was in Montgomery, but would be home that morning, and the people began to make ready to receive him. All business was suspended and a general holiday declared. As his train drew into the city every steam whistle was turned loose, the cannon boomed, and the people cheered until it was like bedlam. The General, not expecting such an outburst, did not know what to make of it, and his friends who were on the train with him say that he refused to believe that it was all done because of his election. When he descended from the train and took a carriage to drive to his home the din and noise of the happy throng was deafening; and then, spontaneously and on the spur of the moment, the young men, as if all inspired by one thought, unhitched the horses from his carriage and themselves pulled him through the streets of Selma to his beautiful old-fashioned Southern home. He sat like one benumbed, scarce believing that all this enthusiasm and love was for him; and when, at his home, he tried to thank his fellow-citizens, his tender heart gave way and the tears of gratitude and joy streamed down his rugged face.

Of his services in the Senate none know better than the Members of this House, save his colleagues in the Senate. Always honorable, always just, always looking for the right and following it regardless of consequences, there has never been a man in that body who had in a greater degree the respect and confidence of his colleagues and the country at large.

Mr. Speaker, Alabama is proud of these two sons, both of whom spent their lives in the service of the State, preferring the reward that comes with duty well performed to the riches that either might have gained in private life. Alabama loved and trusted them with never a shadow of a doubt. She weeps for them because she has lost them; but with a loving heart she realizes that the rest into which they have entered is well deserved and sweet, and that their loved ones on the other shore had waited long for their coming.

"Peace to their ashes!" And may the blessings of a kind and loving Providence be showered upon them through all eternity.

[Mr. BURTON of Ohio addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, Alabama came into the Union in 1819. From the day of her admission she has generally been represented ably, sometimes grandly, in the two Houses of Congress.

From the beginning Alabama believed, as does Missouri, that it is sheer folly to change her Senators and Representatives frequently. Consequently both these States retain their Senators and Representatives for long periods, thereby giving them an influence in legislation larger than their mere numbers would warrant; for let it never be forgotten that a man must learn to be a Representative or Senator just as he must learn to be a preacher, physician, lawyer, mechanic, merchant, or farmer. The more brains, learning, and industry he has and the better his habits, the sooner he becomes proficient in the difficult art of legislating for the people and of a mighty Republic. I feel free to speak on this subject because Missouri believes in length of service of worthy men, and so do I. More than any other portion of the Republic New England and Pennsylvania seem to understand the value of long service here. Five Philadelphians—Kelley, O'Neill, Randall, Harmer, and Bingham—have served a total of one hundred and forty-nine years. General Harmer was father of the House. General Bingham succeeded to the title, and long may he retain it; but it may surprise you to learn that should he quit the House, still another Pennsylvanian, Hon. JOHN DALZELL, would become the father of the House.

Missouri was the first State to give a Senator thirty consecutive years of service. She conferred that great honor upon one of the greatest of all American Senators and statesmen, Col. Thomas Hart Benton. He served "six full Roman lustrums," as he said in his pompous way. To this day she is the only State that ever gave thirty years of consecutive Senatorial service to two different men, the other being Gen. Francis Marion Cockrell. Benton's record was never equaled till March 4, 1897, when Hon. Justin Smith Morrill, of Vermont, began his thirty-first year of continuous Senatorial service. To this hour it has never been equaled except by Morrill, of Vermont, JOHN TYLER MORGAN, of Alabama, and WILLIAM BOYD ALLISON, of Iowa. John Sherman, of Ohio, served thirty-two years in the Senate in two sections of sixteen years each, being Secretary of the Treasury for four years between his two Senatorial services. William M. Stewart, of Nevada, had thirty years of Senatorial service in one section of twelve years and another of eighteen.

Of the earlier Senators, William Rufus King, of Alabama, one of her two first Senators, came nearest Benton's record, serving in the Senate twenty-nine years five months and seven days. If to that be added his forty-four days as Vice-President, in which high position he died, his total service in the Senate was twenty-nine years six months and nineteen days. His Senatorial service, however, was broken into two parts by service as minister to France. He was one of the very few men in our history to serve in Congress from two States. Besides his long service in the Senate from Alabama, he represented a North Carolina district for three terms in the House. He is also one of the very few men who resigned from the Senate twice. It may be remarked in passing that the resignation habit is not growing among Senators or among Representatives.

As Alabama began, so she continues. In our entire history only four men have been elected to the Senate for six full terms, Morrill, Sherman, ALLISON, and MORGAN.

General MORGAN died in the fourth month of his thirty-first year of Senatorial service and of his sixth full term. He was a remarkable man. It is not too much to say that he knew more than any other public man of his day. Knowing that all his manhood's days except his four years in the army and except his three decades in the Senate had been spent as a busy lawyer, I always wondered how he found time to acquire such an amazing store of information, for "amazing" is the one word which, to my mind, most fittingly describes his acquirements in that regard. Lord Bacon, in a famous letter to his jealous uncle, Lord Burleigh, said: "I have taken all knowledge to be my province," which seems to have been the case with General MORGAN. Sidney Smith, of witty and, therefore, of blessed memory, declared that omniscience was a foible of his friend Jeffreys, and I do confess that sometimes it appeared to me that Sidney's mot was more applicable to MORGAN than to the editor of the Edinburgh Review. In the scope and thoroughness of his information General MORGAN classed with Thomas Jefferson, John Quincy Adams, Thomas Hart Benton, and James A. Garfield. Considered solely from the standpoint of quantity and variety of information, these men may be fairly termed the "big five" of our politics. Of the five MORGAN was the best speaker.

There is a song to the effect that "Old Virginia never tires." Neither did MORGAN in speech making. He realized his prolixity himself and joked about it. Some one asked him how long he could speak on a given subject, and he replied, jocosely, "If I had studied the subject thoroughly and had my authorities arranged, I could speak three days, but without preparation I could speak indefinitely." Edmund Burke was dubbed "the dinner bell" because, so soon as he began, a great many, unfortunately for their own good, hurried out to dine and left him to harangue empty benches; but his speeches have become the text-books of eloquence. So it will be with General MORGAN. His speeches will be indispensable in any study of the times in which he lived and of the questions with which he wrestled.

Justly he must be considered the father of the Isthmian Canal, though I have no sort of doubt, judging the future by the past, that the New England scribes will filch from him that glory and confer it upon somebody from the northeast corner of the Republic.

So far as I know Senator MORGAN is the only man living or dead that ever resigned a brigadier's commission to accept that of a colonel. Usually soldiers are as jealous of each other about rank as a lot of opera singers or the members of the diplomatic corps, and MORGAN'S act must be forever rated as one of unparalleled generosity and self-abnegation, growing out of his absorbing love for the men of his old regiment.

Gen. EDMUND WINSTON PETTUS was the worthy Senatorial yoke-fellow with Gen. JOHN TYLER MORGAN. They constituted a great team. From the very beginning of Caucasian domination on this continent the names Winston and Pettus have figured conspicuously and always honorably in our affairs in both peace and war. Towns and counties have been called for them, constituting their perpetual monuments. General PETTUS was a superb representative of both these historic families.

By reason of proximity of residences here when he first came to the Senate, I was better acquainted with General PETTUS than with General MORGAN. Another thing which brought us more in contact is the fact that our wives, both being Presbyterians, attended Doctor Pitzer's church, the only Democratic Presbyterian Church in Washington. The General and I may be not improperly denominated as sons-in-law to that church. We attended with our wives, he habitually, I occasionally. He and his good wife always took a front seat and it was a beautiful sight to see that venerable couple in the house of God. If I had time, I would be delighted to make a speech about Doctor Pitzer and his church, their struggles and their triumphs, their small and difficult beginnings, and their present high standing and commanding position. Doctor Pitzer came to rank as a sort of bishop. To illustrate the esteem in which he was held, once a little girl who was a member of his church was asked what St. Paul said on a certain subject. She replied: "I don't know what St. Paul said; what I want to know is what does Doctor Pitzer say."

General PETTUS was one of the most lovable men I ever knew. He was the soul of courtesy, not of the bogus sort which consists in bowing and scraping and genuflections, but in that genuine courtesy which means kindness of heart. He was a princely man, of princely stature and of princely manners, plain, unostentatious, gracious, and courtly. He was 75 years old when first elected to the Senate—a most unusual thing. He brought to Washington the reputation of being a great lawyer, and he maintained that reputation to the end. While he held a high place among the Conscript Fathers, he was too old to form the Senatorial habit; for there is a Senatorial habit and a House habit, the two being quite distinct. That is the reason why it occasionally happens to the general surprise that some man who is a great figure in the House fails to sustain his reputation in the Senate. While General PETTUS made a fine reputation in the Senate, it would naturally and inevitably been greater had he entered younger and served longer.

In the days of the gold fever General PETTUS rode horseback across the plains to California in search of the golden fleece. He took in his saddlebags the Bible and Shakespeare and upon them formed his style of strong, terse, luminous speech. No man of his day spoke purer English than General PETTUS.

He came of fighting stock on both sides of the house and was a soldier in two wars—the Mexican and civil. In the former he was a lieutenant; in the latter, major, colonel, and brigadier. The annals of the great war give no instance of fiercer fighting than he did at Vicksburg. If he had performed that feat under Napoleon, he would have been made a marshal of France. The heroic Texans whom he led that day elected him an honorary Texan, a high honor which he greatly prized to his dying day.

Happily, he was endowed with rare powers of sarcasm and a saving sense of humor. When he made his celebrated speech in reply to Senator BEVERIDGE, an exceptionally exquisite piece of sarcasm, wit, and humor, it happened that I was lecturing at Michigan University. His speech was headlined and greatly exploited in the newspapers. It set the country in a roar from sea to sea. The first time I was in the Senate Chamber after returning to Washington I congratulated the General on the fame he had achieved. Solemn as a graven image, he replied: "My speech on that occasion was one of the indiscretions of youth."

What happened to Generals MORGAN and PETTUS in 1906 will, in all human probability, never be duplicated in this world. General MORGAN, then past 82, was, in a primary election, unanimously nominated for a Senatorial term ending when he would be 89 years of age, and General PETTUS, at 86, was unanimously nominated for a term which would end when he would be 95. The intention of Alabama was to keep these two illustrious men in the Senate so long as they lived, which she did. Taking into consideration, however, the fact that both were well past the Psalmist's extreme limit of forescore years, and the further fact that the Alabama legislature is elected for four years, the people did the unheard-of thing of nominating alternate Senators, who now occupy the seats of MORGAN and PETTUS.

Without exaggeration or bad taste, it may be confidently declared that MORGAN and PETTUS were ideal American citizens and ideal American statesmen; pure, brave, capable, patriotic.

Both were lawyers, both volunteer soldiers, both Senators of the United States, faithful to every duty and in every relation of life. In their careers they illustrated American virtues, adorned American history, and vindicated American institutions.

At last each could have declared truthfully and triumphantly with St. Paul:

I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] will please take the chair.

Mr. CLAYTON took the chair.

Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, already in the other House Senators from the North and East and from the great Middle West and the Pacific coast and from the South have spoken most fittingly and elaborately of the two Alabama immortals who died in harness in that body. Yet it is none the less becoming in us of the House to add affectionate testimony to our own estimation of the distinguished dead.

Born in Alabama in the second year of her statehood, EDMUND WINSTON PETTUS grew up with his State and lived his whole life of more than eighty-six years a beloved son and honored citizen. At different periods of his life he lived in six different counties. The last half century and more of his splendid manhood was passed in Dallas County, middle Alabama, the heart of the Black Belt, among a people noted for intelligence, patriotism, and hospitality, where he knew everybody and everybody knew and loved him. For this and other reasons he may well be called the typical Alabamian, of whom the State was proud all of her days and all of his long life. He was familiar with every year of her history, and contributed substantially to make that history. The part he played was not only important, but always prominent; yet the prominence was never of his own seeking. He did not push himself, nor claim leadership, nor was he ever forward. His modesty was great and sincere. When occasion for public service arose he was always present, but did not volunteer to lead. He waited till his people called, and responded always promptly. He never had to wait long, for his people were quick to call on him to take his proper place. His unwavering confidence in the judgment of his people made him accept whatever position they saw fit to assign. His worth was so well recognized and his wisdom so universally acknowledged that at no time in the years of his manhood, when present and a public question was to be considered or acted upon, did his people in any part of his State fail to select him for a leading part. His efficiency was not impaired by lack of self-appreciation; he was too brave and manly for that. Besides, he believed implicitly in the judgment of his people, and when they said "Lead," he obeyed, because it was their judgment that he was the proper man to lead. He loved to perform public duties, for he regarded the duties of citizenship as the highest duties of man, and he performed them well, because he loved to serve and obey his people.

Senator PETTUS was descended from many generations of splendid ancestors, paternal and maternal—Virginians and soldiers of the Revolution. He was of kin to the Winstons, Taylors, Strothers, Gaines, and many others of the early families of the Old Dominion. And while he was himself a born democrat, at heart and in truth, and looked down upon no worthy man, he was proud of this fact, and did not hesitate to announce his opinion on it, as will appear from his remarks on Senator HOAR, quoted on last Saturday by Senator GALLINGER.

He married a Miss Chapman, also of high lineage, his equal in every respect, and a lady who lived a lovely and a useful life, and almost as long as her devoted husband. She died in 1906, scarcely more than a year ahead of him.

He lost his father in very early life, and was reared by a splendid mother. Notwithstanding, he had some advantages of education, and besides the old-field school, spent a term or more at Clinton College, Tennessee.

He read law, as was the custom in those days, in the office of a lawyer in north Alabama.

It will not surprise anyone who knew the man to hear that he was a soldier in the Mexican war and held the rank of lieutenant. He did not reach high rank immediately in his profession, though he held the office of State solicitor twice, and was again a judge on the circuit court bench, where it is said he presided with dignity and ability.

In 1849, after the war with Mexico, affected by the gold fever, he rode on horseback to California. He was very proud of being a "Forty-niner," and loved to talk about it. He attributed much of his success in after life and at the bar to the study, on his long ride through the Great American Desert and during his search for gold on the Pacific slope, of the two greatest books, in his opinion, ever printed—the Bible and Shakespeare.

His life in California brought him no money, but truly a deep and wide experience, which broadened and strengthened his mind and nature, and tinctured noticeably his whole career. He returned to his home by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and crossed on foot, with his saddlebags on his shoulders, by the trail of the old Spanish freebooters and along the banks of the Chagres River. He caught the dreaded fever of that region—feared as much as the plague—and came home with it. But his splendid constitution and will vanquished the disease.

It was most interesting to listen to the old soldier tell of his home-coming, toilsome and dangerous and rough, and compare it with the present rapid, easy transit of the Panama Railroad.

Senator PETTUS was loyally, distinctly, and profoundly Southern in all of his political views, though broad and patriotic and thoroughly American in feeling. Descended from generations of Presbyterians, he was as intensely Calvanistic as Cromwell, though he never attached himself to the church. He was a man of deep convictions, with a keen sense of honor, and of profound and abiding opinions, and absolutely fearless in the expression of them. He believed in heredity, and he loved and revered his ancestors and the ancestors of his people and the Constitution which they made, together with the landmarks placed by the early judges along the line of its interpretation. He also believed in democracy and the old-fashioned Democratic party without shadow of turning. Time and again I have heard him say in public speech: "I inherited my democracy and believe in the doctrines of the fathers."

So, when the time came for war in 1861, this first-born Alabamian volunteered among the first. He volunteered as a private, but was soon selected and elected as major of his regiment.

As a man and lawyer, as a citizen, and as prosecuting attorney and judge, he was noted for integrity of character and truth. As a soldier, he was noted from the first battle, as a soldier should be, for courage. Step by step, by courage unflinching, cool, and untinged with rashness, he won his way to brigadier-general. In this rank his splendid coolness and remarkable care for his men in battle made him always a leader in the van of an advancing army and the rear guard on the retreat. As a soldier he combined happily the qualities of Murat and of Ney, but was most of all like Ney, reliable, stable, unflinching, a rock of Gibraltar against attack. It was his nature to be first in a charge and last in retreat.

His modesty followed the soldier as well as the citizen. During the siege of Vicksburg he was selected to organize and lead a desperate and almost a forlorn hope, the retaking of a most important redoubt.

I asked the old general—for so I loved to call him—one day when we were strolling near the Capitol, to tell me about the time when he volunteered to lead the charge through the crater at Vicksburg. He replied with some warmth:

I never volunteered. I was ordered. If you ever hear it said I volunteered I want you to deny it.

He then gave me a most graphic description of one of the most thrilling adventures I ever listened to. I begged him then and afterwards to repeat it to a stenographer and let me have it in his own words for publication. He declined then and afterwards with his usual firmness and courtesy.

He told me in the course of his remarks that he did not volunteer for this dangerous enterprise, but undertook it in the line of duty and obeyed orders. But said he, with much emphasis:

There were some brave men there who did volunteer, a whole battalion of them—Waul's Texas Battalion. They volunteered to a man. I had never met them before, nor they me. I took forty of them with me, and no man, before nor since, ever had such a command of brave men, one and all.

The way to the redoubt was through a narrow passageway and the guns of the enemy could rake it fore and aft. By some kind Providence he and his Texans passed through without a scratch, and in a hand-to-hand fight with hand grenades and bombshells, with fuses trimmed to a quarter of a second and thrown by hand over the walls in the midst of the enemy, they won the redoubt without the loss of a man. The old general added, with tears of fond recollection in his eyes:

When we all got back and I turned my forty men over to their comrades, they then and there unanimously elected me a Texan, and I was prouder of that compliment than of any honor I received during the war.

When the war was over General PETTUS returned to his profession and immediately became a leader at the bar, noted as a profound thinker and a great lawyer. Soon the reconstruction period came on and then it was that PETTUS showed energies and abilities and courage in peace no less pronounced than those he had shown in war. He believed absolutely in the inherent superiority of the white race. He looked upon the reconstruction acts as unconstitutional, indefensible, and void. He regarded the position of the South as purely and essentially one of self-preservation, and justified any and all her acts on the plea of imperious and impending necessity, not only to the South but to the race—the question to him was more than sectional, it was racial. In the defense of his race, especially the women of his race, his life and the lives of all were a willing sacrifice. He regarded the supremacy of his people as the life of his people. So it was that he volunteered to defend and did defend in all the courts in all parts of the State any and all persons who were persecuted by political prosecutions in the attempt to reconstruct the South to the degradation of her people.

Under his stern leadership and the unflinching and unwavering attitude of his people, the policy of reconstruction failed. And owing to the character he and his kind made before the nation in that desperate struggle, and the splendid patriotism which yearly developed throughout the South, the spirit which animated that harsh and cruel legislation has died out completely throughout the nation. The reign of the carpetbagger is at an end, and the stranger no longer sits in the judgment seat. The fate of the South is no longer in issue. It is as safe as the East or the North, or the West. Her people are in charge of her government, of her civilization, and of her development. In the past ten years the record of the South shows in contrast with the days of reconstruction "a peace which passeth all understanding," and a prosperity and material development which challenges the world. The old general lived to see his hopes realized and his course vindicated and it filled his big heart with pride and happiness.

Senator PETTUS never held but one political office, his seat in the United States Senate. No man who ever accepted a seat in that great body honored the position more highly than did Senator PETTUS. He had a lofty and ideal notion of the dignity which belonged to this great office. His reverence for the Senate was universally recognized by his brother Senators, especially when, on rare occasions, the Senators were out of order and the presiding officer would call Mr. PETTUS to the chair. At once a dignified and respectful order would take place and continue as long as Mr. PETTUS presided. He did not violate the decorum of the Senate himself nor would he approve or tolerate it in others.

When Senator PETTUS entered the Senate there arose a sincere and vigorous admiration and liking between him and Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts. Both Puritans, both men of high ideals and inflexible will and independent thought, both as different in opinion as has been almost always the East from the South, both honest, and both eminently patriotic, they first wondered at each other, then admired, then grew toward each other, attracted by mutual respect for manliness and love of truth and integrity, observed and frankly recognized as common.

It was to me something wonderful and most gratifying. It showed how easily all true Americans can come together.

These two men, one from the East and one from the South, had lived and worked apart for more than half a century on opposite sides of the greatest, gravest, profoundest questions that ever occupied the attention of mankind. In the last years of their lives they were thrown together in the Senate of the United States. Without apology for the past and with no perceptible change in the views of either on great national questions, it was but a short time when all the world could see that Senator PETTUS trusted Senator Hoar and that Senator Hoar trusted him, and the trust was implicit.

When Senator Hoar died Senator PETTUS, among other touching things, said:

The great Senator from Massachusetts to whose memory we have met to pay tribute, was better known to those who have spoken than to myself. They knew him longer, and they knew him and associated with him and learned to honor him as a scholar and as a lawyer. I have only known him here in the Senate as an earnest, eminent statesman; and have learned, in some degree, to appreciate his devotion to the great work he was selected to perform.

There spoke the natural Presbyterian, giving "tribute to whom tribute, and honor to whom honor is due."

Senator PETTUS was a man of few words, but he spoke strongly and clearly, so that none could misunderstand. He had a vein of humor that was remarkable, inimitable, and at times, irresistible. He indulged it once in the Senate and put that venerable body into a very uproar of mirth in a few terse and exceedingly characteristic sentences on the subject of oratory and orators.

It was a speech well worthy the occasion and the audience. It is a gem, and of its kind most rare. It should be preserved in literature and in the history of Alabama in Congress, and of the Senate.

Senator PETTUS's love for the Constitution and reverence for the fathers, inherited as he always declared with his blood, was rarely shown in a few pithy sentences when the question of amending the Constitution, so as to elect Senators by direct vote of the people was under discussion. He said:

The amendment of the Constitution of the United States to some Senators seems to be of little more consequence than the amendment of a law by which a bridge was built over some creek in the United States. * * * Mr. President, we seem to have lost all respect for the works of our fathers. We seem to have lost all respect for the Constitution of the United States. It is nothing more than a trifling law, as one Senator said, which has served its purpose. Now, I tell Senators I am opposed to all of your amendments of every sort and I intend to cling to the fragments as long as one is left. Do as you please for yourselves.

In true sublimity and simplicity of expression nothing equals these sentences except those splendid words of Joshua:

As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.

In one of his exalted sentences the great interpreter of human nature has said:

The evil that men do lives after them.

If this be true, and I fear it is, the bones of this great Alabamian may repose in quiet and his great spirit may rest in peace; for in all his long life he did no evil to man or woman, and much good. He lived a generous life. He was as noble as "any lord of Douglas, highland or lowland, far or near," and as brave and as true and as loyal. In battle his heart was the heart of oak and his hand the hand of steel; at home his heart was as kind as a woman's and his hand as gentle. He loved his country wholly, and he served his people wisely and well. Only dear memories remain of his splendid manhood, great in integrity and in loyalty, lofty in patriotism, and peerless in courage. And as he lived so did he die, welded in the hearts of his family, his friends, and his people, never to be forgotten in time or in eternity. He loved his people with his whole heart; and his people loved him the best of all.

Mr. Speaker, Senator MORGAN was a man of infinite natural resources and ability. He possessed in a marked degree capacity for study and investigation, combined with a perfect memory. He loved details and delighted in individual research and original thought. He relied upon himself and looked to his own powers, and from the meshes of his own brain came his best thought and speech. In the elucidation of subtle questions of law or science he asked no aid outside of his own mind. He thought for himself. All he desired were facts, and all the facts of which the subject was capable. So thoroughly self-reliant was he that he was wont to say he wished all the Supreme Court reports could be destroyed. He was a great lawyer and a finished speaker. His command of language, his purity and neatness of expression, free always from taint of pedantry, made for him a style grand, winning, full of sympathy, and most persuasive.

His power of analysis and of statement was superb, not exceeded by that of Judah P. Benjamin, the most noted man at the bar of the South in its palmiest days, for clean English and clear-cut logical statement of a case.

It was said of Senator MORGAN at the bar before he entered the Senate, by one of the ablest and most distinguished of his competitors, that he was a man with the "most privileged tongue" in the world. His English was so pure, so full, so classical, many wondered and asked what college was sponsor for such mastery of a language. Yet he had no college life, not even a high school acquaintance, and was to all intents and purposes and in its highest sense a self-made man.

A mutual friend and a fond admirer of the Senator writes me: "I once asked him if there was any truth in the report that President Porter, of Yale, after hearing him in the Senate, sought an introduction in order to learn in what college he had acquired his marvelous English. He said no such incident had ever occurred, but that Lord Hannen, with whom he was associated on the Bering Sea tribunal and with whom he became quite intimate, was astounded to learn he had no 'university.'"

Before entering the Senate he had a large and lucrative practice in his profession; had spent four years in military service in the war between the States, where he was twice made general, having once resigned; had been elector for President and Vice-President in 1860, and was a member of the secession convention, where he made much reputation as a speaker.

From 1865 to 1876 Senator MORGAN diligently practiced his profession and stood easily among the great lawyers of the South. In the campaign of 1876 he made a tour of his State, and the reputation he then made landed him almost without competition in the United States Senate. He stepped from private life into that great body and remained there, practically without a contest, till he died in June, 1907.

He and his great colleague, Senator PETTUS, both from the city of Selma, in middle Alabama, were elected by their party and their people to the Senate for life in the last election held for that office before they died. It was a splendid tribute to these splendid men, one which has no counterpart in American history.

On entering the Senate JOHN T. MORGAN at once took first rank. Indefatigable, patient, studious, courageous, combative, and able, he never undertook to address the Senate without careful study and patient deliberation.

It is true he could speak impromptu most fluently, and he did so frequently, for he read much and was full of varied information.

The first real test of his abilities was in the matter of Indian affairs. For preparation he went in person to the Territories and made his own investigations, which were afterwards embodied in a report covering 600 pages. The Dawes Commission and the change in the treatment of the Five Civilized Tribes followed this report and were doubtless influenced by it. Indeed, the Senator became known at once as the friend of the red man and of the people of the Territories, and it is not too much to say that the statehood so bitterly fought and won for Oklahoma and Indian Territory were hastened by, if they did not result from, the early work and speeches of Senator MORGAN.

JOHN T. MORGAN was a man of national views. He looked ahead like a statesman, and read industriously and exhaustively till he mastered our foreign relations. His great learning and ability on international history and law persuaded President Harrison to select him, though a Democrat, as a member of the Bering Sea Arbitration Commission. His great worth in the settlement of this grave question is readily and universally recognized.

Despite the fact that Senator MORGAN'S ruling thought was of the South, for the South, and for the white race in the South, he took wide and broad views of our national development and international obligations and relations. He was an earnest advocate, and an able one, of Hawaiian annexation. He predicted expansion and suggested it before the McKinley Administration adopted it as a policy. He had opinions of his own, and he cared not a rap who approved or disapproved, and he fought for his views, not always successfully, but always wisely, ably, and well. He approved the retention of the Philippines, and he coveted Cuba and Porto Rico always, and bent all the energies of his immortal spirit toward the cutting of an isthmian canal—all great national issues, and all in the line of expansion, and all, in his judgment, working ultimately to the glory of the South and the rehabilitation of the white people of that section as factors in American civilization.

While he spent much time over the Nicaraguan route and bitterly opposed all other routes, the real historian of the future will be compelled to give to him the credit of an isthmian canal within the first years of the twentieth century. He it was who more than twenty years ago commenced a series of speeches for a canal, and his attack on the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and on the scandals connected with canal work at Panama really educated the United States up to the greatest enterprise ever undertaken by any people.

His central thought was an American canal, and that thought is what finally won the victory. The mere place where cut is an incident; a canal across the Isthmus is what constitutes the enterprise.

It is unusual to find in the same man wealth of words, even a superabundance, and at the same time clearness, logic, and, above all, bulldog tenacity. It is this bulldog tenacity which accounts for MORGAN'S great influence in shaping the destiny of this great nation. Though his suggestions were made as a Democrat and he was not acknowledged as a factor, they have been and are being worked out by an adverse political party and an adverse Administration, with whom he was never on terms of amity, far less of cooperation.

In the struggles of Cuba and in our contest with Spain how the great Alabamian worked, in season and out, for the striking off of Spanish influence in America. He was laughed at, but not ridiculed; for ridicule fell as harmless on this peerless man as would a paper bullet on the side of a modern battle ship. He was hated, perhaps, and abused, but he pursued the even tenor of his way, and lived to see his views of Cuba and Hawaii adopted and carried out by a Republican President and Administration against the earnest, active, and bitter opposition of the great Senator from Massachusetts and that other different, but equally remarkable man, the Senator from Maine, who labored ably and devotedly all their lives in the front rank of their party in all of its battles since the great civil war.

No man in the world ever exerted such commanding weight in shaping the policy of his country with so little of personal influence in the national councils, and who was all the time a member of a different political party from that which was in power. It is a glorious position which history will render to this truly great statesman, due to his wonderful fund of information and indefatigable industry and study of all the details and factors which were weaving and interwoven for centuries in the march of the world's progress to a wider and a broader civilization.

It is a mistake sometimes made in estimating this great man to call him a dreamer and a visionary. I shall take time to cite a single instance which ought to convince the most skeptical how untenable the charge is. He made up his mind to investigate and master the intricate complications of the transcontinental railroad transactions, especially those of the Central and Union Pacific companies. In this great battle of brains he had to cross swords with the Colossus of railroads, Mr. Collis P. Huntington, a man of towering intellect and tremendous influence and power. It was a battle of giants. When these two men met each other each knew it was a fight to the death. The object in hand was to settle the debt which these railroad corporations owed to the United States. Those were other days than ours, days when the railroad magnate was a king, with all the power and influence of a king. A proposition had been made, and was almost accepted, on the basis of $13,000,000. Senator MORGAN declared this was not fair to the Government, and was so insistent in his demand for an investigation by the Senate that such an investigation was held. The final outcome was a payment by the railroads of $65,000,000, a net gain to the Government of $52,000,000 in one great settlement—a fairly good, round, and substantial sum to be credited to a dreamer and a visionary. He was thirty years in the United States Senate. In that time, by this one transaction, there was saved to the Government the splendid sum of $1,700,000 and over for every year of his long service.

It is known that Mr. Huntington offered this stainless man a salary of $50,000 a year as attorney for his railroads, and he refused it. His friends, his people, and his State are proud of the fact.

MORGAN and PETTUS and men of their kind and mold in every State of the South are the men who resisted and finally broke down and destroyed the reconstruction policy which followed the civil war.

JOHN T. MORGAN is easily the most brilliant public man, the greatest statesman, the most finished orator, the most profound constitutional lawyer, the most perfect English speaker who has appeared upon the stage of life in Alabama since 1865.

No argument is needed to establish MORGAN'S position in the firmament of fame. No eulogy of tongue or pen, however splendid, can add one cubit to his stature. His record as statesman, lawyer, orator, and citizen was made by himself and his immortal works. He made it well and thoroughly, till he stands in bold relief in the history of Alabama as a part of the State itself. His position is as fixed and immovable as the north star. He stands in a class by himself, matchless, peerless, and alone.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, so far as I have been able to find, no such occasion as this has ever occurred before in the history of the American Congress. Never before have eulogies on two Senators from the same State been pronounced at the same time.

When God called Alabama's venerable Senators to their last reward the State and the nation lost two of their ablest statesmen and grandest men.

Connected with the lives and in the death of these men there were some peculiar facts. They had for many years been eminent lawyers, living in the same town; both became brigadier-generals in the Confederate army; both were United States Senators from the same State; were only about three years apart in age; both had lived practically all their lives in Alabama, and died within less than three months of each other.

It is seldom, if ever, that any State within so brief a time has been called to mourn two such distinguished sons.

Senator PETTUS was born in Alabama when the State was but two years old, and to his dying day his life was unselfishly and loyally devoted to her interests and her welfare.

Senator MORGAN came with his family from Tennessee to Alabama when but a small boy, and for seventy-five years he lived as an honor to the State and a benediction to her people.

Senator PETTUS was the sturdy old Andrew Jackson type of man. He was a good big boy when Jackson died, and I have heard him speak of seeing the hero of New Orleans at one time when a body of East Tennesseans offered him some indignity, and with truly Jacksonian emphasis the old warrior hurled it back at them.

Alabama has much of history to be proud of, and nearly all of that history was made under the eyes of these two patriotic sons, who were last year called to their fathers.

They were both there when the war cry of the red man still reverberated through her primeval forests. They were there when the Creeks and the Cherokees were torn from her borders and the echo of their war cry died away with their retreating footsteps.

They were young men helping to make her history when Alabama, with her sisters, first began to hear the ominous sounds that portended the terrific conflict that later swept like a besom over the bosom of our Southland.

They were strong, brave men when the war cloud grew black about her in the troublous days of '60; and they were with her when "the storm-cradled nation" was born.

Before that Senator PETTUS had heard the cry of gold in California, and like many a young Southerner, had gone in quest of adventure and of the yellow metal in that far-off State. On his return to Alabama he was chosen to the bench of our State, and I have often heard the old lawyers who practiced before him say that no fairer or more just judge ever graced the ermine than he.

When the call to battle was sounded both of these splendid lawyers closed their offices and buckled on their swords, and in war, as in peace, they added luster to the name and fame of Alabama. They believed their cause was just, and in its defense they were willing to offer up their lives. With the starving Confederates at Vicksburg, General PETTUS, then a lieutenant-colonel, lead a charge which merited and gained for him the special approval of a major-general of the Confederacy, and at Lookout Mountain the charge of the PETTUS brigade was one of the brilliant events of the war.

Mr. Speaker, those were days that tried men's souls. I was but a boy, but I remember them well. I remember when the first drum beat called to arms. I remember when the first company of Confederate soldiers left the county in which I lived. I remember how, with light step and buoyant heart, the soldier boy imprinted the farewell kiss on a mother's lips, and, dressed in the gray jeans suit woven by that mother's hand, he proudly took his place beneath the stars and bars. Mr. Speaker, the noble Alabamians whose death we now mourn were in the front ranks of those who then obeyed their country's call. I remember when, as the days went and came, the news of death and disease was borne to the ears of Southern mothers and wives, and on many a field of carnage the crimson lifeblood of brave Alabamians bedewed the sod. Senators MORGAN and PETTUS were no laggards then, but in the vanguard their unsheathed swords gleamed and glittered beneath the Southern cross, and their voices were heard above the din of battle, encouraging their brave comrades to do or die.

Mr. Speaker, it was decreed that the stars and bars should go down to rise no more, and when they were furled forever at Appomattox, these two gallant sons of Alabama returned to their homes to again take up the thread of civil life. Did they sull or sulk in these crucial days? No; but as they had been true to Alabama in the dark days of war, they urged obedience to so-called "law" in times of peace. Many an old Confederate soldier returned on wounded limbs to find his fields laid waste, his property destroyed, and his wan and haggard wife and hungry children destitute of bread.

These days of so-called "peace" called more loudly for "Men, tall, sun-crowned men," than had the days of awful war.

With their people again stood these trusted leaders of Alabama's sons.

All around was gloom and sorrow. How different the homecoming in the spring of '65 from the days when they went out in the spring of '61.

Happy and joyous in '61, sad and sorrowful in '65; "Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not."

> But the Healer was there, and His arms were around,
> And He led them with tenderest care;
> And He showed them a star in the bright upper world,
> 'Twas their star shining brilliantly there!

Mr. Speaker, the struggle following the declaration of peace, though of a different character, demanded just such leaders as had inspired confidence in Southern hearts on a hundred Southern battlefields.

Again, in the front of the column stood these two great men. Men who but a few months before had urged on the charge with sword in hand, now with the Constitution lifted high above their heads, commanded "Peace, be still."

None but those who passed through it knew what the South suffered then. Chaos reigned and the minions of the law were themselves outlaws of the fiercest sort. MORGAN and PETTUS advised patient forbearance, and but for them, and Clayton, and Oates, and Forney, and Wheeler, and leaders of their kind, red-handed anarchy would have spread torch and sword, and the manslayer would have held high carnival amid the ruins of a desolated land.

But "there were giants in those days," and almost with the hand of inspiration they pointed our helpless people the way to peace and prosperity.

As we emerged from these conditions Senator MORGAN heeded the people's call to be their leader in the halls of the United States Senate. How well he filled that exalted position is shown by the fact that six times they renewed the call. How high he stood in the eyes of the Senate and of the American people is shown by the fact that on two important commissions he was named as one of the representatives of the American Government.

How near he stood to the hearts of his colleagues in the Senate is shown by the splendid tribute paid his memory by many of them on last Saturday. From the eulogy of Senator LODGE, of Massachusetts, with whom Senator MORGAN was long associated both in the Senate and on the Committee on Foreign Relations, I want to make one brief quotation. He says:

One might easily differ with Senator MORGAN as to the ideals which he followed as the years of his long life succeeded one another in their ceaseless march, but one could never fail to respect their possessor or to admire the indifference which he showed to money in an age of extreme money worship, and the ardor with which he pursued objects which had no personal value to him, but which, in his belief, would benefit his country and mankind.

But Senator MORGAN's great name was not bounded by even the nation's lines. In Europe and in Asia his fame had spread. I was in Rome when his death occurred. The very next morning I saw a splendid picture of him in the Paris daily papers, and they contained a long complimentary notice of his prominent position and of his death.

Many years of his Senatorial life were devoted to the advocacy of an Isthmian Canal. For years he battled for the Nicaraguan route, and posterity may yet vindicate the wisdom of his judgment. I once heard Mr. HEPBURN, of Iowa, state on the floor of this House that if an Isthmian Canal was ever completed, the credit for that consummation would be due more to Senator MORGAN, of Alabama, than to any other man. Since the work actually began, I have often heard his people express the wish, and have often expressed it myself, that he might live to see the first ship pass through that important gateway and realize the consummation of his long life's dream.

Senator PETTUS never sought office, and not until the call of his people almost rose to a demand would he consent to emerge from the more pleasant walks of private life. The first office held by him after the civil war was that of United States Senator. When he did put on the toga, none wore it more honorably than he. The Senate was not slow to detect the splendid legal ability and rugged honesty of our grand old hero of two wars.

He was soon assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary, a committee composed of many of the most profound lawyers in that, the greatest parliamentary body in the world. I have often heard it said that when Senator Hoar, who was for a long time chairman of the committee, wanted any deep investigation of some hard constitutional question made, he would always assign it to Senator PETTUS.

Among his colleagues he was honored and respected by all. No man ever questioned his integrity, and if any man doubted his ability he had only to come in contact with his great mind. I will make a brief quotation from the eulogy of Senator GALLINGER last Saturday while the Senate was doing honor to our departed Senators. He said:

If Senator PETTUS had an enemy it certainly was not in Washington. Here he was respected by all and greatly loved by his associates. Learned in the law, skillful in debate, full of humor, and always solicitous for the welfare of others, he gained a place in the confidence and affection of his associates that was sublime. Senators on both sides of the Chamber vied with each other to do him honor, and his death came to us in the nature of a personal bereavement.

Though rugged in appearance, he had as noble a heart as ever throbbed in mortal breast. My family and I lived at the same place that he and his wife did during the first winter of our stay in Washington, and I saw much of the devotion that existed between these two grand old people. For more than sixty years they had trodden life's pathway side by side, and the tender affection which existed between them was beautiful indeed. As life's shadows lengthened and as they neared its sunset together, that affection seemed to grow sweeter and gentler, and after the death of his wife, who preceded him for more than a year, my grand old friend seemed ever to be looking into the great beyond for the loved one gone before. The tie that seemed to bind Senators MORGAN and PETTUS was as strong and as sweet and as gentle as that between David and Jonathan. In life they were fast friends, and God did not long leave the one to mourn for the other.

For them as good and great men their people mourn, and it will be long before grand old Alabama shall see their like again.

As our Southern springtime year by year sends forth the sweet aroma of her flowers the young men of their little Alabama city might well drop a flower on their graves and say: Here lie the ashes of two men whose lives all Alabama boys should emulate and whose memories all Alabamians should ever keep sacred. They are gone, but their deeds do follow them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, since the close of the Fifty-ninth Congress the hand of death has fallen on the venerable and noted Senators from Alabama, JOHN TYLER MORGAN and EDMUND WINSTON PETTUS, each illustrating in his character and life the highest type of American citizenship. Alabama mourns to-day over the fresh-made graves of these grand old men as a mother who refuses to be comforted, and as she never mourned before. Generous, kind, and sincere expressions of respect and sympathy have been tendered through the press and otherwise from all her sister States of the Union. There is an affecting pathos in the unison of the lives of these two great American citizens. For quite sixty years they lived as neighbors and warm personal friends, following the same profession in a beautiful Southern town in the southern portion of Alabama. The messenger of death called them from life within a few days of each other. They sleep their last sleep near each other in the beautiful cemetery in the city of Selma, Ala.

I recall, Mr. Speaker, that the political history of Alabama reveals the fact that for many years sections and localities of the State demanded and received recognition in the election of our United States Senators. This rule was not applied to Senators MORGAN and PETTUS. Such was the love, admiration, and confidence of the people of Alabama in these two men that their residence in the same town was not an objection to either one of them as Senators for the whole State. No words of mine can adequately portray the incidents of life, the traits of character and public service, that secured such a tribute as that. Neither of them ever planned or schemed to secure public honors for himself or to detract from others. Sincerity, honesty, and independence in thought and act were their reliance. Both of them gave their hearts to the South when war came. Each one, by precept and example, gave his splendid talents to heal the wounds that war had left and to restore unity and friendship between the North and the South.

I shall speak to-day mostly about Senator MORGAN. I can not present him and his life justly and truly as did Senator PETTUS in remarks made by him near the close of the Fifty-ninth Congress on the floor of the Senate while his colleague, Senator MORGAN, was not in his seat. It is to-day the voice from the grave—the voice of a man who was a lifelong friend and who knew Senator MORGAN better than any living person. In speaking of Senator MORGAN he said:

He began his education at the old field school. He has always been a student from boyhood. I knew him when he first became a lawyer, and I have known him ever since. I have lived in the same village with him for about sixty years.

Mr. President, the senior Senator from Alabama came here in moderate circumstances, and he is in very moderate circumstances to-day. His estate is worth only about as much to-day as it was when he came here, and to tell the truth, Mr. President, our people are proud that he is worth no more. It may be a singular sort of thing, but they are proud of him because he has not become rich.

"It may be a singular sort of thing," said Senator PETTUS, "but they are proud of him because he has not become rich."

Those who knew Senator PETTUS know that he had no prejudice against the honest accumulation of wealth. He did not mean that. More than thirty years in the Senate of the United States, in the presence of the glittering blandishments of wealth, brilliant, proud, and able—a cultivated Southern gentleman, depending on his salary for support—equal in ability to the greatest statesman of the highest legislative body of one of the world's greatest nations, faithful in the discharge of every public duty, devoted to his State and his country, yet the people of Alabama "were proud that Senator MORGAN was not rich"—that wealth had not come to him by reason of his official life. The tribute of Senator PETTUS to his great colleague is more precious to-day to his family, his friends, yea, to all the people of the South, than all the combined wealth of the proud and haughty millionaires of the world. This, sir, is his good name, his spotless reputation. Senator MORGAN entered the Senate a poor man, and died a poor man, but far richer than a man of mere wealth.

Midst the creeping poisonous rumors that, in the recent years of demoralization, have cast their shades and shadows of suspicion on the lives of many public men, as to the use of official position for personal gain, Senator MORGAN moved and lived, unscathed, untouched, far above the flying shafts of suspicion. His life as he went in and out before the people of this great country for more than thirty years will take high rank in the history of the Republic with that class of public men who served their country with high and unselfish purposes and true devotion. To serve the public through public office was to him the noblest of man's mission. It is quite impossible, on an occasion like this, to do justice to the life work of such a man, whose activities span the history-making period of our country from 1860 to 1907. Few men remain who have had such an experience. When the end came with him, there was but one Member of the Senate who had served longer than he had.

Senator MORGAN was instinctively a modest man and never sought or desired to be a leader of men, as leadership in political matters is commonly understood; yet, in the true sense, he was an undisputed leader in his own State, for the people of Alabama followed him with a faith and confidence that knew no hesitancy or doubt, a compliment rarely bestowed on any public man.

The distinguished and patriotic editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, Mr. Watterson, has so graphically and truly written of Senator MORGAN, that I repeat here what he said of him:

The Grand Old Man of the Senate—Alabama's glorious JOHN TYLER MORGAN—is gone at last. We could not have him with us always. He was a type of what we imagine the Roman Senator to have been in the palmy days of the Tiberian republic; a perfect type of the best that was in the Old South. A logician, like Calhoun, and as chaste in his life, he possessed much of the genius of Webster, without any of Webster's gigantic faults; the rather a learned and modest Benton, untiring, indefatigable, practical, and enlightened. He possessed neither the spirit of vanity to dwarf his perspectives, nor of bullying to mar his methods. The chronological circumstances of this man's life may be told in a few sentences; his deeds could not be recorded by many volumes. Old as he was, he will be missed from the public service. His place in the Senate can not be filled. Kentucky mourns with her Southern sister, but every good man in the United States, whatever his political belonging, should lift his hat and bow his head when he learns that MORGAN—MORGAN of Alabama—is dead.

JOHN TYLER MORGAN was born June 20, 1824, at Athens, in the State of Tennessee, and died at his residence in the city of Washington on the 11th day of June, 1907. He came to Alabama before he was 9 years of age and continuously resided in our State to the date of his death. He was honored by the people of Alabama with six consecutive elections to the United States Senate, an honor never before accorded to any other citizen of our State. In 1860 he was an elector for the State at large on the Breckinridge and Lane ticket. He was a delegate to the State convention of Alabama that passed the ordinance of secession from the Union. He joined the Confederate army and rapidly rose to the rank of brigadier-general.

Having served continuously in the Senate for thirty years, it was natural to presume, by reason of his frequent reelections, he would acquire a knowledge and familiarity with political finesse and manipulations. All such practices were unknown to him. After his election in 1876 practically he never had any opposition. I doubt whether his campaign expenses in any election exceeded the fee he was required to pay the secretary of state for certifying his election to the Senate of the United States. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I do not indulge in an extravagant expression when I say that during the generation that Senator MORGAN occupied his seat in the Senate of the United States there was no man in that august body more worthy or better equipped to reflect honor and dignity on the high title of Senator of the United States than he was.

He stood for the best traditions, highest ideals, and the recognized courtesies, proprieties, and dignity of the Senate. Its courtesies appealed naturally to his refined, affable, and cultivated nature, and he illustrated in his daily walk and his intercourse with his colleagues that splendid manhood, broad statesmanship, dignified gentlemanly deportment, devotion to duty and country, that should adorn such an exalted position as a seat in the Senate. The Senate to him was the bulwark of the sovereignty, and the Union of equal States, and he was easily one of the most powerful exponents of his political faith, to the defense of which he brought the rarest powers of eloquence and the profoundest learning. He was stalwart in his fidelity to the simple and plain teachings of the Democracy of the fathers, and such was his great knowledge and appreciation of the true spirit of our democratic form of government that it was a matter of both principle and pride with him to designate himself a "public servant." Senator MORGAN was, in the broadest sense, a statesman and an American. No narrow view of partisanship could swerve him in his duty to his whole country. To his country and his country's glory and honor he gave, without reserve, the wealth of his matchless abilities.

For the more than thirty years that Senator MORGAN stood in the gaze of the critical public, always among the foremost in the discussion of great national questions, he never touched them except as a statesman. None ever doubted what his position was on any national issue. It is in such a life as his that our free American institutions emphasize their greatest beneficence and virtue. He was always an ardent student, an indefatigable worker. He carefully studied all public questions. His power of analysis, his irresistible logic, with fluency, rhetoric, and grace of oratory, easily made him a peer of the most famous debaters of the Senate. He practically was never idle. At his seat in the Senate or in his private office at home he was always at work. He did not thus labor for mere selfish gain or personal exploitation, but he worked that he might "serve his State and his country better." He conscientiously believed that his time and his talents belonged to the "State," even to the extent, as I personally know, that he has refused to take compensation for the preparation of magazine articles on public questions. It may be that in this he was too scrupulous and sensitive, but the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the country admires him none the less because he took that view, for it was consistent with his long, honorable, and unselfish career of devotion to the public good. There was nothing ever done by him simply to attract attention.

No man from the South labored more efficiently in and out of season to point out to the world the industrial possibilities of Alabama and the South. He lived long enough to see the commercial future of the South safely established. It was but a few months since that under a resolution of the Senate he prepared and made a report to the Senate which outlined in a masterly manner the vast industrial possibilities of the watershed of the Mississippi River. He said:

The most valuable area within the limits of the United States is the catch-basin, or watershed, of the Mississippi River.

He dwelt on the national importance of the deep channel from the Great Lakes to the Gulf. This exhaustive report is accepted by many of the ablest engineers of the country as the foundation for the solution of the great engineering problems for the development of the vast industrial resources of the watershed of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. It may be that in fifty years from now, when the population of the Mississippi Valley has increased from 30,000,000 to 100,000,000 of people and its commerce will be greater than any other area of the world, then due credit and renown will be given Senator MORGAN for this wonderful work. Nothing better illustrates than this report the great variety of his vast intellectual powers.

Mr. Speaker, the South points with pride to the names of many great men who occupied seats in the Senate of the United States before the great civil war between the States of the Union. Their names are linked with imperishable honors, and they gave by their statesmanship and patriotism luster to the Republic. They flourished chiefly in the more than sixty years that the Democratic party under Southern influence and guidance dominated the national policies of our Government. Senator MORGAN's entrance into national public life was under the shadows and prejudices of the dark days of reconstruction, when the Democratic party was without influence or power. He entered at a time when the South was impoverished, bleeding, and prostrate, midst the wild orgies and the exultant shouts of our former slaves and their unworthy allies. To the great work of restoring the South and the Union he devoted his splendid talents. Day by day he broadened and strengthened in his noble work. No man north or south of Mason and Dixon's line contributed more to restore national friendly relations between the sections than did Senator MORGAN. In all his public utterances there breathes a purity and intensity of love for the South—the people whose traditions and history, whose life and whose ideals, social and political, were hallowed to his heart and memory; yet it can not be denied that through these very utterances he always manifested his love for the whole country.

I feel that I can with propriety, Mr. Speaker, refer to an incident that occurred with Senator MORGAN in the summer of 1906. The town of Hartsell, in Morgan County, Ala., advertised for a home-coming and an old-fashioned barbecue. Senator MORGAN was the only speaker for the occasion. I attended the meeting with him. Fully 6,000 prosperous, contented, and happy people had assembled, each eager to greet the old man that Alabama had so generously honored. When he arose to speak, everyone in that vast audience paid him the beautiful and touching tribute to rise to their feet. In a tremulous voice, clear and distinct, he opened his remarks by referring to a political meeting that he had last attended and addressed at that place more than thirty years ago, when the desolation of reconstruction hung over the South like a pall. Curses, persecutions, degradation, and humiliation, he said, were poured out then over our desolated homes and section. A few citizens and Confederate veterans gathered in front of the ashes of a destroyed home to hear him speak. The meeting was opened with prayer by a good minister whose heart was burdened by the sufferings of his people, and with a prophetic and sublime vision of Christian faith, fervently, on bended knees, implored Almighty God to spare his people "from the wrath of man." In low and thrilling accents, with an inspiration that came from the depths of his loving heart, Senator MORGAN told that great audience—pressing forward, eager to catch every word—about this scene, and how often during that thirty years, in his seat in the Senate and in the privacy of his own home, he had repeated and recalled the prayer of that devoted minister.

Strange as it was, the minister that uttered that prayer, with the burden of more than fourscore years and ten resting on him, whose life had been given to the service of God, was on that platform, who rose and said:

Senator, I am the preacher who uttered that prayer.

With hands uplifted to heaven, and with streaming eyes, Senator MORGAN said:

God in his mercy has answered the prayer of his faithful servant for his suffering people. This great audience in its joyous greetings, clothed in prosperity and the enjoyment of religious, social, and political freedom, speaks God's praises and your deliverance.

The effect of this scene on that Southern audience could not be faithfully portrayed by words, nor could it be placed on canvas by the greatest genius of art.

I will not attempt to point out the distinguished part he bore in most of the great national questions during his long service in the Senate. It is undoubtedly true that to Senator MORGAN, more than to anyone else, is due the credit of having joined the two oceans by the Isthmian waterway. This credit can not be taken from him. The world knows the work he did and the effect of the same. It was Senator MORGAN who, for quite a quarter of a century, stood courageously on the floor of the Senate and thwarted the schemes of the transcontinental railroads to defeat the Isthmian Canal. He it was who taught the country the commercial value of the great project.

I am told that his famous speech, delivered in the executive session of the Senate, against the adoption of the Panama route is classed to-day with the great traditions of oratory and information of the Senate. After years of laborious research he was convinced that the Nicaragua route was the best. He gave his reasons for his faith, and he struggled without cessation for his convictions, until the decision was made against him. Senator MORGAN was a confiding, credulous man, and he confidently believed to the last that the Nicaragua route would be selected. Who is it, with the lights before the country that we have, is fully prepared to say that he was not right in the advocacy of the Nicaragua route? Yet under all the trying circumstances that gathered around him no man has ever been able to point out one act or utterance of his that remotely imputed that he was not a sincere friend of the construction of the Isthmian Canal. I was a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House when the Nicaragua bill was unanimously reported to the House, and but few votes were cast in the House against the bill. In the Senate the bill was amended by substituting Panama for Nicaragua. It was then that Senator MORGAN demonstrated his unselfish patriotism and his exalted statesmanship. He was fully advised as to the temper of the House, demonstrated by the overwhelming vote in favor of Nicaragua. Yet I know personally he urged the earnest friends of the Nicaragua route to concur in the Senate amendment and accept the Panama route and avoid a conference between the Senate and the House, which he declared would be fatal to an isthmian canal—the end so much desired by the transcontinental railroads.

On the admission to the Union of the new States from Minnesota to the Pacific, he demonstrated his national Democratic creed and his patriotism. His Democratic colleagues generally opposed this national policy. His position and his influence in opposition to the policy of his party on the question of Hawaii constitutes one of the noted historical eras of our Republic. He was opposed to tearing down the work that had been done at Honolulu and restoring the overthrown monarchy with its cruel oppressions. The great service that he rendered the country in that important matter was not fully recognized until the strategic value of the islands in our Spanish-American war was realized and accepted so fully by the country to-day. In this, as in all other great national matters, Senator MORGAN was guided and influenced by the broadest and most unselfish love for Democratic principles. It is admitted that he was one of our best-informed public men on the foreign relations of the United States, and followed the wise and patriotic precept, "peace, commerce, and honest friendship with the nations, entangling alliances with none;" the support of the State governments in all their rights, as the most competent administration for our domestic concerns and a sure guaranty against anti-Republican tendencies; the preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor, as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad. He believed that the Western Hemisphere was the best theater for the growth and strength of our Republic. Commercial expansion without colonial acquisition met his cordial support. As chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, when his party was in power, a leading minority member for years thereafter, he rendered his country doubtless the most valuable service of his public life by defeating treaties that would certainly have involved us in European troubles.

Senator MORGAN was an uncompromising Democrat, and stood for the principles of his political organization. His fidelity to Democratic principles was a national asset, and the pride of his party. He stood for what is called now "old-fashioned Democracy," and for the highest and best type of Southern sentiment. He was not an advocate of "modern progressive Democracy." He measured up a full representative of that grand class of Democrats who see strength, grandeur, and glory in the preservation of the autonomy and the rights of the States, and nothing but hopeless despotism and endless oppression in the destruction of the States. He looked with much alarm upon the consolidating tendencies and the socialistic disintegrating methods of those advocates who believe that power ought to be concentrated at Washington, or who believe in unrestricted liberty—the creed of the communist of the present day. I have often heard him say that he indorsed what the great Senator from the empire State of Georgia, Ben Hill, had said:

That the Government under which we live has no model. It is partly national and partly Federal, an idea which to the Greeks was a stumbling block, to the Romans foolishness, to the Republican party an unsurmountable paradox, but to the patriots of this country it is the power of liberty unto the salvation of the people.

However great the loss would have been to the country at any time that Senator MORGAN might have died during his long career, I fear that death came to him at such a time when his great ability, his exalted patriotism, and his love for the Constitution were never more needed. He enjoyed the esteem, respect, and affection of his colleagues. Deserved recognition of his abilities and high character was accorded him by President Harrison and President McKinley, the one making him one of the arbitrators of the Bering Sea fisheries and the other naming him one of the commissioners to organize a government in Hawaii. His name is reverently and gratefully enshrined in the hearts of the people of the South forever for his matchless struggle against the destructive provisions of the force bill.

My personal relations were of that character of intimacy that I feel that I am at liberty to speak of Senator MORGAN as he lived in the sacred precincts of his home. He was often a most welcome guest in my own home. His private life, his life in the home circle, is as well known and established with personal friends who enjoyed his confidence and love as is his fame of statesmanship throughout the country.

I venture to say, on a subject as sacred as his life at home, that he was in the fullest sense the embodiment of gentleness and affection. Pageantry had no attractions for him, either in public or private. Simplicity in all things was his desire. In acts, thoughts, and words, purity and cleanliness stood out prominently as the luminous lights of his character. I have never heard a ribald jest, an unchaste expression, or the use of God's name in vain fall from his lips. He reverenced the truth and had confidence in his fellow-man. He loved God, and was a disciple of the doctrines of Jesus.

Mr. Speaker, Alabama holds up the mirror of her past of more than eighty years to her sister States, and points to the names of many of her distinguished sons, who by their ability, statesmanship, and devotion to State and country has given her rank with her foremost sister States of the Union. The lives of such men as William R. King, Benjamin Fitzpatrick, Clement C. Clay, senior and junior, William L. Yancy, John Anthony Winston, Jeremiah Clemmens, George S. Houston, Thomas H. Watts, James L. Pugh, Henry W. Hilliard, Le Roy Pope Walker, and others, that contribute so much to the proud history of our State are dear to every Alabamian. With this brilliant and honored galaxy of great men, Alabama tenderly and lovingly places the names of her great, able, and honored sons, JOHN TYLER MORGAN and EDMUND WINSTON PETTUS, and assigns to them the choicest niche in her temple of fame.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I feel almost like a stranger in the sacred chamber of the dead, but I shall disclose the reason why I also feel that I have some right or some cause to feel adopted into the family of those who weep or mourn to-day. Sitting here and listening to these reverent and loving tributes, I was reminded of the lines of the great poet, who said:

Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And, departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

And I wondered if it were so. I scarcely think it is; but we may emulate the virtues of great men, and if, when life's fitful dream is over, the flowers of love are laid upon our resting place, as they are to-day brought to this chamber, by those who have known us, our lives will not have been lived in vain. I did not have the pleasure of ever meeting with Senator MORGAN, but Texas is full of his fame. Texas is full of Alabamans, and they love the old home State, and over the prairies and valleys of Texas JOHN T. MORGAN was known for his broad, deep statesmanship, and loved for his high, pure character. I did have the pleasure of meeting Senator PETTUS, and I shall never cease to remember with pleasure the slight acquaintance and brief conversation I had with him. I came here in the beginning of last year as a stranger, and went, as most visitors do, over into the Senate Chamber, as well as this. In the Senate I was struck by the vision I saw. Observing those most noted, as they were pointed out, I saw always at his post the Senator from Alabama, Mr. PETTUS. Loaded down with years, his slightly bended form was always in his place. I said to myself, with that vision in view, he is "the noblest Roman of them all." That was the impression Senator PETTUS made on me, and looking on him I thought of what was said of the Roman senate once, when every man, to the visitor, seemed a king, and I thought how the petty princes of the earth would shrivel in the presence of such magnificent manhood as seemed to me to stand before me.

I sought an introduction and obtained it, and the impression was deepened from the conversation I had, when the old man talked with the simplicity of a child and the kindliness of a father. He said to me: "Do you know one Captain Bradley in Texas?" I replied, "Senator, Captain Bradley, afterwards Judge Bradley, was the man who was on the district bench as district judge when I was district attorney. He was a Chesterfield in knightly bearing and a man whom above all others I revered and loved." Then he told me of the incident which has been referred to by more than one of the speakers on this occasion, of the charge at Vicksburg upon the redoubt that had been captured by the Federals and was sought to be recaptured by the Confederates. In simple language he told me that one Alabama company had not been decimated, but had been destroyed, every man to the last, if I remember aright, when he was called upon to find volunteers to take that redoubt. Said he, "I turned to Captain Bradley (asking him his name), of Waul's Texas brigade, and asked if he could get me thirty men to volunteer to take that fort." He told me the circumstances, how Captain Bradley and his first lieutenant, Lieutenant Hogue, each called for fifteen men, and not fifteen men but the entire command had volunteered. He told me how they were counted off with the statement from Captain Bradley that he wanted no married men to take part. I may have some of Senator PETTUS's conversation confused with some of the statements of some of the soldiers who participated, and with whom I afterwards talked. But as I have learned it, one of the officers, young High, said to Bradley, "Captain, you are a married man; let me lead the troops." Bradley had said in reply, "No; where my troops go, I lead them." And so the fifteen men were counted off by the lieutenant and the captain, and as Senator PETTUS told me, he, PETTUS, then said: "Boys, I will lead you." But it was objected that Bradley's men must be led by him, and then Senator PETTUS, waiving his superior rank, said, "We will go together," and together they did go.

The manner and the method of it I will not undertake to describe; but taking a circuitous route, while the fire of our forces was being concentrated upon that fort, before the enemy knew it they had landed in their rear, had spiked their guns, and were upon them and captured them without the loss of a man, though not without a scratch. Senator PETTUS said to me that after the conflict was over and the capture made, and they had marched back with a greater force of the enemy captured than the number of their own command, and with the captured flag, some Texas soldier, who did not know his rank, asked who was that tall Alabaman that was with them, and then his identity was disclosed; and then the Texans said they did not care who he was, but they moved "he be elected a Texan." Senator PETTUS said to me, with a slight tremble in his voice but the light of a glorious memory in his eyes, "that of all the honors that had ever been showered upon him that his adoption as a Texan by that election was as dear to him, if not dearer, than any other."

I told him then that Judge or Captain Bradley had already passed over the river and had found his reward, but in my home town was one of his daughters and in a neighboring town was another, and a son, and that they would be glad to have the story of that incident. When I went home I wrote Senator PETTUS and asked him to please give it to me in writing, and that is why I have what you, Mr. Speaker [Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama in the chair], never succeeded in eliciting from the Senator. I do not know how it is, but sometimes men's hearts, under the fierce heat of the fire of struggle and danger, in a moment's time are welded together more closely than they can be by a long life of cold social relations, and I take it that for the sake of the daughter of his old comrade in that fierce strife he wrote an account of that incident, which I have, and which it is my purpose to place in the RECORD, and I ask that my remarks be extended by including this story of the charge at Vicksburg, as told in the letter of Senator PETTUS.

Mr. Speaker, we all have our impressions when we meet a great man of the earth, and sometimes there is such a similarity in certain elements of that impression with other impressions of similar men that they but illustrate our ideas of character. It has been said that Senator PETTUS was a modest man. In that I concur, for in the record of the report it appears that when the flag was captured and a controversy arose between him and Captain Bradley as to who should retain it, Senator PETTUS said, "It belongs to the Texans," and so it was held. In his conversation he made another remark. He said to me that "The bravest man I ever saw was L. D. Bradley under all circumstances," and the old soldiers to whom I repeated the remark when I met them said that no less a brave man was EDMUND W. PETTUS, of Alabama.

It made me think of the story that is told of Lee and Jackson. When Jackson was stricken down in the hour of battle, Lee made the remark that it would have been better for the country if it had been he, and when this was reported to Jackson, lying on his deathbed, he would not have it so, but declared that Lee was the one man and the only man he ever knew whom he would willingly follow blindfolded.

These two men, with honest praise and high estimate of each other, have expressed their noble character, and in the South to-day our enthusiastic sons are still debating which was the greater in arms—Lee or Jackson. They do not debate who was the greater man, because in all that makes great and noble manhood neither ever had a superior.

I cherished, and still cherish, the letter of Senator PETTUS. At a reunion of the old Confederates in Captain Bradley's home county in Texas last year I read it. Some half a dozen of the men referred to in the letter live around my home now—there is Mr. Burleson, Mr. High, Mr. Patterson, and I forget the names of the others. These old men gather at the camp now as they meet in reunion, and they live over and talk over the capture of that redoubt with General PETTUS, of Alabama. They love to talk of the incidents where they confronted death together.

Senator PETTUS told me this story with the utmost unconsciousness as if there was nothing remarkable in it. I heard another story of like unconscious heroism at my table once two years ago when we had a reunion of old soldiers in my town, and one of my guests was a little fellow scarcely 5 feet and 4 inches tall. He told me he had volunteered in that great struggle when he was a little over 14, and he said with childlike simplicity, "I was smaller then than I am now." He said on the long marches, as the army went through the country, frequently his feet grew weary and sore, and that he had to sit down by the roadside and cry, and many a time some big and stronger companion had eased him of a part of his burden; but he said, "I always caught up at night and was with the camp by the time the tent was struck and was ready for battle when the battle opened."

The little fellow told me with verbose words how the struggle went on from day to day and week to week, and never in it dreamed that he was himself a hero of the same brand of him that wears the stripes and epaulets—perhaps the hero of a little different brand because he knew no beating drum or flying banner would greet him when he returned home, but he knew he was performing what he felt was right. It was with the same unconscious display, or the want of consciousness of heroism in it, that General PETTUS related the incident of the Vicksburg redoubt.

Mr. Speaker, as I say, I was not thinking of making any talk, but the fact that this incident had been referred to and the fact that I have in my possession the authentic statement of Senator PETTUS himself, and the fact that we as Texans and as sons of old Confederates, thirty of whom he, with an old companion of mine, led to that glorious attack, made it impossible for me to fail to say these few words upon this occasion.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., March 11, 1907.

Hon. RUFUS HARDY, Corsicana, Tex.

DEAR SIR: Your letter came this evening. Capt. L. D. Bradley, of General Waul's legion, was born and commenced the practice of law in Dallas County, Ala. He was, in his early days, a partner of Col. N. H. R. Dawson, who was afterwards and for twenty-six years my partner. But I moved to Dallas County after Captain Bradley had moved West, and I met him first at the siege of Vicksburg. A redoubt on the hill just south of the railroad to Jackson was on the line held there by Col. Charles M. Shelley, of the Thirtieth Alabama Regiment. I was then in command of a fragment of the Forty-sixth Alabama Regiment, which had lost all of its field officers at Bakers Creek, and would not volunteer. So, when I received an order to retake that fort I went to Waul's legion, near and also in reserve, and met with Colonel Waul, and told him what I wanted. He said: "I will not order, but if any of my companies will volunteer, I will consent." So I went on and first met Captain Bradley and told him what I wanted. He questioned me. He said: "Did you see that Alabama company killed, trying to take it?" I answered, "Yes; I saw it, but the captain and all his men were killed before they got to the back door of the redoubt; I expect to kill them before they know I am coming." Captain Bradley then turned to a lieutenant commanding a company next to his, and asked: "Shall I take the whole job, or will you go halves?" The lieutenant answered: "I will go if you go." Then Captain Bradley asked, "How many men do you want?" I told him "about thirty is as many as can be used in so small a place."

"Count off fifteen from the right!" And the lieutenant gave the same order to his company.

So, in a moment I had a company of thirty Texans, and three men of Colonel Shelley's Thirtieth Alabama joined us almost as soon as I gave the first order; which was, "March to the right." So we moved away from the redoubt until out of sight of the enemy; then changed direction and went into the Confederate ditches, in which we marched rapidly, heads down and out of sight, until we reached the redoubt captured by the Federals. Then we halted, Captain Bradley and I in front, and waited until the men closed up. We were still where we could not be seen by the Federals. So soon as we got in this position, I waved and threw down my red bandanna handkerchief as a signal to the Confederates, who were firing in the back door of this redoubt, to stop firing. Instantly their firing ceased, and my little party, Captain Bradley and I in front, dashed into the redoubt and in a few seconds' time those in the redoubt and at the back door were disposed of. They had their heads down to avoid the firing from the outside. In that charge not one of the assaulting party was scratched, but two of the Texans rushed to the rear and fired over the broken walls at the Federals on the outside, and in doing so were shot in the face, but not seriously hurt.

The floor of that redoubt was more than covered by dead soldiers—Confederates and Federals.

Instantly I ordered the men to get to cover, which was done, and all of the Federal guns—a large number—opened fire on the redoubt. There were then still a considerable number of Federals in the ditch in front of the redoubt. They were ordered to surrender, and attempted to do so by coming through the portholes, which had been widened by the fire of the Federal guns, and several of them were shot by the Federals on the outside. Then they were ordered to come around the redoubt in the ditch to the rear, and in that way three officers and thirty-three men were taken prisoners and sent to the rear. The two men shot in the face, as above stated, were all of the casualties suffered by the attacking party. The Federal fire from the outside batteries continued until dark, but I required every man to keep to cover.

So soon as anything could be heard one of Captain Bradley's men, with buckskin breeches, demanded of his captain to know "What fellow was that that brought us into this hell's hole?" and the captain replied, "I don't know." And the soldier replied, with perfect freedom, "That's a hell of a story, captain. Don't know his name or his rank?" The captain said "no," he did not. Thereupon the soldier replied, "I move we elect him a Texan, name or no name, rank or no rank." And the captain put the motion to a vote, as though he was presiding at a town meeting, and I was unanimously elected "a Texan"—the greatest honor I ever received, though I have had many beyond my deservings.

General Pemberton and his chief engineer officer visited this redoubt soon after dark and gave orders for its repair that night. And General Waul, with members of his staff, also visited it, and the attacking party was relieved and returned to their commands.

Captain Bradley was the coolest man I ever saw under fire. I talked with him several times during the siege and in that way learned who he was and where he was raised, etc., but I have never seen him since the surrender of Vicksburg, though I met with his father, who revisited his old home near Selma, where I live. Please present my kindest regards to his daughters.

Most respectfully, E. W. PETTUS.

P. S.: You can find the outlines of this transaction in the reports of Gen. Stephen D. Lee and Gen. C. L. Stephenson, in volume 24, part 2, of the War of the Rebellion. And also in President Davis's Rise and Fall of the Confederacy, page 415.

I regret that I can not give you the name of the lieutenant mentioned. I think I have it at home, in Alabama.

E. W. P.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama). In compliance with the resolution already adopted, and as a further mark of respect to the late Senator MORGAN and Senator PETTUS, this House will take a recess until 11.30 o'clock a. m. on Monday next.

SENATE.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. The order of the Senate providing for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill for the entire day to the exclusion of all other business, I ask that the regular order be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20471), making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 85, line 17, before the words "first-class battle ships," strike out "two" and insert "four."

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the restoration of our maritime power is of supreme importance. No greater question could engage the attention of Congress than one designed to accomplish that end. For many years, both in and out of Congress, I have been an ardent advocate of an increased navy and of policies looking to the rehabilitation of our merchant marine. The two things are so related that I can not think of the one without thinking of the other. The decadence of our maritime prestige and power constitutes one of the most discreditable and humiliating facts in our history. This is not the occasion to discuss the causes that have led to this misfortune or the fatuous policies which, if blindly persisted in, will make the continuance of that misfortune inevitable. No man is more solicitous than I to see our merchant ships swarming over the world, and I doubt if any is more keenly alive to the wisdom and necessity of constructing a war navy adequate to subserve the needs of our country.

Both of these things are important, but to my thinking it is really more important that we should become a commercial maritime power than a mere fighting maritime power. We need merchant ships more than we need war ships. Indeed the war ship in an important sense is but the complement of the merchant ship. Of course if we had not a single merchantman afloat we would still need a navy for purposes of defense and for the protection of our people and their interests abroad. Nevertheless, the need of a navy is greatly augmented and the uses to which it can be put are greatly multiplied as the merchant marine of a nation grows and the commerce and carrying trade of a nation expands. To-day we are practically without a merchant marine, although some feeble effort to revive that great interest is now being made—an effort, however, which I believe is destined to fail because directed upon mistaken lines. To-day we have but a few merchant ships on the ocean outside the coastwise trade, and 90 per cent of our foreign tonnage is carried in foreign bottoms. England, Germany, and other commercial countries have their merchant ships scattered all over the world, and the vast interests these commercial vessels represent magnifies the necessity of a larger naval force for their protection than would otherwise be required.

In this respect the situation of the United States is not analogous to that of the other leading naval powers. I hope the day is not distant when this disparity which stands as a monument to a policy at once sinister, sordid, and short sighted will disappear. But the condition now is as I gave it. Nevertheless, I am heartily in favor of going ahead with the work of building an adequate navy.

I favor an adequate navy, not necessarily a powerful navy. What we want now to do is to supply a navy sufficient for our probable present needs, and then we should go on from year to year with the work of adding to it so that its growth will keep pace with the public requirements. Under present conditions I do not quite fancy the word "powerful" as applied to the Navy. It would be an odd spectacle to see the ocean highways and sheltering places crowded with war ships without ever seeing or rarely seeing a merchant ship floating our flag. We should not aspire to become the bully of the sea. Our aim should be higher than that. Let us get rid of this profitless and arrogant notion of a powerful fleet, for which manifestly there is no present need unless it be to make the world afraid. Let us get rid of that and get down to the sane business of building a navy adequate for our purposes by adding to it from time to time as occasion demands.

Mr. President, what do we want a fleet for? Not, I hope, that we may go dancing around the world with defiance flung from the flag pole, or merely to make a gaudy and pretentious exhibition of our strength; but we want a navy to aid in the protection of our seacoast from assault and for the purpose of protecting such interests as we have abroad. How large a navy do we need for that? Already in naval armament and destructive force we rank second among the nations of the world. Our important seaports are strongly fortified, and these fortifications are being extended and new works constructed from year to year. With such a navy and with such coast defenses are we in danger of assault?

It is inconceivable that any sane man can believe it to be within the range of human possibility that any nation on earth could make a successful attack on this country. And it is almost as absurd to say that a hostile fleet would attempt to cross the Atlantic or the Pacific to assault us, for at the best the only thing they could hope to do would be to batter down an occasional defenseless coast town or village. They could not land troops or hope to capture important ports, nor levy tribute or secure booty sufficient to pay the fuel cost of their battle ships. To my thinking it is ludicrous to speak seriously of a hostile fleet crossing thousands of miles of ocean, bringing supplies, and establishing a base on American shores.

Our strength as a nation, both in men and in resources, and the spirit and courage of the American people, more than a navy are the things that give us immunity from outside aggression, and are the things also that make most for the world's tranquillity. And certainly, Mr. President, as long as we maintain our position as the second naval power of the world, or even maintain a position equal to any other power except Great Britain, it is worse than folly to anticipate that any nation would attempt to wage an offensive war against us. I am not in the least moved by suggestions of that character. We should have an adequate fleet, undoubtedly, and we will have it and maintain it because as a great nation with a great mission we ought to have it, but there is no need of frightening ourselves with bugaboos. Of course the contingency of war is always possible, and we ought to be always reasonably prepared for it if it comes. The aggregate of our naval strength should enable us to maintain an adequate defensive fleet in both the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans, and the two combined should be strong enough, ordinarily at least, to constitute an offensive fleet in the improbable event of needing it for that purpose.

I want the Navy increased; I want to see it strong, but we can not build in a day. There are other needs more emergent for money. We need buildings for the transaction of public business; our rivers and harbors must be improved; great interior works of inestimable value must be developed—there are innumerable needs which, in the aggregate, will require very large expenditures. There is no pressing need for striding with great leaps and bounds in these warlike preparations; there is no need of rushing on at a furious pace and with headlong extravagance. We can wisely afford to make haste more slowly and deliberately. No one is menacing us with war. I know of but one acute international imbroglio confronting us now, and I do not know that that is acute. I read almost daily press accounts of a controversy between this Government and that of Venezuela, but, however that controversy may eventuate, no one imagines that it can ever necessitate the employment of a large naval force. With the balance of the world, so far as I am advised, we are at peace. This little speck on our southern horizon, hanging there like the soiled hand of a spoilt child, and about as dangerous, is the only sign of a storm. Senators have filled this Chamber with ominous warnings and lugubrious intimations, but they do not enlighten us as to the facts, if any facts there be, upon which they predicate their frightful prophecies.

They say the President urges the construction of four ships instead of two, and then they take us far enough into their confidence to tell us that we do not know what the President or the Secretary of State may know. We are solemnly advised that these high officials may be possessed of information which they have not vouchsafed to us. That may be, and they may have had also some special revelation about the day of judgment that we know not of. But, Mr. President, all this is to me like the fabric of a dream—baseless, intangible, fanciful, impossible. I can not be driven by such sensational "tommyrot." Something was said, too much, indeed, about the possibility of war with Japan.

Mr. President, these were unwise utterances on the floor of the American Senate. They were made, I am sure, without proper deliberation. They were ill-considered, untimely observations, thoughtlessly made in the haste and ardor of debate and made no doubt with the hope that the bare suggestion that such a tragedy was possibly impending would promote the cause the Senators were advocating. These utterances were all the more unfortunate because so much has been said in sensational journals and magazines, both here and in Europe, about the possibility of a serious breach between the United States and Japan. Within the last twelve months the world has been flooded with this lurid literature. Mr. President, talk of this kind, iterated and reiterated as it has been, is most unfortunate. More than that, it is wanton and wicked.

Of course we can have war with Japan if we want it and seek it. But you know, Mr. President, and every sane man in America knows, that we do not want a war with Japan, and I know that Japan does not want a war with us. During the spring and summer of last year it was my privilege to spend some months in Japan. While there I met and mingled with all classes of her people. I conversed with many of the highest officials of the Empire—ministers, judges, and legislators. I met leading members of the bar, doctors of medicine, doctors of law, educators, bankers, merchants, and manufacturers—men representing the various industrial activities of the nation—met them singly and in company; and I met hundreds of the middle classes and the common people and talked with them, usually through an interpreter, although many spoke English fairly well. In other words, I went all over Japan and talked with people everywhere and of every class, from the most powerful public officials down to the jinrikisha man, that human horse whose unmatched endurance is one of the marvels of the Orient.

I was in Yokohama when the first news came of the San Francisco riot and was in Japan during the earlier and more acute stages of the school controversy at San Francisco. The news of these incidents came by way of Europe, and you may be sure that they were duly exaggerated, red as blood, and streaked with yellow. The comments of the local press for the most part were dignified and temperate. There were occasional outbursts of resentment and defiance, but these were exceptional. I was unable to observe any widespread excitement among the people. There was little effort made to arouse a spirit of aggressive hostility. The general expression of the press and of the people was one of surprise and regret. They did not believe that the people of the United States or that the Government of the United States was unfriendly to them, and I pledge you, Mr. President, I did not hear at any time a single expression from any Japanese, whether of high or low degree, that did not indicate the highest regard and friendship for our Government and our people. It might be that less credulous men than I would have regarded such assurances with suspicion. It may be that the entire people of Japan play a game of duplicity and deception, but I did not think so then, nor do I think so now. I was impressed, as was ex-Senator Towne, with whom I traveled, with the sincerity of Japanese friendship for America. What cause have we for war with Japan or Japan with us? Already the delicate questions growing out of Japanese immigration to these States has been substantially adjusted by diplomacy. I can not conceive it to be within the range of human probability that these two great countries will ever have occasion to enter upon a disastrous war about a matter of that kind. The possibility is too remote to challenge our serious attention.

Then, are we going to war about Manchuria and the open door? In answer to that question I desire to read an article I recently clipped from one of the leading papers of Washington. I regret not having made a note of it, and hence I am not now able to state whether the article was from the Post or the Herald, but I have seen the publication, at least in substance, in several other of the important journals of the country. The article is as follows:

> The "open-door policy" as to China, it is explained, is simply a policy, an attitude of mind. It is not guaranteed by a treaty, and no scheme for enforcing it has ever been formulated and adopted among the nations.
> In fact, the State Department authorities are of the opinion that Japan's aggressions in Manchuria do not violate in any way the letter of the open-door understanding. Rather, Japan is doing the very things that the open-door idea makes possible for any enterprising nation to do that cares to take advantage of the opportunity, and is skillful enough to get the concessions.
> If American or English or German interests wanted to go into Manchuria and compete with Japan, they would be at liberty to do so. The difficulty is that Japan has been so prompt and determined in grasping the opportunity that she has grasped all there is of it. Even if the United States were disposed to insist on a better chance for Americans in Manchuria, there would be no benefits, because there is no American trade there, nobody seems to care to develop any, and there are no American ships on the Pacific to carry such commerce.
> Japan is forcing competition out of Manchuria, and more and more absorbing the trade of the rest of China, simply because she has pushed the opportunity and strengthened her position. But to root her out now, it is said, must be a commercial rather than a diplomatic affair.

Mr. President, that article so well expresses the thought I have that I do not care to elaborate it. Is Japan doing anything in China that any other nation is not at liberty to do? Embracing and utilizing her opportunities, she is rapidly extending her commerce not only in Manchuria but throughout China. Has not Japan a right to compete, as much right as we have to compete, for the business of China or of any other country? What ground of complaint have we on that account?

But I am told that Japan has designs on China, not only on Korea or Manchuria, but on China proper; that her policy is grasping and sinister, and that she looks not only to commercial extension but to some character of suzerainty over the Empire, and to the domination of its political as well as its commercial policies. I do not know about that. I would not be surprised if there was some foundation for that apprehension.

But, Mr. President, are not other nations doing substantially the same thing? Are not several of the great powers of Europe moving along the same lines, establishing spheres of influence covering large areas with enormous populations and involving commercial interests with vast possibilities? Are they not seeking to do substantially what we are told Japan seeks to do? Why do we object to the one more than to the other? Why do we fear the one more than the other?

I favor the open-door policy, and I am opposed to the disintegration or the partition of the Chinese Empire. Circumstances may arise some time when it will be necessary for this nation to take an advanced and maybe an extreme position upon this question. The protection of our rights may some time make that necessary. But that lies off in the future; it is not a question for to-day, and it does not involve us alone. It is a possibility too remote to make it the basis of immediate and immense war preparations.

If for any cause we contemplate a war with Japan or with England or with Germany or with any other power, and if it is our purpose to prepare for it now, then we ought to build not four but forty battle ships.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that any apprehension regarding Japan closing the door of Manchuria or Korea to this country or to the rest of the world comes with an ill grace from this country, which has been seeking by an organized effort, represented by a measure that passed the House during the last session, to give this country preferred rights of trade in the Philippine Islands, and which has put upon the statute book a law intended to drive Japan entirely out of the carrying trade of the Philippines and to give a monopoly of the trade to the American people.

It seems to me that if there are any signs of aggression in the Orient, the signs are manifested by the United States much more than they are by Japan and that we have taken a more advanced step toward entering that territory and endeavoring to close out the legitimate trade of other nations than Japan ever has taken.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the Senator may be right. I will let his statement stand. But I wish to say that the Japanese are a wonderful people. Their rise is the marvel of a century. They are a highly civilized, intelligent, progressive, and aggressive people. There is much in their history, particularly during the last half century, that challenges the admiration of mankind. But they do not command my unstinted admiration. My friend from Nevada speaks of Korea and of the Philippines. It so happened that during my journey in the East I arrived at Seoul, the capital of Korea, on the evening following the battle which occurred in the streets of that city as the result of a remarkable and historical order issued, I have no doubt under compulsion, by the imbecile Emperor of Korea disbanding his army. I will not speak now of the tragic and exasperating scenes incident to that struggle, a part of which I witnessed and a part of which was related to me by eyewitnesses. For manifest reasons I think it best not to discuss that subject at this time on the floor of the Senate.

But this I will venture to say: That the Japanese in Korea are as arbitrary, domineering, despotic, tyrannical, and cruel as any conquering nation has ever been in modern times, if not in the whole history of the civilized world. It was pathetic to see the people of Korea in their quaint garb moving with fear about the streets, afraid to gather in groups, speaking in whispers, the very picture of a people subjugated and overwhelmed with despair. It was a pathetic scene—a tragic situation. But, Mr. President, when I looked at it I did not feel authorized as an American, remembering the Philippines only a few hundred miles to the south and a part of that same great Orient, to level any rasping criticism against the Japanese for what they were doing in Korea.

But I go back to the point where I was when interrupted, and ask, waiving everything else, Can we hope successfully to compete with Japan for the trade of China? Of course we ought to extend our trade in China, as everywhere, but under existing conditions I doubt whether it is possible for us to compete, with great hope of success, with Japan for the trade of the Orient.

Let us see about that. In the first place, Japan has already a merchant marine superior to ours, and is adding to it rapidly from year to year. The policy of free ships is the policy of Japan. The Japanese can buy his ship anywhere in the world, give it Japanese registry, and fly over it the Japanese flag. More than that, the policy of subsidizing, with a view to encouraging and aiding in the construction of merchant ships at home, prevails in Japan. Free ships and subsidies by the Government is their policy, and there is in consequence a rapid augmentation in the number of Japanese merchant vessels. Why, Mr. President, I saw it reported a few days since that a contract has been practically completed for the establishing of a new Japanese line between Tacoma and our Northwestern ports and Yokohama. When that is done, if it shall be, it will make, as I understand it, the fifth line of Japanese ships plying regularly between Japan and America. We have but two, I think it is, and one of these, at least—the Harriman line, so-called—is compelled to fly foreign flags over a part of their ships, and they are forbidden to take on and carry passengers or freight between Hawaii and our mainland, because they were built abroad. This disparity puts us at a great disadvantage.

Then, Mr. President, consider the proximity of Japan to China as compared with us. Japan can reach out her hand and put her fingers upon the shores of China, while we have 8,000 miles of ocean rolling between the two countries.

Then, again, Mr. President, the question of labor, standing alone, is an almost insuperable bar against our people maintaining a successful commercial competition with Japan in China. Their manufacturing industries are growing apace with a rapidity that excites wonder and challenges admiration.

I visited numerous establishments in many cities of Japan, great manufacturing industries of divers and sundry kinds. I will speak only of Osaka, for Osaka is the leading manufacturing center of Japan, as it is of the entire Orient. Osaka is a town of about 1,200,000 population. While there we visited numerous establishments. There are over 600 establishments in Osaka, each employing more than 50 people, and altogether these 600 establishments employ 96,000 men and women. We visited the Royal brush factory at that place. This establishment employs 600 people, 80 per cent women and girls. The wages paid by them range from $17 to $20 per month for men, from 11 to 12 cents per day for women, and from 7 to 8 cents per day for girls. We also visited one of the Osaka woolen mills and one of the cotton mills. The former employs 400 people, 90 per cent women, and the cotton mill employs 2,000, about 90 per cent women.

The product of these mills is of excellent grade and quality, up to the standard of production in this country or in Europe. The hours of labor are eleven; the wages running from $17 to $20 per month for men, 11 to 12 cents per day for women, and from 7 to 8 cents for girls. We also visited the Osaka iron works and shipyard. This establishment employs 4,000 men, every one a Japanese. It is a mammoth concern, engaged in manufacturing steel and iron products and in shipbuilding. At the time we were there they had ten merchant vessels of different dimensions in the docks and in course of construction. There are other similar large establishments in the Empire. As I understand it, Japan builds her war vessels in her own shipyards. But there are several large shipbuilding establishments owned by individuals or corporations, and I was told that all were constantly employed to the utmost of their capacity.

Here is a country that has free ships. They can come here or go to Europe or anywhere, buy their ships, and fly their flag over them, and yet they have thousands and thousands of men daily employed in the construction and repair of ships of all kinds at home and are filling the seas with their own manufacture.

Mr. President, the overcrowded condition of the population in Japan makes it absolutely necessary to her existence that she should develop her industries and give employment to her people, and that makes it necessary for her to struggle to command the trade of the Orient. It is a matter of life with her.

Mr. President, there is a kind of commercial interdependence between Japan and China. Iron, wool, cotton, brush bristles, and other raw materials are imported in great quantities from China. It is from China she gets the bulk of her raw material—all she can get—and naturally to China she will sell the bulk of her manufactured products. Perhaps our best chance in the Orient is to sell raw cotton to Japan. About 80 per cent of the cotton now absorbed in the mills of Japan is from America.

Still Japan will buy all she can from China, because it is closer, because it is cheaper, and because it is to her interest to do so.

Mr. President, the Government of Japan is aiding in the development of Japanese manufactures. The consul-general at Yokohama, a very intelligent and capable man, showed me—and I have no doubt that he has sent it to the State Department—a report upon that subject. Japan aids in the development of manufactures first by lending money at low rates of interest to manufacturers, not directly out of the imperial treasury, but indirectly through the imperial banks, the stock of which is largely owned by members of the imperial household. They go abroad and borrow money at the lowest possible rates of interest and lend it to the manufacturers whenever the enterprise is such as to command the confidence of the Government. Then the taxing power is also used in the way of tariffs and subsidies to aid in manufactures. Subsidies are employed directly in Japan to upbuild manufacturing industries. The Government is behind them. The people individually are for the most part poor, but Japan is a great beehive of industry. The governmental and social organization is such that the power of the whole people and the wealth of the nation can be employed to promote the national welfare. Altogether they constitute a stupendous and powerful unit. Every effort is being made and every energy spent by Japan to develop and increase her industrial activities, and especially her manufacturing interests.

More than that, special rates of transportation are given to the manufacturers over the railroads, all of which are owned by the Government, not only in Japan, but also in Korea and Manchuria, and the subsidized merchant vessels give special rates when required to the transportation of goods designed for foreign trade.

Mr. President, under such circumstances, considering the proximity of Japan to China, considering the capacity of the Japanese to create the things that the Chinese need, and her absorption of Chinese raw material, considering the interdependence in a commercial way of the two countries, considering the aid the Government gives to the upbuilding of the national industries, considering the vastly greater cost to us of production and transportation, and considering the overwhelming necessity of Japan reaching out and controlling as far as possible the commerce of that part of the world, is it not clear that when we undertake to wrest the trade of China from Japan we will undertake an extremely difficult task?

Mr. President, I think we would do better if we would turn our attention more to the south, to the growing countries of Central and South America. Our position with reference to them, so far as proximity, civilization, and all that is concerned, is not much different from that which obtains between Japan and China. The commercial policy of our people should be, so it seems to me, to reach out to the south and strive to control that commerce—already vast, and which during the next century is destined to increase with great rapidity.

Mr. President, Japan has as much right to fight for the commerce of China as we have, as England has, as France has, as Germany has; and so long as the door is open, so long as we can go in and compete without unfair interference, we have no just reason to complain. Our people are doing but little to acquire commercial supremacy in the Orient. Our trade there is comparatively small and we are doing nothing, or but little, to enlarge it. Japan is devoting all the mighty energies of her great people to that one thing above all others; and if she excels us, if we fall behind, what else could we expect?

At all events, this commercial rivalry and competition furnishes no occasion for war. It is not even a provocation to war when considered from the standpoint of a Christian civilization.

No, Mr. President, there is no more cause for war with Japan nor danger of it than of war with any European power. Therefore, I see no need whatever, nothing present, nothing apparent, nothing within the range of the probable, for undue haste in this work of navy building. Let us go on with the work, but let us proceed along sane and conservative lines in the due course of practical administration. On this side, at least, let us avoid hysteria, spasm, and jingoism, go slow, and wait. It was a Democratic Administration that revived the policy and gave new impetus to the work of rebuilding the American Navy and making of it a strong and effective arm of the public service. A few months hence we have excellent reason for believing that this great work will be again committed to the same hands. If that good fortune comes to the country, we will go on building ships, building them fast enough and building them without waste or extravagance. The extravagance of our expenditures has become so appalling that even such Senators as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and others like him rise here to protest. Let me read a brief extract from the speech made on Saturday last by the Senator from Rhode Island:

> Since the Spanish-American war we have had an era of extravagance in expenditures. There has been apparently little limit to appropriations and expenditures. With prosperity, a degree of prosperity that the world has never before known, our revenues mounted higher and higher every month, and we evidently, and perhaps naturally, thought there was no limit and should be no limit to our appropriations for the public service.
> But a change has taken place. The revenues of the country are falling off. The deficiency in the month of April will be more than $11,000,000. The deficiency for the present fiscal year will be at least $60,000,000. What is the duty of Congress in this emergency? The appropriation bills now in this Chamber or in the other provide for an increase of appropriations over those made last year of a hundred and four million dollars; and the end is not yet. There is a public-buildings bill, which will probably pass, which may add $20,000,000 to that, making an increase of appropriations in this fiscal year over the last of a hundred and twenty-four million dollars, and this with a deficiency in revenue this year of $60,000,000.
> What do Senators propose to do about this?

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and others expressed themselves to the same effect. The Senator from Rhode Island asks—

> What do Senators propose to do about this?

I go beyond the Senate and ask, "What does the American electorate, the great body of the American people and taxpayers, propose to do about it?" Every dollar going into the Treasury to meet the expenses of the Government is a dollar wrung in some form from the people. Every dollar of that kind represents an exaction levied on the industrial activities of the country. I do not care whether it is done directly or indirectly, whether in one way or another, it is a tax, and taxes are paid by the people. There is nobody else to pay them. Our friends on the other side confessedly have been going on piling up millions upon millions in the Treasury, useless millions. Inevitably and with the certainty of fate the influx of these vast revenues would lead, as the Senator from Rhode Island admits they have led, to wild, reckless, and wasteful extravagance in expenditures. We have schemes upon schemes—everybody has a scheme—to get money out of the Treasury under the guise or pretense of some public good. Fast as the revenues have grown, they have not kept pace with the growth in expenditures. This year we are promised a deficiency of $60,000,000 or more, and the end is not yet. Here we have a number of eminent Republican Senators clamoring for additional appropriations, among others this great and comparatively useless appropriation for two additional battle ships, and none can tell to what point this enormous deficiency will be advanced. Mr. President, I am waiting for the day when the expenditures of the Government may be reduced and the burdens of the people reduced. I am waiting the day when the tax burden will be levied to raise only enough to meet the needs of the Government, honestly, efficiently, and economically administered. Put an end to this era of tax extortion and wild extravagance—put an end to that, and we will end it when the opportunity comes, and then be sure we will go on developing and improving our country, building its Navy, expanding its commerce, and administering all its stupendous affairs without bankrupting the Treasury or oppressing the people.

I shall vote for two ships and no more. I shall do that because it is enough and all we ought to attempt.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to say a word or two, and a word or two only, with reference to the pending question. I intend to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES], proposing to increase the number of battle ships to be constructed under the terms of this bill from two to four, and I have no apology to make here or elsewhere for that vote. I intend to vote for the amendment, not because I believe war to be either certain or probable, because I do not so believe; but because I know war is always possible. I shall vote for it upon the same theory that I would take out a policy of insurance upon my home—not because I believed that it was either certain or probable that it would be destroyed by fire, but because I knew that such a calamity was always possible, and that it was the part of prudence for me to indemnify myself against that contingency.

The President of the United States has been credited with having given utterance to a somewhat famous aphorism—"speak softly and carry a big stick. You will go far." The President does not advise us to carry a stick in the spirit of the bully who goes up and down the land seeking heads to crack for the mere satisfaction of cracking them, but he in effect advises us to carry the big stick for defensive and not for offensive purposes at all. Applied to the affairs of Government, in my judgment, no wiser or better thing has even been said. Thus applied the police force of a city becomes the big stick of the municipality. Every well-governed city maintains a police force big enough adequately to meet and cope with exceptional emergencies. It is very rare indeed that the entire reserve force is called into aggressive action, but the enemies of organized society understand that it is there ready at a moment's notice to preserve the peace and prevent disorder. A hundred men, Mr. President, may be employed month after month peacefully, and during all that time perhaps not ten may be called into active service, but no wise man ever insists for that reason that the force is unnecessarily large, because he realizes that after all the principal purpose of the organization is to stand as a grim and silent shield between him and the lawless elements of society.

In the same way the Navy is the big stick of the nation. We build our Navy big and strong, not for purposes of aggression, but for purposes of defense. We maintain it at a high standard of efficiency, not to make war, but to conserve the peace. The people of this great Republic being a peace-loving people, ought to be given the ability to be a peace-compelling people as well. No navy, however big, can ever be used for any purpose of which the American people do not approve. For anyone to contend that the building of a great and powerful navy will make our people more aggressive or render war any more likely is to assert an idle and foolish thing. It might as well be asserted that because a man has big muscles and high courage he is therefore necessarily more quarrelsome.

In the one case as in the other, the very possession of this strength prevents trouble, because it constitutes an admonition to those who may be seeking strife to go elsewhere in search of it. In the last analysis it is neither the Army nor the Navy which makes war. It is the American people, and their poise of character, their sense of justice, their intelligence are all such that they will never consent to the making of any war that is not both just and necessary. If we shall build a great and powerful navy, it will deter others from seeking war against us, and between the two things—namely, our own desire for peace and the wholesome respect which our obvious strength will inspire in others—an unjust or unnecessary war will become almost impossible.

Upon the other hand, Mr. President, we are told that a foreign war is an impossibilty and therefore a greater navy is unnecessary. No man has any authority for making that assertion. He would be justified in saying the chances of war are remote, but they are not impossible. War is always possible just as fire and pestilence are always possible. We have not yet reached the millenium. There have been wars from the beginning, and there will be wars to the end until that day shall come, when, to paraphrase the language of Tennyson—

> The war drum throbs no longer and the battle flags are furled
> In the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

It is no doubt a melancholy fact, but it is a fact nevertheless, that the nations of this world, when their interests are involved, respect power a good deal more than they respect sentiment. It is quite true that in the past our diplomacy has been sufficient in the vast majority of instances to settle our diplomatic disputes, and it will be sufficient for that purpose in the future. But in the future as in the past there will come that occasional, exceptional day of great stress when our battle ships and our great guns will do more to preserve the credit and the honor of this nation than all the diplomacy which can be practiced between now and the day of judgment. It is that exceptional one day—and not the three hundred and sixty-four days—which I have in mind in casting my vote in favor of this amendment. The historic gentleman from Texas expressed my thought precisely when he said:

> You do not often need a gun in Texas, but when you do you need it mighty sudden.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Utah pardon an interruption at this point?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I will remind him that in the border land, especially between Texas and Mexico, when they have a dance, and when it is understood that it will be a peaceful dance, they always deposit their guns and check them, knowing by experience that the absence of guns insures a peaceful entertainment, while the presence of guns may entail the reverse.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In just a moment I will.

Mr. CARTER. I should be glad to have the Senator's comments upon both observations at once. The same rule relative to the checking of guns preliminary to a dance in Texas applies to a cake walk in North Carolina, when gentlemen are requested to check their razors upon entering.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This discussion on the habits in Texas in reference to dances and of the people of other localities in reference to cake walks, with which the two Senators seem to be so familiar, is very interesting. But I suggest that while there may be peaceful dances and peaceful cake walks, there are not any peaceful wars. When we get into war we do not want to have our guns checked. We want to have them on hand.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator, and that is, whether he can suggest any nation which in the eventuality of disturbance will check its navy?

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that one can not answer the inquiry at this time without infringing too much upon the time of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator might say at once whether he thinks any foreign nation would be willing to check its navy.

Mr. CLAPP. I am perfectly willing to say now, in my humble judgment, that the nations of the world will not check the development of their navies in the presence of a sudden and unexplained development to a fourfold ratio of our own Navy.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think these nations will check their naval development, whatever we do.

Mr. President, the argument for economy which has been made here does not appeal to me with any great force. The Senators who exhibit so much alarm for the safety of the Treasury because of this proposition to appropriate an additional $22,000,000 for the national defense will have laid before them in a few days a bill appropriating twenty or thirty million dollars to build some additional post-offices in the United States. I am inclined to think they will vote for the bill with the utmost tranquillity. I do not complain of this. It is right. I am in favor of that bill, and I shall vote for it as I vote for this proposition, because I think it is a wise and proper expenditure of the public money and because I think this nation is rich enough to afford it. But as between the two measures, this proposition, in my judgment, is vastly more important in the proportion that the national defense is more important than the national comfort.

To build battle ships costs money, it is true, but war costs more. War not only costs money, but costs human lives and human heartache and human suffering, none of which can be measured in terms of dollars and cents.

Mr. President, if I had my way the great fleet which now lies in the Pacific waters would remain there permanently, and we would build upon this side another fleet big enough and powerful enough and efficient enough to protect this rich and populous coast against even the most unexpected contingency. If we shall do that and in the course of fifty years prevent a single war, we shall have justified every dollar of expenditure which may be made in that time. If we shall do that and war shall not come, so much the better. If we shall do that and war shall come, so much the better also, because we will then be prepared to meet the emergency with honor and with success.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this debate seems already quite too protracted. I should not venture to consume the time of the Senate at all were it not for some things said and other things to be inferred from what has been said in the course of the discussion on this question. No Senator is required to explain why he votes a certain way, but it is sometimes better, not necessarily to attempt to convince others, but candidly to state the impelling motive for action on an important question.

The present situation is very simple in one aspect and very serious in another. To the end that we may draw something of a clear view from what has been said and done, I will briefly recapitulate what has gone before this discussion.

In 1905 the President of the United States in a well-considered message complimented the Congress and the country upon the steady, conservative growth of our Navy. He wisely suggested that it would be well to counteract deterioration and to steadily add something to existing strength by constructing one battle ship each year.

In 1906 substantially the same recommendation was made, but the President suggested in December of last year that four battle ships be provided for at this time instead of one. The Congress authorized the construction of two battle ships, following the message of 1905, and it provided for two battle ships following the message of 1906.

There was a variance only in number, the President recommending one and the Congress, having in mind a continuance of its steady, conservative policy, free from any manifestation of fright, authorizing the construction of two battle ships each year.

When the President in December last suggested the propriety of constructing four battle ships, the Senate, without regard to party lines, in conformity with the habit which has grown up, naturally felt inclined to accept the views of the President. But a committee of the other body, consisting of nineteen members, thoroughly skilled and experienced in the consideration of naval legislation, concluded, with only two dissenting voices, that two battle ships, to be authorized this year as last, would respond to the needs of the country and comport with the best judgment of the committee. The House of Representatives, by substantially two-thirds majority, sustained that view.

Thus the measure came for consideration to this body and was duly referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. That committee, consisting of Members under whose care the new American Navy has been built up, concluded unanimously that the construction of two battle ships was wise, and that the construction of additional battle ships was unnecessary and inexpedient. So the committee unanimously reported to the Senate the bill of the House without amendment as regards the number of battle ships to be authorized.

At this point the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] presented an amendment proposing to strike out the word "two" and insert the word "four," so that the bill will read "four battle ships" instead of two, if the amendment is adopted. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the chairman of the committee, suggested that the Senate's mind was made up, and a vote might be taken. The Senate had been considering this subject.

It had been a matter of discussion in the public press of the country. It had been considered in committees of both Houses. Extensive debates in the other branch appeared in extenso in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from day to day, in which debates Members had cited every fact and circumstance that has been recited or referred to in the course of this protracted discussion in the Senate. So I think the Senator from Maine was clearly within the proprieties in saying that in his judgment the mind of the Senate was made up and it would be well to take a vote. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] at this point——

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly.

Mr. FLINT. Does the Senator from Montana insist as a general proposition that every measure which has been considered in the House of Representatives and has been debated there should, without one word of debate in this body, be considered as having a majority in favor of it?

Mr. CARTER. That is not the statement made. The Senator from Maine said that the Senate had considered this subject fully, and, he thought, was ready to vote. I think the Senate is ready to vote now. I am not giving undue prominence to any of the many avenues of information upon which the Senate has deliberated or through which it has acquired knowledge on the subject.

Mr. CLAPP. Including the Senator's own effort.

Mr. CARTER. I hope that will count for something. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] thereupon proceeded to catechise and lecture the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] for presuming to suggest that this honorable body would proceed to a vote without deliberation, and thereby destroy the ancient and honorable reputation of the Senate as a deliberative body. I was led to believe that the thanks of the membership might be due to the distinguished Senator from Indiana for flying to the relief of the Senate's imperiled reputation in that direction.

He would be so entitled to our eternal thanks were it not for the definition of the word "deliberate." I find in the dictionary, and will have inserted in my remarks the definitions of the word "deliberate." "Deliberate" means to think over, to weigh, to balance, to consider. Now, Senators are very much like folks. Some folks speak without deliberating, and other folks deliberate without speaking, and still others deliberate and speak. I am not classifying in this behalf, but merely attempting to define mental methods.

But the Senator, not content with this assault upon the Senator from Maine, proceeded to marshal a line of alleged historical facts. I was led, when the Senator from Indiana was catechising the Senator from Maine, to the thought that if we should resolve the Senate into a school for the study of naval construction, history, and power, the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Maine, would be entitled to a professorship, teaching a postgraduate course, while most of the balance of us would be in knee breeches and shirt waists in the kindergarten class of that school.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I was about to suggest, if the Senator from Montana was going to make comments upon the Senator from Indiana, that it would be well to have the latter Senator present.

Mr. CARTER. I observe he is here. The Senator from Maine, by thirty-eight years of superb and spotless service in the halls of Congress, has become entitled to a place in the front rank of the high class of American statesmen. I am free to say, as to the American Navy, or the new Navy, more properly speaking, not one dollar has ever been appropriated in any bill for its creation or maintenance except in a bill reported by the Senator from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. When he says, with the support of his entire committee, that this conservative measure is the wise and prudent limit of present development in our naval construction, I believe he is speaking with sufficient justification.

But, aside from the criticism upon the Senator from Maine and the defense of this as a deliberative body, the Senator from Indiana shook my faith in both his capacity as a prophet and his keenness of penetration in all matters relating to correct historical deduction. He cited us cases wherein we had been suddenly plunged into war, and said all wars come suddenly, unexpectedly. He cited the war, the so-called "war," with Tripoli, made renowned by the exploits of Commodore Decatur.

Mr. President, that is not important here, but it is important to determine somewhat of the kind of facts with which Senators deal on those commonplace matters with which we are all familiar. In 1795 we began paying tribute to the Barbary pirates. There was, except when we purchased peace, a state of war thenceforward until Commodore Decatur went to Tripoli in 1804. The flagstaff of the American consulate at Tripoli was cut down in 1801, and that act was a declaration of war. It was three years thereafter before we took notice of that war. It had been brewing for almost a generation. It did not come upon the country suddenly at all.

The war of 1812, the Senator says, burst from the clouds, as it were. Mr. President, that war was germinated in the days of George Washington.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator misquotes me. All wars had been germinating for a long time, but when they come they come suddenly, in spite of prophecies that they will not take place.

Mr. CARTER. The two wars referred to did not come suddenly, and they did not come unexpectedly. They did not come as quick as the American people thought they ought to come.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator deny that right down almost to the outbreak of hostilities between this country and Spain there were statements by very eminent and very conservative men that there would not be and could not be a war? I have the authorities here. Does he deny that?

Mr. CARTER. I suppose some Senators did not think there was a demand for it——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The point was with reference to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], that he had said that war was "absolutely impossible." I cited instances to show that prophecies had been made as to wars being utterly "impossible" to come, and yet, in spite of such prophecies, within a very short time they were upon us. That is the statement I made.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator referred to the Trent affair, and stated that the Trent affair had almost precipitated war unexpectedly. The truth is that Mason and Slidell were captured on the Trent, and Secretary Seward and Mr. Lincoln completely backed down and disavowed the act of the commander of the vessel and left nothing to fight about.

Then the little riot down in New Orleans was cited as a case that ought to be considered in connection with this bill. Twenty-five thousand dollars settled the difficulty in New Orleans. Would this country or any country go to war over that kind of a proposition?

Take our Spanish-American war, which the Senator suggests burst suddenly and unexpectedly upon the country. We practically ordered the Spanish minister out of this city, and I suppose if we had had two more battle ships we would have ducked him in the Potomac River. We ordered the minister out of the Capital and began shooting at the Spaniards. Yet we were surprised by the war.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will ask the Senator to keep down to the facts. I want to ask the Senator whether he thinks the demand for the war was supported by the American people.

Mr. CARTER. Whether the war was supported by the American people?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Was the demand for it supported by the American people?

Mr. CARTER. I think if the American people had considered more thoroughly, had taken more time, had been less inflamed by loose talk of war——

Mr. ALDRICH. And in the Senate.

Mr. CARTER. And largely in this body——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall put on record here to-day or to-morrow the language of certain Senators that I think myself was loose.

Mr. CARTER. Undoubtedly the American people supported the war. The Congress declared war and the American people supported it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But before it was declared was that the sentiment throughout the country?

Mr. CARTER. I doubt that very much.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to call the Senator's attention to what was said here with reference to that war. I quoted the remarks of the Senator from Maine from the RECORD three months before the war broke out, stating that the cause of the insurrectionists in Cuba had no support whatever in this country. I had his remarks as found in the RECORD, and I quoted them, although the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] differed distinctly from him at that time.

Now, that is what I called attention to, and, since the Senator is defending the Senator from Maine and attacking me, he may as well have the benefit of it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was a member of this body during that period, and I will say that notwithstanding the utterances that were made in this Chamber for or against the war, there never was a moment from the explosion in the harbor of Habana by which the battle ship Maine was blown up to the time of the war when there was any doubt in my mind that the American people were for war.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, if the Senator from Montana will permit me, the Senator from Maine on the contrary, and it is in the RECORD, and I quoted it last Friday, said three months before the war that it was not supported by the country at all.

I want to say another thing in that connection. I happened to be, in an humble way and out of public life, one of the men who was distinctly against having that war come on before we were prepared, and I thought it very unwise on the part of eminent and most excellent men who were urging it before we were ready. Now, the Senator is discussing one question and using language about another. He was not mistaken in saying that the war had been brewing for a long time. The point I was making, and it is in the RECORD, is that when we were almost on the verge of war it was the opinion of very able men in this country that it would not come and could not come. And the Senator from Maine actually used the expression that it was not supported throughout the country. Therefore, if he were wrong in that matter, he might be wrong here.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CARTER. In a moment.

Mr. President, I do not propose at this time to enter into a discussion of the causes or the results of the Spanish-American war. I do say, however, that the Congress having declared war and the Congress having largely worked itself up to the war spirit, the American people did as they will always do, fly to the rescue of the flag and defend the honor of the country, and inquire into the causes leading to the struggle a little later on if necessary. It brings up merely the old suggestion of Decatur, "Our country; right or wrong, our country."

Now, I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I perhaps should not interrupt the Senator at all, but I was in this body when we discussed the Spanish-American war and the causes leading to it, and I think at that time I was in pretty close touch with the people of the country, whatever may have happened since. My recollection is that the people of this country supported what was done in that respect. I remember the pressure was so strong that we should take some positive action that at the Republican national convention which met at St. Louis in 1896 we found it necessary, as we thought, to adopt a plank that really looked in that direction and which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] reminds me that he helped to draft. Neither one of us is warlike, both of us are peaceful, and we were willing to fight for peace if necessary, but that was the situation for more than a year prior to the breaking out of the Spanish-American war. After I came into this body we were discussing it constantly during the year 1897 and down until the Maine was sunk in the harbor of Habana, in February, 1898, and then followed war. It was impossible to resist the demand for it after that occurrence.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the sinking of the Maine was the fulminating cap. If that event had not occurred, the serene and patient efforts and the skilled diplomacy of William McKinley and his Secretary of State would have brought about satisfactory results without the shedding of blood.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As long as the Senate is considering the historic situation just preceding the Spanish war, I wish to say that prior to the Maine disaster and during the Administration of Mr. Cleveland there was war in Cuba, which everybody recognized. Over 250,000 soldiers had been sent over to put it down. Both Houses of Congress took cognizance of the serious condition of Cuban affairs.

I fully believe that our war with Spain would not have taken place at all if Congress and the President had been in accord in giving belligerent rights to Cuba. If a state of war had been recognized, as it could have been under the recognized rules of international law, she would have fought her own fight with Spain, and America perhaps might have avoided the responsibility afterwards assumed by us.

Mr. President, it is not too much to say that the House of Representatives passed the resolution and I think the Senate passed it. But the President treated it as a nullity, because it was a concurrent resolution and merely an expression of legislative opinion having no binding effect upon him as a matter of law.

I happen to be cognizant of some of the things that took place prior to that war. I was a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House at that time, during which this matter came up, and I feel very sure, and I have no hesitation in putting it upon record, that the war with Spain upon the part of the United States would have been avoided if Congress and the Executive had been in accord in conferring belligerent rights upon the insurgent de facto government.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I think it will be readily inferred from all that has been said that the Spanish war did not come upon us suddenly.

Now, the next question interjected is——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. As the Senator has referred several times to the fact that the Spanish war came on a sudden, if he is referring to me, of course I used absolutely no such language nor any statement from which it could be inferred. What I said had reference to this, that the Senator from Maine predicted three months before the war broke out (and I will say that I have his remarks right here) that the insurgents had no sympathy whatever among the American people.

Mr. BACON. I am sure the Senator from Indiana does not know how much his remarks are appreciated in this debate or he would speak louder.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the only point I will say to the Senator. The Senator, of course, will not intentionally put words in my mouth that I did not use. Here is what the Senator from Maine said——

Mr. CARTER. As to the contention between the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Indiana, I beg leave to ask that it be interjected somewhere else.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator was interjecting it. He was talking about it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I think it is very apparent by the respectful silence that I have observed that at present, at least, there is no controversy between the Senator from Indiana and myself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not in the least. The Senator does not deny what he said.

Mr. HALE. This matter is going on very much to my satisfaction.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator does not deny what he said.

Mr. HALE. I do not in any way interfere with it. I have some things to say, but while things are going on this way I am content.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will recognize the right we all accord to each other in contributing to some particular point, but I merely pointed that out to show that the ablest and wisest of men right on the verge of a conflict often think that it is impossible and not supported by the country, and they are sometimes wrong; that that is a natural proposition.

Mr. HALE. Of course, the deduction from that is that as to this whole matter, if I was wrong then, I am wrong now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; not at all. I stated distinctly the reverse.

Mr. HALE. Did not the Senator mean by referring to the fact that I was wrong about the war with Spain and did not believe that it would come, to draw a moral that I am wrong now—that there was danger then of war and now there is danger of war? I disagree utterly and totally with the Senator upon that point.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I repeated it because the Senator from Montana was bringing up the point which he thought I made at that time, but which, as a matter of fact, I did not make. I referred to it, I will say, only to show that the Senator was one of a large number of the ablest statesmen we have had all through our history who were mistaken about these things, and I pointed that out merely to show that the statement that war is an impossibility is not new.

I shall not interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I was not trying to place any words in the Senator's mouth, for two reasons. First, it is not necessary; and second, I am not qualified for that task. I do not wish to be understood as misrepresenting the Senator. I did not pretend to quote verbatim, but I do pretend to speak from the general impression created by what he said as well as specific words used by him from time to time.

The Boer war was cited as another instance why we should vote for four battle ships instead of two, and that was suggested as one of the wars put down by naval power. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] well answered that by saying that the Boer war was largely suppressed by the American mule. He ought to have said the Missouri mule.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And not very much to our credit.

Mr. CARTER. It was not much to our credit. The Montana cayuse contributed his portion to that great struggle. There was not a shot fired by a man-of-war in connection with that struggle, as far as I have ever heard. Certainly the poor Boers did not fire any shot from a vessel, because they did not have any. The naval power had nothing to do with the Boer war.

Then the Russian-Japanese war is brought forward and the Chinese-Japanese war, and the glorious days of the early months of 1898 are brought back vividly into this Chamber.

I remember, sir, the yellow telegrams in 1898 coming in from that enterprising paper, the New York Journal, and other great journals of civilization like it, urging Senators upon this floor to expedite the issue of war. I noticed the other day the same yellow missives coming through the Chamber from enterprising sources endeavoring thus to produce the thrilling effect necessary to work men up to the pitch of battle.

Mr. President, it was amazing to me that any Senator or number of Senators should expect a single supporting vote in this Chamber in favor of four battle ships, or any battle ships, in the presence of the hue and cry of impending war, or what is the just equivalent of it—the eloquent plea of the Senator from Indiana for peace in the presence of grim-visaged war his own imagination had conjured up out of the absence of two more battle ships. The peace of the world hung trembling in the balance, with only a few pounds of steel and a few guns between us and a world-wide conflagration.

Mr. President, the Chief Magistrate refrained from giving any specific reason for the four battle ships. It was not necessary that he should give any reason. We might have assented to the four battle ships in the midst of that silence preceding the vote, which the Senator from Maine suggested was due deliberation. But after this florid, lurid, warlike appeal for the preservation of the imperiled world's peace by preparing now for the dire issue of war, I for one say that I look upon the mission of this great Republic as a mission of peace, and I will not willingly consent to have it assume an hysterical or frightened attitude in the midst of the nations of the earth in order that we may either repel a fancied approach of war or demonstrate our own rugged courage and bravery.

The American nation now has substantially 100,000,000 people. In 1930, on the same rate of increase as occurred between 1890 and 1900, we will have 150,000,000 people. By 1940 we will have substantially 200,000,000 people. We have to-day the largest number of Christian people ever loyally devoted to any flag in any age. Our mission has always been one of peace. The God of the universe apparently intended that we should execute a mission of peace, because he has cushioned our coasts with two mighty oceans, constituting a line of defense without any menacing power either to the north or south upon the mainland.

In the old days of the sailing vessel we had something to fear from foreign fleets coming up against our coasts, but in these days of steam power the capacity of coal bunkers will always measure the range of naval activity.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana what would be his idea about peace with the outlying possessions in the Atlantic and in the Pacific?

Mr. CARTER. I think it was Abraham Lincoln who said—and the figure carries with it in an overwhelming way a mighty truth—that all the combined armies of the world can not take a drink of water out of the Ohio River unless we want to let them. The nations of Europe are not as happily situated as we are.

I remember during a short visit across the water some years ago—a very brief one, indeed—I inquired of the man who was presiding as clerk or proprietor at the hotel as to where the limit of their system of stamp assessments stopped. He said, "We have stamps on everything. We are taxed on our income, we are compelled to procure stamps to put on every bill and every check and every receipt, and everything that passes as business." I asked, "Why all these taxes?" The reply was, "The great army, the immense army to maintain." I said, "Why do you not disband the army?" He said, "These outside states would crush us like an eggshell if we did. We have got to keep the army in order to protect our property, our identity, and our honor."

A nation situated in that condition is not in a position to lead in the column of peace. It is in constant danger of invasion or destruction. Disarmament of a European state can not be expected as a means of reaching universal peace. I think it has been given to this country, made up of contributions from the loins of the best of all Europe, molded into a mighty nation, not Celtic, not Anglo-Saxon, but now and forever to be an American nation and an American people, self-reliant, just, and capable of commanding peace at home and giving a worthy example in favor of its preservation abroad.

Mr. President, if we could step aside and see for a moment with any clearness of vision our relation to the world, we would hesitate before throwing the gage of battle into the face of the Orient.

Our good people are the natural progeny of the people who were driven from the Caspian and the Bosphorus and the shores of the Mediterranean across Europe, pursued by the Asiatics, occasionally conquered at points and places, but still tenaciously adhering to the doctrine underlying the Christian religion, to wit, that man has an individual responsibility, and that as an individual responsible man he can not belong to any other man. That theory left this world, as far as our people controlled it, without a master and without a slave.

War was the song our ancestors sung in dealing with the oriental character, and with what success, I pray? The cleavage between our civilization and oriental civilization on the line of Turkey is as clear as the cleavage of that desk is. Northern Africa is to-day as it was twenty centuries ago. The guns are resounding in northern Africa now, a continuation of an old conflict of two thousand years' standing. We are the vanguard of the Aryan race, and we are approaching from the East the same problems our ancestors approached from the West and failed to solve. They elected to engage in protracted war. That war has been without any distinct results in advancing Western civilization. Some fifty-odd years ago an American fleet dropped anchor in one of the harbors of the Nippon Empire. We were given the privilege of introducing to the family of nations the country of which we are all proud—Japan.

And let me, Senators, call your attention to this one significant historical fact, that Christian or Western civilization has made more progress in Japan in five decades than the warring factions of Europe made in the Orient in twenty centuries.

These apt people possess fine brain power, indomitable energy, and unquestioned courage. They first observed the value of the material products of our civilization, they adopted our ways, and to-day they have constitutional government, and Christian missionaries are welcomed everywhere in the island of Japan. Treaty rights are fairly respected, international obligations are assumed and discharged, and this is the nation, it is suggested, we should marshal up battle ships in order to control. It is not our policy to control Japan or its destinies, except through the beneficent influence of our institutions, which we hope may finally reach around this globe to the starting point in the ancient valley of the Euphrates.

Why, Mr. President, whenever a vote is to be taken in the Senate which shall indicate to the Japanese people, or to anyone in the Orient or elsewhere, that, in the absence of impending danger, in the absence of any present difficulty, we are proceeding to arm ourselves for aggressive warfare, my vote shall be cast against that measure, regardless of who recommends it.

I think we owe a duty to civilization, and the highest duty in that behalf is to occupy the position of the world's peacemaker. I am with the President's message of 1905. We want a navy for defense, not for aggression. We want to have an army, not of subjugation or invasion, but an army skeletonized and ready for emergency when it arises; but we do not want to maintain armies proportionately as are maintained in the little states of Europe, each constantly imperiling the other's existence.

If we vote for four battle ships after this discussion, if we vote for four battle ships after this long and needless talk about war, we will thereby send a message across the ocean—a message subscribed to by the Senate of the United States as a part of the treaty-making power of the Government, the only part of the legislative machinery coming in contact with foreign relations—that we deliberately believe that such an emergency has arisen as to cause us now to depart from our well-established, conservative, and progressive system of naval construction and to prepare at once for the eventualties of aggressive war.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I will ask the Senator from Montana what would be his construction of the message of the President of the United States recommending that we should do this very thing?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I am happy to announce from the text that the President does not pretend to advance any urgent reason for wanting four battle ships instead of two. He stated in 1905 that, in his belief, one battle ship every year would stay deterioration and make a little progress. He has changed his view about it, and it appears that Congress had changed, too, prior to the President's change, by providing for two instead of one. But Congress has not been advised by the President of any impending emergency. For aught we know, from any source—and I think our information is reliable—there is no danger of war at present or in the immediate future, and there is no reason for a departure from our well-considered and conservative method of naval construction.

But there are weighty reasons furnished by this debate for avoiding what will appear to be a response to this war-like declamation, this grave apprehension of a disturbance of the peace which we think exists only in imagination here, but which, if given credence by our votes, would fly away as a fixed conviction of the American people that they were about to be cast into war.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator from Montana will agree with me that the trouble about this matter is not the President's message, but it is the unauthorized interpretation of that message which has been placed upon it here in this Chamber?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I have endeavored to say that I agree with the Senator in his trite and apt suggestion of the fact.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not "trite;" surely not "trite." The Senator said "trite." He did not mean "trite," of course.

Mr. CARTER. Well, "apt." I always yield to the Senator on words. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I have labored to little purpose if I have not made it apparent that it is my solemn and deliberate judgment that whatsoever may have been the disposition of Senators when this debate started, the course of the debate, the reasons assigned in support of the amendment, the needless flashing in the air of the lightnings of war, make it the duty of every Senator to vote down any amendment that can, in any colorable sense, give the approval of the Senate to the course of this debate and the reasons assigned in favor of the amendment. We have all heard of the court reaching a correct conclusion, but assigning wrong reasons for it. This may be one of the cases. This may be a good amendment, but it is supported by such infirm and recklessly exploited reasons that we have to vote down the amendment in order to discountenance the reasons given for its adoption.

I shall cast my vote against it, believing that duty requires me so to do. At the same time, I believe I can truthfully say that this is the first vote I have ever cast against the construction of an American vessel of war. I have in and out of season, in the other House and in this, supported, without variation or sign of change, the naval programme recommended by the committees of the respective Houses. I shall continue to do so, Mr. President. I have no idea whatever that two battle ships this year will preclude two battle ships next year, if it shall appear proper to the committee to continue the construction on that conservative basis. It may be that you will think four battle ships will be necessary next year. If so, we will vote them. It will not be long until we shall have the opportunity, but at this time I feel constrained by the sense of duty I owe to the country, menaced by a cloud of war through loose and inconsiderate declamation, to vote against this amendment, and I shall so vote with much pleasure.

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator takes his seat——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I should like, with his permission, in order that the RECORD may be complete upon the subject as to whether or not the Spanish war was a sudden war, to read a resolution which was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate two years before the war. [Laughter.] It was reported on the 5th of February, 1896, more than two years before the war. It is as follows:

February 5, 1896.—Mr. Morgan, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported the following concurrent resolution as a substitute for concurrent resolution No. 19, reported January 29, 1896:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the Government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba; and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

The minority of the committee, through Mr. Cameron, reported what I shall now read in place of the one which I have just read:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested to interpose his friendly offices with the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

Of course, it was a well-recognized fact that the adoption of either resolution meant war.

Mr. FLINT obtained the floor.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, in view of the remark of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] that the adoption of the amendment which I had the honor to propose would be in effect a message of war, I desire to insert in the RECORD, at the conclusion of his remarks, a statement from the President's message. The Senator from Montana says that the President of the United States did not give any reasons for urging upon Congress the necessity of providing for four battle ships instead of two. If the adoption of my amedment would be a message of war, then, Mr. President, I submit that message of war has already gone forth in the message which the President of the United States submitted to this Congress on the 14th instant. In that message the President said:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Let me again urge upon the Congress the need of providing for four battle ships of the best and most advanced type at this session. Prior to the recent Hague conference it had been my hope that an agreement could be reached between the different nations to limit the increase of naval armaments, and especially to limit the size of warships. Under these circumstances I felt that the construction of one battle ship a year would keep our Navy up to its then positive and relative strength. But actual experience showed not merely that it was impossible to obtain such an agreement for the limitation of armaments among the various leading powers, but that there was no likelihood whatever of obtaining it in the future within any reasonable time. Coincidentally with this discovery occurred a radical change in the building of battle ships among the great military nations—a change in accordance with which the most modern battle ships have been or are being constructed, of a size and armament which doubles, or more probably trebles, their effectiveness. Every other great naval nation has or is building a number of ships of this kind; we have provided for but two, and therefore the balance of power is now inclining against us. Under these conditions, to provide for but one or two battle ships a year is to provide that this nation, instead of advancing, shall go backward in naval rank and relative power among the great nations. Such a course would be unwise for us if we fronted merely on one ocean, and it is doubly unwise when we front on two oceans. As Chief Executive of the nation, and as Commander in Chief of the Navy, there is imposed upon me the solemn responsibility of advising the Congress of the measures vitally necessary to secure the peace and welfare of the Republic in the event of international complications which are even remotely possible. Having in view this solemn responsibility, I earnestly advise that the Congress now provide four battle ships of the most advanced type. I can not too emphatically say that this is a measure of peace and not of war.

And yet the Senator from Montana says that the President of the United States gave no reasons why he urged upon this Congress the construction of four battle ships in place of two. Therefore, Mr. President, I felt that it would probably be beneficial to the country to read, in connection with the speech of the Senator from Montana, what the President did say on that subject, so that they may know that he did express his reasons to Congress why four additional battle ships should be provided.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Before the Senator from California proceeds——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. And before the Senator from Washington resumes his seat I want to ask him a question simply to get information. I am not familiar with the message of the President of 1905, in which he recommended only one battle ship, and I want to ask the Senator, for he is doubtless familiar with it on that point, whether the President put that recommendation in his message upon the ground that The Hague Tribunal or a peace conference was about to reconvene and that it was anticipated there would be an agreement for the limitation of naval power?

Mr. PILES. No; I do not know whether that was the reason or not.

Mr. FORAKER. I asked the Senator simply for information.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I am very glad that the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] placed in the RECORD the message of the President of the United States to the Congress recommending the building of four battle ships instead of two. It is proper that this message should go in at this time. I had hoped that this discussion would go beyond the mere criticising of a Senator for words he may have used in this debate. We are here discussing a great question presented to this Congress in a special message from the President of the United States. To my mind, there is no necessity for discussing war in connection with the recommendation of our President; but it seems to me that the remarks of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and of the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] have been played on so that those who are opposed to four battle ships have been able to make that the issue, so as to deter Senators from voting as the President has recommended. It seems to me that the talk of war comes from those who want but two battle ships and not four. It seems to me, as outlined by the President in his message, there are good and sufficient reasons why we should have four battle ships, and that, too, eliminating any question as to war.

The pending bill came to the Senate from the House of Representatives on the 17th day of April, and on the 20th day of April it was reported from the committee and presented to the Senate. As reported to the Senate, it provides for two battle ships. The committee in the House also reported a provision for two battle ships, although there was a minority report in favor of four. Four battle ships have been recommended by the General Board of the Navy, by the Secretary of the Navy, and by the President of the United States.

It seems to me that there should not be the feeling that has been displayed here because of the fact that some of us are desirous of following the recommendations of the President, Secretary of the Navy, of the Naval Board, rather than the Naval Committee. No one has a higher opinion of the chairman of the Naval Committee than I have. I realize that he has had great experience, that he is master of this subject. I also realize the fact that my colleague [Mr. PERKINS], from my own State, has been a member of that committee for many years, and that he has been familiar with seafaring matters all his life. He has studied this subject, and he is also an authority on questions relating to the Navy of the United States. Those Senators, together with the other Senators on the committee, make a unanimous report to the Senate recommending the construction of but two battle ships, and it is with some reluctance that I find myself disagreeing with the chairman and other members of the Naval Committee and in favor of four battle ships.

I find, upon examining this question, that even the chairman of the Naval Committee finds that there have been at least some errors in the programme outlined for our Navy, and that is the lack of colliers, and this has been demonstrated by the cruise of the fleet to the Pacific.

Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the remarks of the Senator from Maine, made some time ago, in discussing the question of the fleet going to the Pacific. His statement is so strong that I prefer to quote it. He said:

Mr. HALE. I do not want to interfere with the line of the Senator's argument, but I am very largely in sympathy with him, for he has struck what is the weak point in our entire naval establishment, so far as ships are concerned. We are deplorably lacking in the essentials that make a great fleet not only formidable, but seaworthy.

The Senator said the other day, and the metaphor was not too strong, that without certain auxiliary ships the great battle ships of the United States fleet upon any waters outside of our own waters, in case of any emergency, with war threatened, would be derelicts, and it is too true.

Mr. HALE. The auxiliary force, Mr. President, that was improvised—I use that word, because it was not much more permanent than an improvised force—consisted, with but few exceptions, of transitory ships, yachts, small cruisers that were to be used for the emergency along the coasts and in the Caribbean Sea; but when the war ended they were found to be of little use. They made up an aggregate, and I have looked over the list time and again. Most of them were of no account and have gone out of use and are good for nothing to-day and would be good for nothing in any case of emergency.

Mr. President, it is a melancholy spectacle that this great fleet of ours in this regard presents to-day. It is the greatest fleet of great and formidable ships that the whole world has ever seen. It is completely manned. It is in every respect except one the most magnificent and formidable fleet of ships that any nation has ever put upon the waters of the globe.

Admiral Converse, who knows it root and branch, has so told us, and he is right. But this great fleet, which has been sent upon its voyage around the globe, is to-day absolutely dependent upon its motion, upon its existence as a moving fleet, on the indulgence of foreign powers.

I have here, Mr. President, a list of the colliers, without which a ship and a fleet can do nothing, that are to-day in attendance upon this fleet. There are only nine of our own. There are chartered from foreign owners attending this fleet of ours, enabling it to move, making it a movable fleet, twenty-eight foreign colliers. I have a list of them here—I will put it in the RECORD—ranging from 4,000 to 6,000 and odd tons each.

The list referred to is as follows:

Coal for the fleet going to the Pacific.

	Tons.
Government-owned colliers:
Ajax to Rio with	4,800
Brutus to Rio with	3,800
Nero to Rio with	3,500
Abarenda to Rio with	3,500
Hannibal to Trinidad with	2,000
Leonidas to Trinidad with	2,000
Marcellus to Trinidad with	2,000
Sterling to Para with	2,000
Cæsar to Rio with	2,800
Chartered foreign colliers:
Fortuna to Trinidad	4,224
Athalic to Trinidad	2,787
Kassala to Rio	5,150
Elialine to Punta Arenas	5,449
Janana to Punta Arenas	5,627
Ripley to Punta Arenas	5,073
Towergate to Punta Arenas	5,166
Hector to Callao	5,600
Hermiston to Callao	5,392
Earl of Douglas to Callao	5,361
St. Andrews to Callao	4,351
Falls of Orchy to Callao	5,714
Allenton to Magdalena Bay	6,321
Otterburn to Magdalena Bay	6,000
Strathtay to Magdalena Bay	5,308
Needles to Magdalena Bay	6,001
Baron Androssen to Magdalena Bay	6,002
Strathgyle to Magdalena Bay	5,367
Agapanthus to Magdalena Bay	4,832
Cape Finistere to San Francisco or Mare Island	6,510
Livingstonian to San Francisco or Mare Island	5,404
Guernsey to San Francisco or Mare Island	6,156
Earl of Carrick to San Francisco or Mare Island	4,940
Carlton to San Francisco or Mare Island	6,530
Inverkip to San Francisco or Mare Island	5,955
Braemont to San Francisco or Mare Island	4,808
Amherton to San Francisco or Mare Island	5,373
Madura to San Francisco or Mare Island	5,500

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if when that fleet was ordered on this tour about the globe there had been the least menace of war from any power, no government owning one of these foreign colliers would have allowed a single ship to be employed by us, and our fleet, magnificent as it is, with any menace of war upon the sky, without these foreign colliers would be as useless and—

As idle as a painted ship
Upon a painted ocean.

We do not realize this, Mr. President. I go further. If any complication should arise in the voyage of the ships, any danger, any menace of war in a foreign power, I do not know but that every foreign power represented in the ships which we have hired would feel compelled to withdraw them from the association of the fleet, and we would be hung up.

It is not, Mr. President, an agreeable thing to contemplate. We go on year after year building up and accumulating these immense ships at an enormous expenditure, and find ourselves, as we would in any emergency for which the ships are built, without a thing being done that makes the ships formidable as a fleet at sea. The Senator is right in his theories. There ought not to be another ship added to the American Navy until we add something that every other power has done to make the ships formidable in case of an emergency.

My colleague is right; the Senator from New Hampshire is right; we can not do it here. I do not think the Senator from Nevada wants to embarrass this bill; but when we come to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill I hope the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Maine, my colleague, and every thoughtful, patriotic Senator will join with me to try and see that something is done in this entirely neglected field that we have rashly and in the most foolhardy way neglected and abandoned in the past. Otherwise, Mr. President, if there is any call for the big ships, and they are to protect us in case of possible war, they are absolutely worthless unless we have something with which to build up an auxiliary fleet and to supply the ships that will enable them to move in the waters of the globe. Without these foreign ships, these colliers, Mr. President, we not only could not have gotten around Cape Horn, but we could not have gotten beyond the Caribbean Sea. Nobody has seemed to realize that. But when we come to the naval appropriation bill this matter will be laid before the Senate, and we will be made to consider what are the actual needs of the American Navy.

I call attention, Mr. President, to the remarks of the Senator from Maine for the reason that he realized that, at least in this respect, our fleet is in a very unsatisfactory condition.

Mr. President, there is another amendment that has been offered to this bill by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. It provides for the appropriation of $20,000,000 for colliers and for an auxiliary fleet. I will support an amendment such as the Senator from Nevada has offered, for it is apparent from the statement—which I have read and will include in my remarks—furnished by the Senator from Maine that the auxiliary fleet that is accompanying our battle ships to the Pacific Ocean as colliers are not American vessels and that there is great necessity for addition to our Navy of this kind.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from California to the fact that my amendment is not limited simply to the construction of colliers. It provides for an auxiliary navy, consisting of transports, colliers, scouts, dispatch boats, and other vessels necessary in aid of the fighting ships in case of war.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I think the amount fixed by the Senator from Nevada is perhaps more than is necessary at this time to provide simply for colliers, but it is necessary that we should provide colliers to accompany our fleet. On the Pacific we have a seaboard as long as that on the Atlantic, but we have from one end of that country to the other but four places that are fortified. We have, as a matter of fact, Mr. President, only one fortified place to amount to anything on the entire Pacific slope, and that is the city of San Francisco. That harbor is fortified. There are slight fortifications at San Diego, some on the Columbia River, and some on Puget Sound; and at this session we have provided appropriations for fortifying Puget Sound, San Francisco, San Pedro, and San Diego. I ask to include in my remarks a list of the places on the Atlantic coast that are fortified and also the places on the Gulf States that are fortified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The following localities in the United States are fortified:

Atlantic coast.

Portland, Me.; Portsmouth, N. H.; Boston, Mass.; New Bedford, Mass.; Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island; eastern entrance, Long Island; eastern entrance, New York; southern entrance, New York; Delaware River; Baltimore, Md.; Hampton Roads, Virginia; Potomac River; Cape Fear River; Charleston Harbor, South Carolina; Savannah River.

Gulf coast.

Key West, Fla.; Tampa, Fla.; Pensacola, Fla.; Mobile, Ala.; mouth of Mississippi River; Galveston, Tex.

Pacific coast.

San Diego, Cal.; San Francisco, Cal.; Columbia River, and Puget Sound.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, from this statement it will be seen that on the Pacific coast we have but four ports that are fortified, and only one of these where the fortifications are adequate, although we have over 3,000 miles of coast line.

At the time the fleet started for the Pacific there was not a battle ship upon the Pacific coast, and during the last two years there has been a general demand along the entire Pacific coast that war vessels should be sent there, not because of any fear of war, but as a matter of right, for the people of the coast thought that a part of the Navy should be located on the Pacific coast permanently.

When the fleet reached the Pacific coast another condition developed, a condition that was given as a reason why the fleet should not remain but should leave the Pacific and return to the Atlantic, namely, that we have not facilities for properly taking care of and repairing these great war vessels, for the reason that we have not sufficient naval stations on the Pacific coast.

I find that along the Atlantic coast there are nine naval stations as follows: Portsmouth, N. H.; Boston, Mass.; New York, N. Y.; League Island, Pa.; Norfolk, Va.; Port Royal, S. C.; Charleston, S. C.; Key West, Fla.; Pensacola, Fla. In addition, there are two other smaller naval stations, making eleven stations along the Atlantic coast. On the Pacific side we have but two places—Mare Island, which is fully equipped, and Bremerton, which is now being equipped. I think it can be demonstrated to any thinking man that if we are to be protected on the Pacific coast at least a part of the Navy should remain on the Pacific coast, and that proper facilities should be made for repairing and reconstructing these vessels.

I am in favor of four battle ships of the Dreadnought class, for the reason that it is necessary to construct four vessels of this type to keep our Navy at its relative position with other nations, and for the further reason that in my opinion it is necessary to keep one fleet in the Atlantic and one in the Pacific, to accomplish which we will have to build additional ships of this class.

We should have an even navy, and the discussion of naval affairs in the last year or two has demonstrated the fact, among naval men at least, that what is to be the vessel for the future is the great Dreadnought type of vessel, and I am simply contending and asking for four battle ships, so that our vessels of the Dreadnought class will be brought up to the standard of the rest of the Navy and equal to the navies of the world.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. CARTER. Is not the vessel of the Dreadnought type experimental?

Mr. FLINT. I think not. I do not understand from anything I have read that it is. The report of the Secretary of the Navy would certainly demonstrate that it is not an experiment.

Mr. CARTER. I observe that the morning papers chronicle a sad event, which is instructive in this, that an ordinary merchant passenger boat sunk one of the great war vessels of England by running into its side, pulled off from the conflict, and went back to port.

Mr. FLINT. It was a second-class vessel, and I am not willing to depend upon newspaper articles to determine whether ships of the Navy are of the proper construction or not. As a matter of fact I think it is not disputed that vessels of the Dreadnought type are now being built by all the great nations of the world, and all that I desire in supporting this amendment is to bring the United States, so far as vessels of this class are concerned, to the same standard that is maintained with respect to the rest of the Navy.

Mr. President, a great many people seemed to think that when this great fleet reached the Pacific coast it was away from home, as has been said a number of times in this debate. It is now in a home port, a part of this great country, and we on the Pacific coast are just as much entitled as is the Atlantic coast to have a great navy, and not only have a great navy, but have an equipment there sufficient to repair and take care of the fleet, keeping it there all the time. We should have sufficient navy-yards along the Pacific coast so that a fleet such as the Senator from Maine outlined in his remarks it is possible for us to have could be repaired on the Pacific coast.

Mr. President, the only difference between those who favor two and those of us who favor four battle ships is the fact that those favoring two think that our Navy now is sufficient without these additional battle ships. We who favor four battle ships believe our Navy, to be kept to its present standard, must have two more of these great new fighting machines.

I make the same plea for colliers sufficient to carry coal for the Navy that I do for these great fighting machines.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. CARTER. I am in hearty accord with the Senator's demand for the proper development of our naval equipment on the western coast, and being thus in accord with him I desire to inquire in what respect this bill fails to respond to the just demands of the west coast for the proper development of navy-yards on that coast—whether the matter has been neglected. If so, I will favor any amendment necessary properly to continue the development of the naval equipment of the west coast.

Mr. FLINT. In reply to the Senator from Montana I will say that the best evidence that the Pacific coast is not properly equipped is the fact that the Senator from Maine himself says that it is necessary to bring the fleet back to repair it properly.

But with nine navy-yards on the Atlantic coast within the same distance, it does seem radically wrong, with the same size of fleet on the Pacific coast, we should have only two navy-yards, and only one of those navy-yards equipped to-day so that it can build a ship. There is something radically wrong with a system that requires the fleet to leave the Pacific coast to go to the Atlantic coast to make these necessary repairs. We should have appropriations from time to time, in order that on the Pacific coast there will be navy-yards and docks fully equipped, so that fleets as large as the one now on the coast can be properly taken care of.

We have but one coaling station on the Pacific coast, unless you would designate what coal was stored at Bremerton a coaling station. At the last session I did secure, and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs gladly aided me in obtaining, appropriations for a coaling station in the harbor of San Diego. We should have more coaling stations and more navy-yards on the Pacific coast. I am not criticising the Committee on Naval Affairs, but am pointing out the needs of the Pacific coast.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FLINT. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the Senator's observations to lead to the conclusion that it is not an extra number of battle ships that we need, but an extra amount of accommodations for the battle ships we have, in so far as the west coast is concerned.

Mr. FLINT. Both.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FLINT. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to say that I think we all recognize that heretofore it has been almost accepted, as suggested the other day by certain Senators, that the true home and abiding place of our fleet is the Atlantic coast. It is a false idea. Both coasts need a navy; one coast should not appropriate all the Navy to itself, as the Atlantic coast heretofore has done. It should have a navy, but so should the Pacific coast.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to make upon this occasion a set speech, but to analyze in my feeble way some of the arguments which have been presented in favor of this sudden proposed change from a policy which has been pursued in the past with satisfaction to all. If the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] had made his speech at the opening of this debate and the Senate had stood to the issue as he framed it, we would have completed this debate in a very short time. If there had been presented to the Senate the issue as he framed it, and which is the real issue, whether with a due recognition of the patriotism of this body, in view of a desire for a navy commensurate with the honor of this country, the safety of our people, and the progress of peace, the ordering of two battle ships or four battle ships were necessary, we might have concluded it long ago. For the real question is, having due regard for the conditions I have enumerated, Should we now provide for the construction of two or four additional battle ships?

But this debate has taken a peculiar turn. I shall not attempt to analyze the words that appear this morning in the cold record of this debate, but to analyze the spirit of the debate as it bears upon these questions. We were referred first to the Trent affair. Either that affair had some bearing upon the question whether we should authorize four battle ships or two or it had no bearing at all. Unfortunately for the Senator who made the suggestion, the Trent affair, as it has already appeared, occurred before we had the Navy—which grew out of the great civil war—and that illustration necessarily was eliminated from this discussion.

When the Senator made reference to the Trent affair, it seemed to me that if he wanted an illustration where a foreign power finally arbitrated with us with the shadow of a great navy in the background, he might have taken the Alabama case. We had then successfully emerged from a great struggle. We had then, comparatively speaking, a great navy and a million men who had learned the art of war in the only school in which men can learn that art—that is, in the activities of war itself.

If England, in the Alabama affair, was actuated, as I believe she was not, by a thought of brute force on our side, it was not the Navy which we then had, but it was a condition which existed then, that exists to-day, and will exist as long as England's greatest colonial possession is separated by only an imaginary line from a people who number eighty or ninety millions. But I prefer to believe, sir, that England, even in that affair, was actuated by a nobler principle and acted upon a broader basis than the mere fear of brute force. That illustration, then, was unfortunate.

We are then cited to the case of the New Orleans incident, and when the Senator made that citation and closed the illustration by pointing to the fact that we paid $25,000 to the representatives of the Italians who were slain in New Orleans, I felt like asking him whether this great nation had paid that in cowardly fear of Italy, as she was in those years an infant to what she is to-day, and whether he thought if we had not paid it, Italy would have crossed the Atlantic and sponged us off the world's map. The Senator was unfortunate in his illustration, and this misfortune of his was inevitable because, sir, when you once start with error, error will defeat error, and it was error to inject into this discussion the issue which has been injected into it.

If we shall some day rise to that high ideal which is to-day a dream of some of the most thoughtful of our people, when we become the guiding star which leads to a sisterhood of nations founded upon the broad basis of universal peace, it will be a glorious career, and yet one of the brightest and proudest chapters which this Republic will then have placed upon history's page will be that relating to the Italian incident, when this great nation made reparation to a feeble nation that was absolutely powerless to secure it by the arbitrament of arms. It will ever stand to the credit and glory of this nation that we made that settlement with Italy under those circumstances, and that illustration must fade from this debate as having no bearing upon the question whether to-day we should order the construction of four battle ships, to be completed three years from now, or order the construction of two battle ships further than to show that a nation may be great in her generous impulses.

We were next referred to the Spanish war and told in mysterious tones that it had been stated upon eminent authority—and it is always so given here in debate that back in the background somewhere lies eminent authority—that if we had had three ships more we would not have had war with Spain. Mr. President, I can imagine that the American Republic might have had a navy so absolutely overpowering in comparison to Spain's, even when we declared war ourselves, that Spain would have submitted to humiliation rather than to resist; but for any man to say that the precise number of three more ships in our Navy would have averted war is either moonshine or the effects of moonshine. While we can not say how many more ships would have averted war, I propose to stand upon this floor and say that if we had had one ship less—and that one ship the Maine—we would not have had war with Spain in the manner in which war did come.

I am not going to be misunderstood upon this question, Mr. President. Along the pathway of human history the tide of human sacrifice has ever risen higher and higher, and it reached a lofty climax when in 1861 the people of the Northland, without the fear of invasion, without the fear of coercion, and with no thought of conquest or plunder, enveloped themselves in an immortal historic achievement. But I believe, sir, it went one step further when the best young blood of America went forth, without even a thought of our own institutions, to battle and die that a foreign race might be free. As we stand on yonder portico and gaze across the majestic river we can look to the spot where 1,100 of America's best and bravest young men sleep the eternal sleep, their sacrifice a benediction to an alien race. It stands without a parallel in all the glorious chapters of sacrifice in the cause of human liberty.

But that is one thing, and the conduct of this great nation with Spain at that crisis was another thing. That I might speak with authority beyond my own memory I asked a moment ago the remembrance of the junior Senator from Maine, and upon that authority I say now that until the Maine was blown up and until this Congress declared war there had not been one hostile act on the part of Spain, save so far as we may impute to Spanish perfidy the blowing up of the Maine. Had we acknowledged Cuba's belligerent rights, as we should have done, and later her independence, it might have resulted in war, but we did not pursue that course. If you want to trace the concrete cause, if you want to have the exploded match and the tinder box, of which the Senator spoke as the cause of war, it is found not in the absence of three great ships added to our Navy, but in the unfortunate fact that we sent one ship there upon that mission at a most inopportune time. That illustration was a most unfortunate illustration for the Senator's argument.

We are next presented with the suggestion that the man who would count dollars and cents in the balance with the nation's honor and the security of the people and the cause of peace is not worthy of recognition at the hands of manhood; and I agree with the Senator upon that proposition. But why was this question injected into this debate? Did the Senator believe there is a Senator on this floor who for one moment would count the cost if the nation's honor was in the balance, if the safety of the people was in the balance, if the cause of universal peace was in the balance? Ah, when it comes to the record we will be told that he stood here and distinctly disclaimed that intention; that he reiterated time and time again that there was no man in this Chamber who would count the cost in such a crisis. And so he did. Then, sir, why the suggestion?

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] answered it this morning in an analysis which should be read from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It could only be for one of two purposes—either to build up a man of straw that he might pound it down or that there might be conveyed to the public mind of this country the impression that notwithstanding his declaration that there was no want of patriotism in the Senate, nevertheless it was wanting, and the people thus be brought to the point of passion and prejudice by the injection into the debate of an issue which had no place in it.

We were told, Mr. President, that it is the man who has bared his breast to the battle's storm who is in favor of peace. Would the Senator be understood as implying that there is a man in this Chamber, whether he has seen war or not, who is not in favor of peace? Then why that suggestion? There can be but one answer—the answer I have already made.

We have been criticised here this morning for talking about war; that we have injected war into this debate. It began with talk of war, and it has been talk of war from start to finish. There have been false issues presented which have no place in the Senate. The time has come when some man ought to rise upon this floor and enter a protest against the custom that too long has prevailed here of recognizing that every man in this body is in favor of the best and the truest interests of this country, and then instead of presenting the details of measures designed to ultimately reach the desired end convey to the country the idea that the real issue here is one of patriotism and regard for the welfare of the people of this country and not of the question of how to reach the desired result.

I do not know, sir, nor can I help what may be the result of my remarks at the hands of the man who later will follow. He is my junior in years, but my senior in service in this body, and before I entered this body I was one of the thousands who looked to him with love and admiration.

But, sir, it was a surprise—nay, a disappointment—to hear him last Friday; for it is unfortunately my nature that when I like a man, I do like him. I looked forward to the time, sir, when, perhaps, if the people of my State were satisfied that I should remain in this Chamber, by my acquiescence I could help elevate him to what I regard as the highest position in this great Republic, namely, the acknowledged leader of the American Senate. His brilliant intellect, his generous impulse, and what I felt was an instinctive sense of fairness impelled me to admiration, even almost transcending the limits of admiration. But for years I have sat in this Chamber and seen false issues raised that the public might be prejudiced, that the public might be led from the real issue, when we were considering measures for one common purpose, differing possibly in the means to be employed, but all seeking one end; and yet the issue conveyed to the public that we were not differing upon the question of how to reach that end, but that we did differ as to the end and the time has come when there should be a protest.

We were then told that it would be mercenary to count dollars in connection with this great question of a nation's honor, its safety, and the progress of universal peace. The impossibility of reconciling error with right, and the argument proceeding upon an issue that did not exist in the Senate, it could inevitably only bristle with mistakes and unfortunate comparisons.

In the very next breath we are told that as a business proposition a great navy was an example of shining success. We were pointed to the record of England as proof of that proposition. Mr. President, it is not my purpose this morning to institute comparisons. When England started her colonial policy it was the policy of the nations to take and hold colonies by force, and England had to prepare for that condition. England had to maintain a great navy, and has been unable to free herself from the force of that tradition. Let us see what the result has been. It has been just as it has been in the case of every empire in the world's history that pursued that course. First, it drained the home country of its best material.

Witness the fact that in her colonial possessions throughout the world she has made most marvelous progress, marvelous because between an aristocracy at one end and a poverty-crushed mass at the other, she has drawn from the great middle class from her own home her best and strongest blood, draining her own land of this force which has so splendidly developed her great colonies. But, sir, that is not all.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] last Saturday told us of the distress and ruin in Italy, and he might have drawn a picture not quite so dark, but of the same character, as the result of England's boasted commercial policy. It is true a few people of that nation have amassed great wealth. It is true that for some years by wise fiscal policy she was enabled to loan credit in the development of this, our own land.

But those who go to England to-day—it has never been my fortune to visit that country—tell me of the distress and the poverty and the decay that crop out on every hand. And statistics—I do not believe much in statistics, for while it is said that figures never lie, they are the ready weapon of the prevaricator, and so I do not attach much importance to statistics—statistics prove the same thing. But there is other proof, and we do not have to take the say so of a tourist who tours through England, whether on the one hand he hobnobs with the aristocracy or on the other hand studies the mass at the foundation of her social and economic fabric. We have before us the fact that the boasted policy of England, the attempt to get trade at the mouth of the shotted gun, has brought England's once proud credit to the point where her securities are below par, depreciating year by year, enjoying a slight acceleration at the present, because of the depressed condition in our own markets, which permit of investment elsewhere.

There is the verdict of history upon the policy of forcing trade at the mouth of the gun or in the presence of hostile fleets. The Senator from North Dakota was criticized because he recently declared that we ought to secure a world-wide trade and now opposes what he thinks an unnecessary and unreasonably great navy. There is but one way to take the markets of the world, and that is first to produce what other nations want and then sell those productions at a price which induces the people to purchase them. That is the only true policy of extending trade. It is the only policy that will survive the disastrous effort of every empire that ever tried to put wealth into her coffers through the aid of armies and navies.

Now, Mr. President, a few words more and I am done. We have heard a great deal here to-day about peace. We have been told, not in exact terms, but by subtle suggestion, that there are impending some mysterious conditions that make it important that we shall have four battle ships, not added to-day to our Navy, for it will be three long years before, in the ordinary course of events, they would be added to our Navy, but their construction authorized now.

I say it is absolutely absurd to suggest that any unknown condition prevails in our relations to the world that requires not four battle ships to-day, for that might be, but which requires exactly four battle ships three years from now. The man does not live who can cast a horoscope and tell us how many ships to a certainty we will need three years from now. Why is it the magic number is four? If a man wants two ships, then he is subject to the criticism that was made here by pointing out the duty of Congress in regard to the nation's honor, the safety of a people, and the cause of peace. If he wants three ships, he is still recreant to that great trust. If he wants five ships, he is still recreant to the trust. But, forsooth, it must be four ships, no more and no less. That is the test of our loyalty to the best interests and the highest standard of legislative patriotism.

Mr. President, it has been said that there is no danger of war. Then why this talk about war? If there is no danger of war, then we are asked, Why build any ships? You might as well reply that if there is danger of war, why limit them to the paltry number of four? If I believed there was that danger of war which those who favor four battle ships profess to believe there is not, then I would not talk about the addition of four ships, but would insist upon many more. The fact is, the argument falls of its own force, the one proposition confronting the other, like the argument that was made last Friday, that we as Senators, upon our oaths as Senators, owe a duty to the country regardless of what the House says upon this subject, and then in the same breath we were told that that duty which rests upon each one of us individually is to be abdicated because, forsooth, some Senator puts a construction of his own which has no basis upon a suggestion of some one individual.

It is one error combating and destroying the other. There is no logic in an argument of that kind. We have a right to consider what the House has done. We have a right to consider what the people think. We have a right to consider what the Executive thinks. Then, after all, it is our individual right, as it is our individual duty, to act, not in the light of what one branch of the Government or another may think, but what it seems to us upon our oaths as Senators best to be done.

It is said that a great navy will conduce to peace. Mr. President, you may go to-day into a western section where naturally the first people who enter that section go armed. In a few years the arms disappear. They disappear in obedience to the most powerful law known to civilized man, and that is the law of public opinion. But somewhere in the interval between the time when all men carry arms and the time when the community condemns a man who carries arms some one has had the nerve, the physical courage, and the moral courage to stand out first and discard his arms.

Now, I am not going to be misunderstood. We can not disband our Navy; no one for a moment thinks of that. We owe it to this country to maintain a certain standard of navy, a navy that, according to each man's conscience and judgment—and to no other conscience or judgment on this earth—brings the Navy to the standard of one commensurate with the honor of his country, the safety of the people, and the cause of universal peace.

We indulge in a peace conference. We stand here day after day talking peace and saying to the world we want universal peace, and then we say to the world, "We will give you peace; we will proceed to arm that we may enforce peace."

It must, sir, provoke a smile from the people of other nations. Here we are without any new conditions. Nothing can call for or justify the proposed change. We are prating of peace, and then for no cause that we can assign we are immediately doubling our preparations for war.

The Senator from Massachusetts said in his speech that it was the talk of war that made war. There is something that talks louder than the human voice, and that is the constant preparation for war, not along the lines that we have pursued when the conditions did not vary from the condition of to-day, but to-day without any cause on earth assigned we are asked suddenly to double our preparations.

Mr. President, that is not the way to promote a spirit of peace. I say we can not disband our Navy, but we can show the nations of the earth that we, this great power, with our vast resources, our splendid historical traditions which are inspiration to great and grand achievements, can be the first nation, not to disband our Navy, but to put a stop to the useless building of navies beyond reason.

Ah, but it will be said that while the nation by law or the people by sentiment may put a stop to carrying weapons we can not put a stop on our part to the building of the navies of other nations. That, in a measure, sir, is true. No mandate of ours will do it, but a mandate of ours will cause them to build more navies. Does any man suppose for one moment that if we build four more battle ships, with nothing in the world assigned as the cause for the sudden augmentation of our Navy, other nations will not go on increasing their navies? To the extent, then, of showing the world that we do not propose to do that, and to the extent of not forcing them to do it, we may in truth and in fact be the apostle and the vanguard of peace.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, certainly there is no new member of this body who feels a greater respect and reverence for the older statesmen of this body than I do. I hold them in the greatest honor. I have great regard for their experience in the management of the affairs of the Government. In regard to the pending bill, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this body is following the Committee on Naval Affairs without a single exception save this one item.

Of all the items reported on the naval appropriation bill it is suggested that the battle-ship item alone should be changed, and even in this case it seems to me that to ask the building of four ships rather than two is but accentuating the report of the committee and emphasizing and enlarging what they have recommended. The only argument against four ships that has appealed to my judgment is the argument of cost.

I rather take it, both in this Chamber and in the other branch of the National Legislature, that the question of economy is really the true reason for insisting on two battle ships instead of four battle ships.

I do not think that those who represent the several States of the Union and who have not had the honor to have been long members of his body should be thought by the older members either presuming or offensive or looked upon with disfavor when they venture to express their sincere opinions about our national naval policy.

I have listened with great interest to this debate, and with the indulgence of the Senate I would like within the very few minutes I shall speak to explain the reasons which have led me to favor the present authorization of four ships of the Dreadnought class.

The arguments which have been leveled against authorizing the present building of four ships I have listened to with interest and carefully considered.

The first great argument is that if we have four ships instead of two ships it will be construed as a threat of proposed war with some of the friendly powers, or at least will carry a suspicion of an aggressive purpose on our part.

Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senate to the great moderation of the United States as compared to the other great powers of the world in this particular. At present Great Britain has seventy-eight battle ships and armored cruisers in the Atlantic, with ten on the keel, two laying, and three others of the Dreadnought class available to purchase (Brazil ships), making fifteen more ships as a total of the Dreadnought class which will be available for Great Britain within a short time.

Shall we take offense against Great Britain because of this mighty armament, because of this great power on the sea? No, Mr. President, we have no reason for offense nor for suspicion. Great Britain has a magnificent and tremendous commerce, a vast merchant marine, and her diplomacy covers the world. She has a right to prepare herself against any eventuality whatever.

Germany, in like manner, has twenty-seven of these great ships available on the Atlantic, five on the keel and eight projected, making thirteen of these giant war ships which Germany is proposing to build in the immediate future. When the United States, with a more tremendous commerce, proposes four war ships, shall Germany take offense, with twice and more than twice as many projected? And in speaking of the German programme I call attention only to that of the immediate future and not up to the year 1917, up to which we have just reason to believe the programme of four battle ships annually has been determined, or forty new battle ships.

I call attention to France, which has thirty-one of these vast war ships available for the Atlantic coast, with six additional ships of this class with keels laid, and six more projected, making twelve. Why shall France regard with disfavor the building of four ships by the United States?

In like manner Japan has two leviathans with keels laid and seven more proposed, making nine ships of this gigantic class, and Japan furnishes us an example of what they believe to be wise and judicious. Are we unfriendly or the just object of suspicion if we authorize half that number? This argument against four battle ships is obviously unsound and shows the poverty of argument against this enlargement of the Navy.

I call attention to the Navy Year Book, compiled by Pitman Pulsifer, 1907, and the report of the various great nations as to the number and displacement of war ships built and building of 1,000 or more tons and of torpedo craft of more than 50 tons.

The table referred to is as follows:

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the tonnage of Great Britain is 1,821,610 and of the United States 771,758.

The tonnage of France is 836,112; of Germany, 680,782; Japan, 451,320; Russia, 320,040. With the new type of great ships building, which I have pointed out, the United States will take the third or fourth place unless it shall also follow in the plan laid out by other nations.

I can not think this is wise or businesslike or economical in the highest and best sense.

The argument has been made that a big navy invites competition in warlike preparations, and this argument is true. Except for the fact that the other great nations have been preparing these great armaments there would be no occasion for the United States to make like preparation. The dignity of this nation and the power of this nation and the relative rank of this nation compel the United States to parallel in some degree the enlargement of the naval power of other nations upon the sea.

The argument has been advanced that we can not get the men to man these ships, and yet it will take years to prepare the ships, and with all the thousands of seamen which are already upon our ships we are told that it is impossible to obtain the men. I insist that there should be no serious difficulty whatever in preparing the men by the time these ships shall have been built, and that plans should be made, if the ships are to be constructed, for the preparation of men who shall be competent to take charge of them.

Strong stress has been laid upon the views of the President—1905, that he argued for only one ship a year; of 1906, that he argued for only one ship while Congress provided two, twice as many as he asked for. I respond to that argument by asking, why is it that Congress provided twice as many ships if Congress did not think the argument was sound to so enlarge the Navy? It shows that the President has been more conservative than Congress in the past and that his present careful argument for four should be listened to as the voice of a proven conservative.

You are committed upon your own argument. You have yourself said that there was needed twice as many as the President said in 1905 and in 1906; and now, when he recommends four, it is alleged upon the floor that he gives no reason whatever. I have analyzed that message, and he gives many good and sufficient reasons. I think it would be well to read the President's message before denouncing it and alleging its lack of information and its want of sound reason. I call your attention to the reasons given by the President:

First. The failure of an agreement between the "different nations to limit the increase of naval armaments."

Second. The failure to secure an agreement "especially to limit the size of war ships."

Third. The improbability of obtaining such agreements in future within a reasonable time.

Fourth. A radical change in size of the new battle ships of other nations, making them twice or three times as effective.

Fifth. Every other great naval nation has or is building a number of such huge ships.

Sixth. If we build but two per annum, we "shall go backward in naval rank and relative power among the great nations."

Seventh. As Chief Executive and Commander in Chief, the President, on his solemn responsibility, earnestly advises four battle ships of the most advanced type.

Eighth. He emphatically declares it a measure of peace—not of war.
Ninth. He said we need a navy commensurate with our powers and needs.
Tenth. It "will be the surest guaranty and safeguard of peace."
Eleventh. "Undefended wealth invites aggression."
Twelfth. "Our liberty of speech and action" may develop sudden trouble with foreign powers.
Thirteenth. A proud nation jealous of its honor can not be content to rely for peace upon the forbearance of other powers.
Fourteenth. The power of self-defense is essential to the protection of our interests.
Fifteenth. Quotes George Washington's opinion in support of the principles involved.

And yet the opponents of the President deny that he gives any reason for the request, and appear to show the most transparent satisfaction in denouncing the argument for four ships, as if there were some peculiar pleasure in making light of and holding up to contempt the President's wishes and views.

The argument that authorizing four ships would be offensive to friendly nations seems to me to be peculiarly unsound. Why should Great Britain be offended, when she is herself proposing twelve of these great ships? Why should Germany be offended, when she is herself proposing thirteen of these great ships, and why should France be offended, when she proposes for herself twelve of these great ships, or Japan, which proposes nine? There is obviously no sound reason in such logic.

Mr. President, the argument in favor of four ships depends first of all upon our national policy. Since 1883 we have built up a modern navy, but really our Navy has been built up substantially since the Spanish war. At the time of the Spanish war the total expenditure for our Navy was only about $49,000,000, and now the able Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] points out to us what is true, that we have expended over $300,000,000 for building this modern Navy. I ask you why have you built this great Navy if there is no cause and no sound reason for it? And why shall we hesitate so seriously about putting ourselves upon an equality with the nations of Europe and of the Orient in the matter of these new ships, which are estimated to be two or three times more powerful than previous first-class battle ships.

A great navy is obviously of supreme importance to the United States in order to maintain its relative dignity, its relative rank of naval power with the other great nations of the world. It is a question of relative strength, and the history of the world records that no nation is respected in the same degree when it has not the power to enforce at the cannon's mouth, if necessary, its just and righteous demands.

China with her 400,000,000 of population and with her policy of peace, peace at any price, has become the prey of the commercial nations of the world, and only their jealousy to-day prevents its dismemberment.

A navy is of extreme importance to our national honor and our national commerce. This country can not be safe from insult or from wrong if this country is powerless to reprove it by force, if necessary. That was the policy laid down by our fathers. It was the policy laid down by George Washington in the early days of this Republic; and the very words of President Washington are appealed to by President Roosevelt to persuade the Senate of the importance of preserving for the United States its relative rank and power with the other great nations of the world.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a very important matter—one which appeals to me, at least, with great force, and which I believe has not yet been suggested in this debate. I call the attention of the Senate to the growth of our imports and our exports since the Spanish war. Table 228 of the Statistical Record of the Progress of the United States exhibits the following: That our total imported merchandise in 1898 was $616,049,654. After a hundred years we had only reached $616,049,654 of imports, and yet in eight years—since that Spanish war and since we have put our flag upon the ocean—it has increased to $1,226,562,446. In a hundred years we had not increased our imports before our modern navy as in eight years after we placed it on exhibition.

The following table shows in detail our increase in imports during those years:

Year.	Per cent of total.	Total value.
1899	.68	697,148,489
1900	.64	849,941,184
1901	.74	823,172,165
1902	.62	903,320,948
1903	.58	1,025,719,237
1904	.68	991,087,371

But I call your attention to a like growth also of our exports, as shown in Table No. 228. In 1896 the exports of this country were $863,200,487. We had lived one hundred years of national life; we had reached up to that time only this volume of exports, and yet after our Navy had made us known to the other peoples of the world our exports doubled, until in ten short years they amounted in 1906 to $1,717,953,382.

The following is a table of our exports of domestic merchandise during this period:

1899	1,203,031,222
1902	1,355,481,861
1903	1,392,231,302
1906	1,717,953,382

Is our Navy of no value to our people in obtaining foreign markets?

Our immigration from 1898 to 1906 was as follows:

1906	1,100,735

Did our Navy in the Spanish war advertise and make attractive our great Republic, or not?

I think, as a matter of advertisment, we are justified in giving the United States a navy which shall occupy at least a second place in the rank of the world's powers.

We have heard much said about war, about the probability of war. I take it, Mr. President, that there is not a Senator on this floor who really believes that we are in any danger of war from any nation on the earth, and, least of all perhaps, in danger from Japan. For my single self, speaking of that great nation of the Orient, I can hardly find words to express my admiration for their wonderful development. I not only feel the greatest admiration for them, but I feel the warmest friendship and fraternal kindness, and so I believe do all who are within these walls. We have no hostility against any nation on the earth; on the contrary, it is the policy of the people of the United States and of their representatives here to promote in every way possible a spirit of benevolence, a spirit of kindness, and a spirit of fraternity with all the nations of the earth.

Our nation has been conspicuous in endeavoring to bring about arbitration treaties, yielding our own differences to arbitration in an international court. We have led in that, and I will say here and now that, not only am I willing to build up the American Navy so as to give it its relative place of respectability and power, but I am willing to vote for $40,000,000 more as a fund for conducting a deliberate propaganda for the permanent establishment of peace and good will among the nations of all the earth. I think that the Senate ought to find means by which such a propaganda should become one of its noble accomplishments, so that this Senate shall become the voice, the active agency, of the American people in promoting an actual abiding, guaranteed peace throughout the nations of the world. There is not a nation on the American continent which would not gladly follow the United States with locked arms in that effort. It can be accomplished; and I believe in the providence of God that it will be accomplished before many years shall have passed.

But in the meantime, Mr. President, I do think that the United States would be derelict if it permitted itself to lag behind the line of progress in the matter of armament and make of itself a third-rate or fourth-rate or fifth-rate naval power. When we come to consider that aspect, there is hardly any of those who advocate only two battle ships at this time who would be willing to openly say or to think to themselves that it would be wise for the United States to take the third or the fourth or the fifth rank in naval power on the sea.

Mr. President, with me it comes down to the question of relative authority.

The weight of authority is in favor of our maintaining our place as the second naval power on the sea. Our English-speaking brethren are a long way ahead of us in power on the ocean, and we can not and need not have any desire to rival them, because we have a multitude of ties of blood, of common language, of common religion and common commerce, and of ideals and thoughts and opinions which are common bonds between us. We furnish them their food and materials for their factories.

We are bound together in such a way that a breach between the English-speaking peoples of the world is inconceivable and impossible.

With regard to the question of authority, whether it is a good thing to have a strong navy, I call your attention to the fact that we have the authority of all the nations of the world. What about Great Britain, with 1,800,000,000 tons? What about Germany, struggling with all her might to take a stronger place upon the sea? What about France's great efforts along the same line? Are their opinions of no value? We have the authority of these great nations, whose acts demonstrate that they believe that it is necessary for them to protect their commerce, their honor, their integrity, and their dominions.

Our own expenditures of over $300,000,000 in the last twenty-five years show the steadfast opinions of changing Congresses favoring a vigorous expansion of our Navy.

It was boldly stated that the Naval Committee of the House favored four battle ships, but only desisted on the ground of economy, urged by the financial leaders. We have every reason—the maintenance of our dignity, honor, commerce, and diplomacy—and as a business investment besides.

But we have, in addition to that, Mr. President, the substantial reasons given and the weight of the authority of our Commander in Chief, the President of the United States. His reasons have not been answered. Their existence has merely been denied. It has merely been said that he gave no reasons. He gave an abundance of reasons, and his first reason was that, while he had made the most resolute effort to establish the principle of limiting the naval armaments among the nations of the world at The Hague, he had failed, and was not within measurable distance of obtaining success.

More than that, he called attention to the extreme power of the Dreadnought class of battle ships—equal to two or three of the old first-class battle ships. He called attention to the fact that if this Congress does not provide four of these ships at this session, this nation will go back from the second place to the third place, and the statistics which I have inserted in my remarks, and to which I have called attention, demonstrate the correctness of the President's position.

He points out another reason, namely, that we have two great coasts to protect, making it doubly necessary for us to have a sufficient armament on the sea, and he declares that it is—

> Vitally necessary to secure the peace and welfare of the Republic in the event of international complications which are even remotely possible.

I deprecate as much as any Senator any suggestion that would wound the feelings of any of the great nations of the world, with all of whom we are on the most friendly terms; and, certainly, I do not believe that it has been any just ground of offense to any of the great nations of the world that this debate should have proceeded along the lines that it has. There has been no one on this floor who has declared that comparatively modest addition to our Navy was proposed either for offense or for defense against a proposed or fancied aggression of any of the great powers. On the contrary, everyone has declared our friendship for all nations and has made that declaration truly, because America is absolutely known to be at profound peace with all the nations of the world and has no purpose of aggression of any kind or character.

The purpose of the United States, as shown by its policy, is to submit its own grievances—if any arise—to arbitration of an impartial international tribunal; and when we take that advanced step there can be no just ground of offense on the part of any other nation on the earth or any suspicion of our purpose against it.

There was never a more economical time to do this work than now. Hundreds of thousands of men are out of employment. This expenditure will give employment that will stimulate our people's industries and help revive the depression due to the recent artificial panic.

Mr. President, I regard this expenditure as a wise national economy, which will abundantly justify itself. We can easily afford it, and will never feel it.

Mr. President, one suggestion, and I shall conclude. I want to say that when I consider the weight of the authority of the gentlemen of the Naval Committee, with the unsatisfying reasons they suggest, or the weight of authority on the other side, the President and the reasons he gives; when I come to consider this question of relative authority—and I am compelled to decide it one way or the other way—I propose to decide it on the safe side of enlarging our Navy.

I prefer to make an error, if I do err, on the safe side, on the side of giving our Navy a greater relative strength, rather than to give our Navy a weaker position; I shall prefer to vote to give our Navy the second rank among the navies of the world, rather than adopt a policy leading our Navy to the third or fourth rank in dignity and power, and I believe my beloved State of Oklahoma and the people of the United States will approve the vote.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, when the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] in 1905 was pressing with great vigor the ship-subsidy bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Commerce and which had been approved by the Merchant Marine Commission that had been in session for some time, my attention was for the first time called to the fact that our Navy was a disproportioned navy; that whilst it had a great force of fighting ships which could maintain themselves successfully as fighting ships, they lacked the supporting ships so necessary in case of war—the colliers, the scouts, the transports, the dispatch boats, the tugs, and other vessels constituting an auxiliary navy and just as essential to the success of a fighting force as the fighting ships themselves.

That view was set forth in a report prepared by the General Board of War of the Navy, over which Admiral Dewey presided, a report which was prepared for the Merchant Marine Commission at the suggestion of its chairman and presented by him with a view to supporting a ship-subsidy bill then before the Senate. The question was asked the War Board as to what vessels would be necessary as an auxiliary navy in case of war, and their reply is contained in a document, which I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD—that about 200 ships, costing on the average, I believe, about $1,000,000 each, would be necessary in order to support the fighting ships of the Navy in case of war, particularly if that war were such a war as endangered the retention of our insular possessions.

I then sought to have an amendment in the nature of a substitute acted upon by the Senate providing for the immediate construction of about thirty-two ships, costing a million dollars each, which I claimed could serve a double purpose. On the one hand, in case of war they could act as transports, colliers, or scouts in the Navy, and in times of peace they could be used as training ships for our naval reserve, and also in opening up new routes of mail and commerce to South American, Australian, and oriental ports. The Senator from New Hampshire at that time was contending that thirty-two vessels were necessary for that service, and he sought to secure them by a subsidy, which it was estimated would in a period of ten years aggregate an expenditure upon the part of the National Government of about $32,000,000.

I insisted upon it that if that expenditure was necessary in the interest of commerce, if it was necessary in order to promote commerce with those ports, the United States Government should subsidize American ships for ten years to the extent of $32,000,000, it would be a wiser policy for the Government itself to construct the thirty-two ships as a part of the auxiliary navy, holding them for use as training ships for our Naval Reserve, manning them in large degree with our Naval Reserve, and turning them over in times of peace under lease to shipping companies, who could themselves open up these new routes of commerce and of mail. I contended that at the end of ten years, if we pursued the system of subsidy, the Government would own nothing; but if we pursued the system of ownership, the Government would at the end of ten years have the thirty-two ships into which its $32,000,000 had gone. I insisted upon it that we could accomplish a double purpose—promote commerce with other nations, open up new commercial regions with which it is our desire to connect ourselves, and establish training ships for the sailors whom it is our desire to train for our Navy, and have at the same time these ships in reserve in case of war for use as an auxiliary navy such as I have described.

I presented the same view later on in the dying hours of the ship-subsidy bill, and recently, in a few remarks on the 20th of March, when the Senator from New Hampshire was presenting another subsidy measure involving simply a mail subvention, I presented an amendment, not in the hope of securing its passage, but with a view of bringing to the attention of the Senate the importance of this question, the importance of establishing a well-proportioned navy, not a lopsided navy, composed only of fighting ships, but a navy including also not only other ships absolutely essential to support and maintain the fighting ships in case of war. My voice was raised here, without an echoing note anywhere, until finally the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] raised his voice, and I propose to quote his words briefly. Whilst I was on the floor the Senator from Maine interrupted me and said:

> Mr. HALE. I do not want to interfere with the line of the Senator's argument, but I am very largely in sympathy with him, for he has struck what is the weak point in our entire naval establishment, so far as ships are concerned. We are deplorably lacking in the essentials that make a great fleet not only formidable, but seaworthy.

The Senator said the other day, and the metaphor was not too strong, that without certain auxiliary ships the great battle ships of the United States fleet upon any waters outside of our own waters, in case of any emergency, with war threatened, would be derelicts, and it is too true.

In another place the Senator from Maine said:

Mr. President, it is a melancholy spectacle that this great fleet of ours in this regard presents to-day. It is the greatest fleet of great and formidable ships that the whole world has ever seen. It is completely manned. It is in every respect except one the most magnificent and formidable fleet of ships that any nation has ever put upon the waters of the globe.

The Senator from Maine then went on to show the number of colliers that it was necessary to employ in the present cruise of our great fleet—not American colliers, but colliers of foreign registry—and the Senator from Maine went on to show that in case of war the obligations of neutrality would prevent any one of these foreign countries permitting its ships of foreign registry from coming to our rescue. The Senator added:

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if when that fleet was ordered on this tour about the globe there had been the least menace of war from any power, no government owning one of these foreign colliers would have allowed a single ship to be employed by us, and our fleet, magnificent as it is, with any menace of war upon the sky, without these foreign colliers would be as useless and—

As idle as a painted ship
Upon a painted ocean.

The Senator from Maine further said:

It is not, Mr. President, an agreeable thing to contemplate. We go on year after year building up and accumulating these immense ships at an enormous expenditure, and find ourselves, as we would in any emergency for which the ships are built, without a thing being done that makes the ships formidable as a fleet at sea. The Senator is right in his theories. There ought not to be another ship added to the American Navy until we add something that every other power has done to make the ships formidable in case of an emergency.

And then the Senator from Maine issued me an invitation, in response to which I will at the proper time offer an amendment to this bill. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Maine a moment, I wish to read his invitation. The Senator from Maine said:

I do not think the Senator from Nevada wants to embarrass this bill; but when we come to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill I hope the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Maine, my colleague, and every thoughtful, patriotic Senator will join with me to try and see that something is done in this entirely neglected field that we have rashly and in the most foolhardy way neglected and abandoned in the past.

Now, Mr. President, in view of the emphatic utterance of the Senator from Maine, I must say that this bill is a most "lame and impotent conclusion." It is true that this bill does provide for a few colliers. It provided as it came from the House for two fleet colliers, each costing $1,800,000, or a total of $3,600,000. To that provision the Senate committee has added another provision for the purchase of three new steam colliers—I presume of slower speed—costing each not exceeding $600,000. So that we have a total of five ships added to our auxiliary navy at a total cost of about $5,000,000; and yet the Senator from Maine showed in his remarks upon a previous occasion that the colliers of foreign registry then employed by our fleet in Pacific waters were some twenty-eight in number, probably costing from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000. And yet in case of war we would need not only colliers but scouts, transports, dispatch boats, and other vessels, which would be as unattainable from the American register as the colliers would be.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator. In the long time that this bill has taken of the consideration of the Senate, in the absence of the Senator, the same questions which he now raises have come up, and I have stated what the committee felt itself justified in doing. So far as concerns the equipment of our fleet with colliers, the most important subject, the bill as reported by the committee will not satisfy the Senator. It is not a large programme, but it is something in the right direction. The bill provides five good serviceable colliers at a very considerable expense, and I should hope that it would be a permanant feature of naval bills for the future, and that in considering the continued appropriations for the Navy—and I expect so long as I am a member of this body to see appropriations for maintaining a strong, serviceable Navy—we should go on each year and make as a part of that programme provision for colliers that may accompany the fleet in any emergency and which will always be a desirable and necessary part of the establishment.

Of course the Senator knows, while it has been said to be rather an ignoble consideration, that we have to attend somewhat to the conditions of the revenue, the great expenditures, and the approaching alarming deficit. We can not consider the Navy nor the Army, nor any part of the Government, without taking that into account, and, all things considered, the committee believed that this provision for five efficient, valuable, serviceable colliers is all that we can do this year. If we had a surfeit of money and did not know what to do with it, we might go more largely, which I should be very glad to do at as early a day as possible, into the other questions of the auxiliary navy, the building up of ships in the merchant marine, as England does and other great powers, that shall be built in cooperation with the Navy Department and that can be used in an emergency as valuable accessories to the Navy. Other powers have a large list, not on paper, but existing of the auxiliary navy. I wish we had more. I wish the condition of our finances and our revenue justified us entering that field.

The Senator is right in his general view of what we ought to do. But we have gone on devoting ourselves mainly, as the Senator and all Senators know, to the increase of the Navy proper, the ships of the Navy, and have not given great attention to these other very essential accessories to that part of the establishment. I do not believe that this year we are justified in doing more than what the bill provides in that respect.

So I would be glad if I could join with the Senator, and I am indebted to him for the early and valuable suggestions that he made, which certainly attracted my attention and, which have led, I think, and the Senator is entitled to credit for that, to some development in this direction.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am very glad to learn that this is but the commencement of a continuous policy. The Senator from Maine will not think me too critical in saying that the action of the committee was hardly a realization of the hope which he indulged in his former speech in the Senate, for at that time his utterance was emphatic that there should not be another ship in the Navy built until this needed want was filled. I agree with the Senator from Maine that there should be a limit to naval expenditures. I would gladly see all military expenditures reduced. I would not willingly favor any large increase in the present measure of expenditures. What I hoped for was that the committee would refuse to report in favor of more fighting ships until the auxiliary navy was brought up to a certain standard.

Such a policy would not mean larger annual expenditures on the part of the Government, but it would mean a usable navy, a proportioned navy—a navy in which each part was adjusted in operation to every other part—not a great machine of war, with essential parts absolutely lacking to such a degree that the machine would break down in case of war. I have likened our Navy of splendid fighting ships to a vigorous man, with strong lungs, strong heart, firm muscles, but lacking in an arm or a leg. And that is what our Navy is to-day. It is a navy without arms. It is a navy without legs. It is a navy without the ability to support itself in case of war, without a merchant marine upon which it can call for these auxiliary ships.

We not only are without transports and colliers and dispatch boats, but we have not them within our reach, so far as our domestic resources are concerned and so far as the world itself is concerned and our ability to call upon other nations in case of war for these auxiliary ships and to purchase them—ships now under foreign registry. The Senator from Maine has well said that to permit such action upon their part would be a violation of the laws of neutrality.

Mr. President, therefore I am as opposed as the Senator is to any increase in the total of our naval expenditures. But I suggest that if we are to expend $100,000,000, of that sum $20,000,000 might now be well spent in making this a proportioned navy, in securing the parts now lacking to its efficient and successful operation, and that this work of increasing our auxiliary navy ought not only to be commenced now, but it ought to progress vigorously, at the expense, if necessary, of the immediate construction of fighting ships, of which we to-day have a surplusage as compared with these useful ships so necessary in case of war.

Judged by present conditions we have a surplusage of one kind of ships and we are lacking in other essential ships, and the businesslike thing is, while limiting the total expenditure, to divide that expenditure, so as to provide the needed parts of this Navy and not to increase those parts of which we have at present a surplusage.

Mr. President, while discussing this point I wish to say that I do not believe we should enter upon the policy of creating an auxiliary navy unless we pursue it in a businesslike way. I know it is not regarded as essential to apply business considerations to governmental work. Whenever an attempt is made to do it the cry is raised that the Government should not go into business, and the terrors of governmental ownership are held before us. I do not wish to see the Government go into business. I do not want to see Government ownership of any business. But it does seem to me that when the Government enters upon a great work, it should enter upon it in a businesslike way.

This auxiliary navy is needed for the emergency of war. What are we to do with it during the period of peace? Can not we settle that in a businesslike way? One complaint is made that it is difficult to get the men to man the ships in case of war; that we have not a merchant marine which is training men for this service; and the necessity of a great naval reserve has been pointed out. It has been insisted that we should have a reserve of at least 10,000 trained men to meet the emergency of war. England has 30,000 such men. It seems to me the suggestion is a wise one, and the question is, How shall we train that naval reserve—on land or at sea? Certainly these ships can be used as training ships, officered by surplus officers of the Navy, who will be needed in case of war. A training school on a ship will cost less than a training school on land. We have a training school at Goat Island, in California, and possibly we have others. These ships can be used in that way.

But it occurs to me that the expenditure for moving these ships from port to port in the training of the naval reserve should be made in a businesslike way, and if any part of it can be saved it should be. What trade is the Government of the United States endeavoring to reach out for? The promotion of commerce with South America, with Australia, and with the Orient. Complaint is made every day that our merchant marine has declined. Complaint is made every day that the merchant marine of the United States can not compete with the marine of any other country upon waters not monopolized by the United States. We all know that the cost of American ships is at least one-fourth more than that of ships of foreign register. We all know that in building American ships the American shipbuilder has to pay the steel trust of America $8 a ton more for its steel than does the foreign shipbuilder building for a foreign country and buying the steel from the same trust. We all know, also, that as a result of the high protective system which we have established in this country everything in this country, as compared with other countries, is upon stilts, everything adjusted to the monopoly of production in the great industrial establishments secured by the maintenance of this high tariff wall.

The result is that the cost of administration of the American ship, manned by American sailors, is from 30 to 40 and 50 per cent higher than that on foreign ships. How, then, can we expect to open up these lines of commerce and of mail to South America, Australia, and the Orient when our merchant marine labors under these obvious disadvantages in competition with other countries?

I ask, then, why these ships, this auxiliary navy, which we are creating, should not be used in a businesslike way, not in traversing routes now established, but in opening up new routes; not under the direction of the Government itself, but intrusted by lease under favorable conditions to private shipping companies, the Government retaining its control over the reserves on the ships, maintaining its officers on the ships, and thus aiding to that degree in the economical administration of the ships, so far as the carrier company is concerned, and thus these ships can be used for the purpose of auxiliary ships in case of war, for training schools for our reserves, and the temporary purpose of aiding our mercantile interests in establishing new routes of mail and commerce to South America and the Orient. By doing that we can largely diminish the cost of the operation of these ships, diminish the cost of the training school itself, diminish the cost of the operation of the auxiliary navy, and at the same time promote the commerce and business of the country.

Why should not the United States Government when it is doing or proposes to do a paternal thing—for ship subsidy is paternalism—do it in a businesslike way? If it is to pay out money to aid in building ships for our merchant marine let it own the ships. If it is to aid in the administration of such ships let it share in the benefits of the administration, in the development and the training of the Naval Reserves, capable of responding efficiently to the call of the country in case of war.

Mr. President, in that way we may possibly open up new lines, and when business is established private shipping companies will take the place of these auxiliary ships, which are simply the advance agents of commerce, and we may then have real ships upon the ocean. At present one of the chief arguments for the creation of a great navy is protection of the merchant marine. That is the plea made by every country. That is the reason why England has a great navy; that is the reason why Germany has a great navy; that is the reason why France has a great navy. We have built our Navy in advance of our merchant marine. We have built our Navy to protect phantom ships. I would have these ships real ships. First, auxiliary ships of the Navy as advance agents of commerce, and then, as the result of established business and commerce, American lines bearing the American flag which the American Navy will protect throughout the world.

Mr. President, at the suggestion of the Senator from California, I have modified the amendment which I have proposed as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington, by striking out the last few lines, after the word "peace," in line 7, and I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. After line 5, on page 87, it is proposed to insert:

For an auxiliary navy consisting of transports, colliers, scouts, dispatch boats, and other vessels necessary in aid of the fighting ships in case of war, $20,000,000, and the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Postmaster-General are hereby constituted a commission to recommend to Congress a plan for utilizing such ships in times of peace.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words regarding the appointment of this commission. It is true that this is a naval bill, and it is true that these are naval expenditures, and they are to be made under the direction and control of the Navy Department, but it seems to me obvious that inasmuch as it is desirable that this auxiliary navy should be built and conducted in a businesslike way, with a view to as small an expenditure as possible in the future in the way of operating expenses, we should at all events study a plan under which it can be made useful, self-compensatory, or partly compensatory. Now, what Departments of the Government are interested in these questions? Obviously the Navy Department, because of its control of the Navy; obviously the Department of Commerce and Labor, which has a mixed jurisdiction over the entire subject of commerce, and obviously the Post-Office Department, which Department has control of the mails.

We are seeking now to promote an auxiliary navy. We are seeking to promote commerce with South America, Australia, and the Orient, and we are seeking to establish new lines of mails. Why, therefore, would it not be wise to put the three heads of those Departments into one commission with a view to a study of the subject, so that a ship can be constructed which will be useful for all the purposes to which I have referred—for the Navy, the commerce, and the mails—and a commission that can study a plan for economically working out the best interests of the Government in creating a proportioned Navy and in advancing commerce and new lines of mail.

No power is given to them except the power of recommendation, and I would ask the Senator from Maine whether he would have any objection to the appointment in this bill of such a commission.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am not prepared to assent to that, because I do not think that it has had mature consideration enough to be embodied as a part of the appropriation bill. We are dealing with the money that we should expend. The question of a commission to take up great subjects I do not think has been presented sufficiently to justify putting on that matter at this stage, when the vote must be taken to-night by an agreement of the Senate.

I do not say that at the proper time I would not favor such a commission, although my experience is that government by commission is not very practical or effectual government. Commissions do not accomplish much unless you would give them absolute power, which we can not grant. An advisory commission never has effectuated much.

Without taking up more time, because I know the Senator desires to go on, I will say that I am not prepared to agree to that proposition upon this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator can not see his way clear to accept at all events this part of the amendment, for it always seems to me that when a question of this kind is up for discussion before the Senate that is the appropriate time for action. I am always opposed to the policy of drift, and that has been the policy of legislation ever since I have served in the House and in the Senate. I believe that now is the appropriate time for action upon this subject, and I regret, in view of the fact that the Senator himself has so emphasized the importance of action upon this subject he does not see his way clear to assent to the proposition now.

The Senator remarks that the work of commissions is not always satisfactory; that we can not give them full power, for that might mean, I presume, a delegation of legislative power, and that advisory commissions rarely accomplish much good. Yet the Senator will bear me out in the fact that we rarely consider an important bill involving the work of any Department without submitting that bill to the head of the Department, with a view to securing the report of the Department, involving the view of the experienced men there regarding the work. I find that that has been done in the recent mail subvention bill prepared by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

If the Senator will refer to the report upon that bill, he will find that it was submitted to the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Secretary of the Navy for their opinion relating to it. It does seem to me if it is desirable to do that, it is desirable to get them together in consultation and have the aid of experienced men, with the aid of experts, so that we may have not simply the individual judgment of each, but combine the judgment of all after a careful study of the subject.

It is for that reason that I favor this method of proceeding, and not with a view, of course, of conferring upon the commission any of the powers belonging to Congress.

Mr. President, I should like to add to my remarks certain extracts from reports, which I will ask leave to print.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, at this stage of the debate it would not be expected that I should occupy very much time, nor would that be possible with the limitation upon me. At no time in the debate have I intended to occupy much time in the discussion of the special question now before the Senate, which has taken so many days.

I must say that for some reason, which I myself can not explain, I have never been able to allow myself to be agitated to the extent indicated by other Senators, who seem to think that very much of principle is involved in this discussion. I can not see why a Senator who favors in this bill two battle ships under the situation as it now exists is not in favor of an efficient and effective navy as well as a Senator who favors four battle ships.

I have thought, and I still think, that there is no present disturbance which ought to lead us to the belief that the present is specially and exclusively the time when we should increase the number of battle ships. In 1906 we appropriated for only one battle ship, and at two or three sessions of Congress we provided for one battle ship. At the last session, I believe, we provided for two, and I did not understand at that time that there would be any great distress if only two were provided for.

In the legislation prior to this time we have only authorized the construction of battle ships. We have never, as I remember, hastened or facilitated the construction of these ships, so when we provided for one or for two or for three, as we have at different times, we simply authorized the construction, and the appropriation for the construction of the ships naturally did not take place until a year or sometimes two years after the authorization.

I merely mention this to show that to my mind we have made a great advance over any action hitherto taken in legislation for the quick and active construction of battle ships. I believe it is understood that whether we authorize two or four ships it will require three or four years for their completion.

Therefore, Mr. President, I was favorably impressed with the action of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, if I gathered it aright, when they proposed to change somewhat the practice of the two Houses with respect to these ships. Under a message of the President which asked for four battle ships the House of Representatives authorized the construction of two battle ships, but I understand they made no provision by way of appropriation for the two ships. I believed then and I believe now that we ought under our present situation and the circumstances that surround us to make provision for two battle ships each year for at least some years to come.

When I found that the Committee on Naval Affairs had undertaken to facilitate the construction of the battle ships provided by the House by an appropriation of $7,000,000, I was content with that appropriation, as I am content now with it; and I would be willing, as I think most of the Senate would, and I think there would be no serious objection to it, to provide at the next session of Congress for two additional battle ships, and to do that year by year until our modern Navy is sufficient for the needs of our country and efficient in all its provisions.

So, Mr. President, if I am put to the test of voting for two or four ships at this time, with my understanding of the situation, I shall be compelled to vote, and I shall vote, against the amendment providing for four ships. I believe that if the provisions that are now before us are acceded to by the two Houses and receive the approval of the President under the plan of two battle ships per annum, as it appears, we will make rapid and regular progress in building up our Navy.

Mr. President, there may be exceptional reasons in the future, but I do not believe there will be, whereby we shall, under extraordinary exigencies, be compelled to provide ships in addition to the two. But that situation, to my mind, is not now before us. I think the situation is especially an agreeable one as respects the prospects for the future. Wherever I have been and have had an opportunity of reading and studying the condition of the world at this time I have been led to believe that there is no danger of war at present or in the near future, or even in the remote future. I have been led to believe that the educational forces of our country and of the world have been such in the last four or five years as that the nations of the world are establishing a higher standard of conduct in regard to international obligations than prevailed hitherto. The Hague conference and other international conferences indicate this trend.

I was struck especially with the suggestion made by Secretary Root only two days ago at an important international law conference, in which he stated that, happily for the world, gradually public opinion is forming against large armaments controlling civilization, and that rapid, or at least successful, progress is being made in this direction.

Therefore, it has seemed to me that if we adopt the orderly method of dealing with the pending naval appropriation bill, as we have dealt with all the naval appropriation bills that have preceded it, we will find that we have made ample provision for every exigency that is likely to apply to our Navy.

Believing this, and being placed in the alternative of voting for two or for four battle ships, I shall vote for two.

I should be glad if it could be generally understood in this Chamber and in the other House and in the country that we have entered now upon the construction of two battle ships per annum instead of one, because of the present situation; that that is to go on without alarming the other nations or our own people, and that we intend to be as a nation prepared for war, though surrounded as we are by all the conditions of peace.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator takes his seat, I will state that it is to me a matter of great satisfaction to hear the veteran, experienced Senator from Iowa express so clearly his view in this matter. That is my view, and I am glad to agree with him. I have stated already in the course of the debate that the committee believes this a moderate programme, and without, of course, foreseeing what may be the conditions hereafter, we will expect to carry it out to this extent in the future, and that it will give us not a moderate navy, but a very great navy, and keep up in the second place in the world.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am glad that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is in accord with my view on this question. I understood him to so express himself the other day. In my view this simply resolves itself into a question whether we are to authorize four battle ships at this time or two now and two more seven months from now. I do not regard that as a question of such enormous magnitude as to distress and disturb our relations as respects the Navy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the debate will proceed under the so-called "ten-minutes rule."

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, it will not be necessary for me to occupy all of the ten minutes allowed, for I only want in a very brief way to state the two or three reasons why I shall vote against the pending amendment increasing the number of battle ships from two to four.

We are all aware, as it has been repeated here time and again during this debate, that in his annual message to Congress in December, 1905, the President expressed the opinion that our Navy had reached such a size that by the addition of one battle ship each year we would be making a sufficient provision for the maintenance of our Navy, and that that would keep us at a proper standard.

We were told in a special message, sent to us a few days ago, that he entertained that opinion prior to the recent Hague conference, and he entertained it because he hoped that at that conference an agreement would be arrived at whereby there would be a limitation placed upon naval armament and that in that expectation he had been disappointed. That I understood him to give as the chief reason and argument why now, instead of adhering to the policy he recommended of increasing our Navy by only one ship each year, we shall start upon a policy of increasing it for at least this year at the rate of four ships.

I took pains to look back to the message of 1905 to see exactly what it was the President had then said to us, for when I read the reason he now assigns I was somewhat surprised to find that he had been governed by such an expectation. I did not have any such expectation as that with respect to The Hague Conference. I do not think anybody had a right to expect that an agreement would be there arrived at for such a limitation. I was brought largely, as I can recall it, to that opinion by what the President himself said to us on that subject in his message of 1905, when he first made the recommendation that we should limit ourselves to one ship to be added each year. In that message he said:

> Our aim should be from time to time to take such steps as may be possible toward creating something like an organization of the civilized nations, because as the world becomes more highly organized the need for navies and armies will diminish. It is not possible to secure anything like an immediate disarmament, because it would first be necessary to settle what peoples are on the whole a menace to the rest of mankind, and to provide against the disarmament of the rest being turned into a movement which would really chiefly benefit these obnoxious peoples; but it may be possible to exercise some check upon the tendency to swell indefinitely the budgets for military expenditure.

And so on.

In other words, I understood the President at the time, and I think anyone without an explanation of that language would understand, now reading it, that the President really had no very earnest expectation that an agreement would be arrived at by The Hague Conference, in accordance with which naval armaments would be limited.

I am glad to be set right by the President as to his expectation, for I had a different opinion on that point; but aside from that, Mr. President, we come now, as we must always do with respect to a matter of this kind, to consider existing conditions. The question is, after having heard the recommendation of the President, and having heard from everybody else who has a right to speak to us on the subject, What is the situation by which we should be governed and what should be our judgment in view of that situation?

I have been here now in the Senate almost twelve years. The Navy is larger now than it has been at any time heretofore during all that period. It was thought to be adequate for aught that we could foresee twelve years, ten years, five years, two years ago; and, so far as I can discover, we have a right by the same token to consider it adequate now.

I happen to be a member of the Foreign Relations Committee. If there were any complications with any other international power, I would not speak of it in open Senate, but I know of no reason why I should not say here to the world that never in all these twelve years has the sky been so bright as it is at this very moment. Nowhere is there a spot of any kind on the horizon in the nature of a threat or a menace of war. On the contrary, we are in far better relations with the rest of the world and freer from all kinds of complications and all kinds of threat and menace than we were in 1905, when the President made the recommendation that we should limit ourselves to one battle ship a year. At that time we did have some diplomatic negotiations in progress, of which we did not know what might be the result, but as to which we had no serious concern, although it was possible for trouble to grow out of them. Those negotiations were adjusted, and all other diplomatic relations have been, peaceably, and to the satisfaction of all concerned, save and except only—speaking of this period alone—our relations with Spain.

Now, the Navy being greater to-day than it has been at any time heretofore during the period that I have had responsibility with respect to legislation on account of it, and the situation being freer, as it is this very minute, than it has been at any time heretofore during that period, I do not see why the addition of two battle ships should not be as much as we ought to be called upon to make.

But there is another reason, Mr. President, that we ought to take into consideration here—it has been referred to in this debate, and I need not speak upon it to elaborate it—and that is our financial situation. Every Senator knows that, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] told us last Saturday in this Chamber, our financial situation is not as satisfactory as it was one year ago, not as satisfactory as it has been at any time during the past ten years, not as satisfctory as we hope it may be next year. This year we are running behind, relatively speaking, and at a pretty serious rate. I can not quote the figures so accurately as the chairman of the Finance Committee, but I understood him to say, on Saturday last, that the deficit for this year already amounts to $60,000,000 and that it will be $100,000,000 before the end of the year. What, therefore, Mr. President, is the excuse, if we have no threat of war, for going into this unnecessary expenditure that we may have four battle ships instead of two?

I quite agree with other Senators that war comes generally unexpectedly; that it is never an impossibility; but if ever we were justified in saying that it is an extreme improbability, we are justified in saying that now. With every other Senator here, if there was any threat of danger, any prospect of war, any probability that we would be in a clash with any other power, I would vote willingly not only for four, but for forty, for a hundred, battle ships, if it might be necessary, and without regard to what our financial situation might be; for we all know that our resources are abundant and that we would subject them to the meeting of any such high and patriotic purpose as that; but without some real reason for it I see no necessity to go beyond what the committee has approved. I shall therefore vote with the committee.

I might speak of another reason, but it has been sufficiently dwelt upon, and that is, that we are short now, as I understood the statements made in this Chamber on Saturday last, almost 2,000 commissioned officers.

Mr. PERKINS. We are short 1,846 officers.

Mr. FORAKER. As the Senator from California informs me, we are short 1,846 officers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President, on the basis of some personal experience, I have a vivid conception of the horrors of war, which, in my judgment, is one of the greatest calamities that can befall any nation.

As an opponent, then, of war, I advocate an adequate military and naval establishment as the most efficient and the most certain method of insuring the countless blessings of peace, and I believe that the President's position in regard to a strong and a suitable navy has the general approval of the country, regardless of party. I shall not discuss this position, Mr. President, believing that it has been very adequately and very aptly referred to in the able speech of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. President, should this amendment prevail, in view of the large majority in the other Chamber in favor of the construction of only two battle ships, the utmost that could be expected, it seems to me, would be that a conference committee might agree to three battle ships, so that a vote in this Chamber for four battle ships practically means a vote for the possible construction of three battle ships at most.

Now, Mr. President, the principle of the gradual and progressive development of our Navy by the construction annually of a fixed number of battle ships—say, two, for example—is a principle which, I have no hesitation in saying, commends itself to me.

Under its application, we are able to take note and avail ourselves of the progress and of the experience of the navies of the whole world, and thus promote the progressive development of our own Navy on the best and most approved lines.

But, Mr. President, any principle which is so unbending and so undeviating as to take no note of special circumstances or of special conditions becomes a mental and an intellectual tyranny against which I find myself in revolt.

I fail to see, Mr. President, why the application of this principle would be seriously affected by the construction of, say, three battle ships this year and of only one next year, but I do see, and see most clearly, that there are special existing conditions which have a bearing on the question involved in this amendment. I refer, Mr. President, to the paralysis of our industrial conditions—to the thousands and tens of thousands of unemployed workmen throughout the country—to their distress and to the suffering which devolves upon their wives and their children.

Believing, Mr. President, that the construction of even three battle ships at this time would be of marked benefit to the industrial situation generally and would mitigate, to some extent at least, much real distress and suffering, I am unwilling by my voice or by my vote to leave anything undone which can bring about so great a benefit, and I shall, therefore, if for no other reason, support the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been deeply interested in the discussion of this question, for it is a question that I have thought considerably about in past years and one upon which I have had strong convictions. I have time and again said that, if I were going to be extravagant with the public money, I would be extravagant in building a strong navy. Our small Navy was forcibly brought to my attention during the recent Spanish-American war, and I shall never forget how I felt when the Oregon was sailing from the Pacific to the Atlantic Ocean, unaccompanied by any other battle ship. No doubt we all prayed that she might make that voyage successfully and that no accident happen or the foe meet and destroy her. She made that wonderful voyage alone, we having no battle ship to accompany her. I made up my mind at that time that if I ever had an opportunity to vote or in any other way lend my aid in the building of a strong navy for this country I would do so.

Mr. President, I do not support the amendment for four battle ships on the ground that war is going to happen in the near future. I do not believe that war is imminent. I do not see a solitary incident in our relations with foreign powers to justify me in even thinking that there is going to be war, but I do feel that it is the duty of the lawmakers of the American people to provide battle ships sufficient to be prepared for war—not for aggressive war, but to be prepared to defend the lives of the people and the interests of this country in case of war.

While listening this afternoon to the remarks of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], I thought to myself, Why not strip this question of all innuendoes, of all insinuations, of all jingoism, and see just what the real differences are between the parties interested in four battle ships and those who are contending for only two? And in doing so I find the differences are small indeed, for it simply means the postponement of authorizing two battle ships for a short time, and this I gather from the statements made by the senior Senator from Iowa, and also by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who has this bill in charge. As I see it, it is only a difference between authorizing the construction of four battle ships at this time, based upon the recommendation of the President of the United States, or authorizing two battle ships now and in the small space of seven months to authorize the construction of two more. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to vote for the authorization of four battle ships now. It is better to have the battle ships than to want them, and if we have them we are not likely to need them. I do not believe that we will make a mistake in voting for the increase, and if it should prove to be a mistake how easy it would be at the next session of Congress to refuse to authorize the building of a single ship. In that case we would have our four battle ships we all agree should be built under way.

In my judgment there are reasons for this course. As I look over the list of battle ships of the type of the Dreadnought that have been authorized by foreign powers, in addition to those of England, twelve by France, eleven by Germany, and four by Japan—and it is intimated that five more will be built by that nation in the near future—it seems to me, if we intend that this country shall be the second great naval power of the world, we can do no less than authorize the building of four battle ships at this time, not as a notice to the world of war, but simply a notice to the world and a message to them that the American people are determined to build a navy large enough to defend their coasts, to defend their interests, and to defend their honor; and if any difficulties should arise between us and foreign powers they must respect our honorable and just demands, and that we will not take an insult from any nation on the face of the earth.

I believe, Mr. President, in arbitration, and I hope to live to see the day when that great principle will be accepted by the nations of this earth. But as I study mankind and see the selfishness of man and the selfishness of nations it seems to me that it is going to be some time before arbitration is an assured success. A mighty oak is not matured in a day, and this mighty principle of arbitration is not yet accepted by even the Christian nations of the world, so I say we are not safe in relying for protection on this principle, but, as I said, I hope to see the day when arbitration will be universal the world over.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] the other day, in support of his position for two battle ships only, quoted the following words of Isaiah:

> And He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

I believe, Mr. President, that the time will come as foretold by the prophet, but it was foretold that it would be in the last days, when Christ's kingdom should be established upon this earth, and that time has not yet arrived.

I am not one who thinks the time has arrived when the swords of the American soldiery should be beaten into plowshares or the spears of the American Army beaten into pruning hooks; for it seems to me that, so long as there is the feeling of distrust even among the Christian nations that there is today, it would be a false step to take.

In our late war one Christian nation was arrayed against another, one praying to the Almighty Father to give success to its arms, the other praying to that selfsame God for success to its; and I say to the American people that when the time comes spoken of by Isaiah there will be a different condition existing in the world than exists to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Utah has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. I believe, Mr. President, that every member of this Senate is in favor of a strong navy, made up of good ships, equal to those of any other nation. I believe that public sentiment is back of Senators on the question of making sufficient appropriations for the support and maintenance and increase of a good, strong navy. The only question in issue today is whether we shall have thirty-one battle ships or thirty-three battle ships, whether this bill shall provide for the building of four battle ships or two battle ships. It is simply a question of business policy, and it seems to your committee, after having thoroughly considered the question, that we should provide for but two at this time.

I want to say, in passing, that the committee were criticised today by a member of the Senate, who said that we have not given due consideration to this bill, it only having been in the committee for two days before it was reported to the Senate. I want to say to that Senator that your committee have had the provisions of this bill under consideration ever since the report of the Secretary of the Navy was submitted to Congress. They have had before them the Book of Estimates, giving the estimates made by the different bureaus in the Navy Department—the Bureau of Construction and Repair, the Bureau of Equipment, the Bureau of Ordnance, the Bureau of Navigation, and all the other bureaus. We have considered those estimates from day to day, week to week, and month to month, and the result of our efforts is this bill which we submit to you for your consideration and which you are to pass upon to-day.

I believe it the part of wisdom for us to profit by our own experience and by the mistakes of foreign countries, and therefore I believe we should provide for the building of but two ships of the Dreadnought type to-day. It is an experimental question. There is not a ship building in any yard, either a merchant ship or a naval ship, this year that is not improved upon next year, and the following year still further improvements are made. So we should not proceed too rapidly, but should profit by our experience, as we have in the past ten or fifteen years.

The cable brings us a dispatch across the ocean that there was a collision on Saturday last off the Isle of Wight, on the coast of England, between the American merchant vessel St. Paul and the British protected cruiser Gladiator, and in fifteen minutes from the time our merchant ship struck the English war vessel the latter sank.

It is a question whether the Dreadnought type of ship is to be the class of the future battle ship. As an evidence of that fact, Mr. President, the lord of the British Admiralty says in his report in regard to the new naval programme of Great Britain:

> This programme is exceedingly modest. It comprises the building of one battle ship of the improved Dreadnought class.

Only one battle ship of the improved Dreadnought class is provided for to-day by England's naval programme. So it seems to me, I repeat, the part of wisdom for us to profit by experience and by the mistakes made by England and other great countries.

We have a first-class Navy, and we are going to carry out the programme which has been inaugurated, and build ships from year to year as experience has demonstrated it is in the interest of the Navy and the public welfare for us to do.

The improvements alone in the turbine engine in the last two years have almost revolutionized the merchant service on the trans-Atlantic lines of steamers plying between New York and European ports. The return tubular boilers and the Scotch boilers are all experiments as yet. So, as a business proposition and from a patriotic standpoint, it is wise for us to go slowly if we want our ships equal to those of any other nation.

My friends have criticised me because I did not stand up for four battle ships in the interests of the Pacific States. I fail to see where their criticism can justly lie. Since I have had the honor of being a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs we have provided for building on the Pacific coast and the States bordering the ocean four battle ships and five armored and protected cruisers. Eleven vessels in all have been builded there. We have provided for our navy-yards and for building colliers and torpedo boats and submarine boats and other auxiliary craft for the Navy. We have 100 fighting ships of over a thousand tons each, exclusive of torpedo boats, submarine boats, and vessels of other types. We should profit by experience; and if we had a hundred, yes, two hundred ships on the Pacific coast, and the Commander in Chief saw proper to detail them to Australia or China or Japan or some other country, I fail to see where this proposition would benefit us, as my colleague says it would.

There were 16 battle ships in the fleet that went around Cape Horn to San Francisco, and we have on the coast there now 10 battle ships and 16 armored cruisers, making 26 fighting vessels of over 5,000 tons each; and yet, if the Commander in Chief should order them around the world, we should be as defenseless and unprotected as if there were 250 vessels in the Navy. This bill already provides liberally for our navy-yards, for docks, for appliances. We have already equipped seventy-five vessels with wireless telegraphy. We are making more powerful our guns. The range of our guns has increased from 10 up to 75 per cent, and all through this bill there are appropriations which have not been criticised or referred to calculated to be valuable to our Navy and its building up. So I think the Senate, upon due reflection, will stand by the report of the committee, which has given this subject-matter every consideration and has presented the result of its labor.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it had not been my intention to participate in the debate of this question, but I will take advantage of the ten minutes to give expression to the reasons that shall control me in casting my vote upon this measure.

I shall vote for the amendment for four battle ships. I believe with conditions such as exist in the industrial world to-day, the promise of the Government of the United States that it is going to expend twelve or twenty million dollars for labor and material will have a good effect and will be an element to encourage the people of this country that the Government at least is going to make available to the people some of the $198,000,000 that rests to-day in the banks of the United States, idle so far as the United States is concerned, drawing no interest, there only for the purpose of being loaned, not for the employment of labor or the purchase of material. I am perfectly willing to vote for any Government enterprise that will result in the distribution of part of the money the Government has on hand and idle.

Mr. President, I have been glancing through this bill and I find that out of the items, comprising more than $100,000,000, less than one-half of it goes into the channels of American labor or American material. The largest item is distributed under conditions where it is redistributed in various lands and not for home products or for the immediate prosperity of our own people in their homes.

So I am willing to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington that "two" be stricken out and the word "four" substituted, and taken in connection with the amendment adopted on the motion of the chairman of the committee, appropriating in all about $7,000,000 to commence this work, the legislation will then stand in this way. We will have authorized—mark you—we will have authorized the construction of these four battle ships. We will have appropriated the proportion that will represent to the limit the labor that can be performed and the materials that can be purchased during the next eighteen months.

The amount appropriated, the $7,000,000, will be sufficient to inaugurate this work and to keep it going on, and take that in connection with the assurance that the Government of the United States is going to put fifteen or eighteen million dollars more into this class of work, which represents, every dollar of it, American labor and American material, and it appeals to me. It appeals to me especially under existing conditions in the world of labor, as it affects the prosperity of our labor.

There is no question of war in it with me. I am not considering whether we are liable to have war or whether peace is assured. I care nothing for the poetic idea of turning swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks. This is a business proposition. It is a question of disposing of the money we have on hand. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who is chairman of the Committee on Finance and speaks by authority, says that the deficiency between the income and the outgo this year will amount to about $100,000,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. More than $60,000,000, I said.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understood the Senator to say it was about $60,000,000 now.

Mr. ALDRICH. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. And that it would amount to about a hundred million dollars.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is $46,000,000 now, and it will be more than $60,000,000 at the close of the year.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was somewhat astonished when I understood the Senator to say that it would be a hundred million dollars. Another Senator has quoted the Senator from Rhode Island as having said it would be a hundred million dollars. I am glad it will be only $60,000,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. My statement was this: That the present deficiency is $46,000,000, and that the deficiency at the close of the fiscal year will be more than $60,000,000. The Senator, I believe, made his mistake in this way. I said that the additional appropriations this year over last year were more than $100,000,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. We are bigger this year than last. We are doing more business this year than last.

Mr. FORAKER. I think perhaps the Senator from Idaho referred to me when he said another Senator had quoted the Senator from Rhode Island as saying it was a hundred million dollars.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. FORAKER. I did. I was not speaking of this fiscal year, ending June 30, but of the calendar year; and for the calendar year it will be far in excess of a hundred million dollars.

Mr. HEYBURN. Whether it is fifty or sixty or a hundred million dollars, the principle is the same. We have more than twice that sum available at five minutes' notice to pay for material and to pay for labor. I am in favor at the earliest hour of making available this money which the Government owns and has on hand. That is the policy of government which actuates me in casting my vote for this enlarged enterprise for the benefit of the people.

The Army and the Navy are just as much a part of the Government as the courts or the legislature or the executive branch. They are a part of the executive branch that make efficient the laws we pass in this body and that are construed by the highest court in the land. The Army and Navy are the arms of the Government. They stand in the same position that the police do to the municipal government. They only extend our power. Since the conditions that were referred to by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] existed the coast line of this country has more than doubled. As I said, we are growing. We will continue to grow. I would have the Navy of the United States the largest navy in the world and not the second, and I would do it because we are the largest nation in the world, and we will continue forever to be, so long as we do not bow our heads to any second class among the nations of the earth.

Mr. President, those are the reasons that actuate me. There is no element of warfare. I belong to a society of peace, but I believe that peace is best and most surely maintained by being able, and having others know you are able, to maintain that peace.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, it was not my intention to occupy the attention of the Senate, but I think it due myself to give the reasons why I shall vote for two battle ships. I have had the honor of serving in the Congress of the United States in one branch or the other for fourteen years. During the first term in which I served we appropriated $25,000,000 in round numbers for the Navy. It is now proposed by the bill reported by the committee to appropriate $112,000,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. This bill as it now stands appropriates $123,000,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then my reasons grow stronger all the time. One hundred and twenty-three million dollars is carried by this bill, or an increase in fourteen years of substantially $100,000,000 for the Navy alone. If the other expenditures of the Government had increased at that ratio, it would be absolutely impossible to raise the revenue with which to meet the expenditures.

I have listened carefully to this debate. I have heard no reason given why this unusual increase in the Navy should be made at this particular time. Upon the other hand, there is every reason why it should not be made. The President of the United States in 1905 recommended one battle ship per year. I see no change in conditions between now and then. There is no more reason why we should have more than one battle ship per year than there was in 1905, when that recommendation was made.

There are other matters that must be looked into. We have great internal improvements that are being pressed upon Congress. During the last summer the President honored the section of country from which I come by making a trip down the Mississippi River. As a result of that trip we are receiving petitions from our people asking for the improvement of the great internal waterways. We can not improve our waterways if we spend all the money on the Navy.

We now have the second navy in the world. The appropriation for two battle ships will maintain our relative position with the other countries of the world. Then, why should we take the money from the Treasury that we need for internal improvements and invest it in battle ships at this particular time?

The attention of the Senate has been called to the fact that we will have a deficiency of $60,000,000 this year. My attention has just been called to the fact that the deficiency for April alone will be $11,000,000. We have appropriated up to date on the bills that have already passed one House or the other $104,000,000 more than we appropriated for the same purposes last year, as shown by the following statement:

Increase in round numbers of appropriations for 1909, compared with 1908.

Agriculture	$2,100,000
Army	16,300,000
Diplomatic and consular	450,000
Fortification	3,700,000
Indian	300,000
Legislative	400,000
Navy	26,000,000
Pensions	17,000,000
Post-Office	10,000,000
Sundry civil	1,500,000
Deficiencies	18,000,000
Miscellaneous	4,250,000
	100,000,000
Permanent annual appropriations	4,300,000
Estimated total increase	104,300,000

We have yet the great public buildings bill, which will add some twenty-odd million dollars to the appropriations; the sundry civil bill will be largely increased before it is enacted into law, and I predict now that before Congress adjourns we shall have increased the appropriations over last year by $150,000,000. What does that mean? Our revenues are decreasing, as shown by the Treasury statements. Our appropriations for this year will be increased $150,000,000 if we appropriate for two battle ships only. That means that next year every dollar of surplus that we have in the United States Treasury will be taken out, and we will be fortunate if we do not have to borrow money to pay running expenses. With that deficiency facing us, why shall we, with no apparent reason, appropriate for four battle ships in place of two?

I have just been looking over the list of the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, both of the House and the Senate. The House and the Senate have built up committees to give these matters special consideration. I find that the House committee is made up of strong men from every section of the country, and their report comes in for two battle ships. I find at the head of the Senate committee the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. Ranking next, the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. We find Michigan represented. We find the Southern States represented, and we find the Central States represented, all by men who are known to transact the business of the Government carefully and properly, and they come here after giving careful consideration to this matter and say unanimously to the Senate, "Two battle ships are enough."

Then why this excitement? It is simply a question of business. It is simply a question whether we shall proceed more rapidly, or whether we shall proceed along lines recommended by the committee, having in view the money to pay our bills as they are incurred; and I want to call attention to those on this side of the Chamber that our party has not been a party of deficiencies. It has been a party that has so managed the Government that we have always had money to pay our bills when the bills came due. And are we now going to make appropriations that mean deficiencies, that mean direct taxation upon our people, that mean we must levy unusual taxes on the people as we have been compelled to do in times of war? That is what we are coming to.

I appeal to the Senate to use just good common business sense, as the committee did when they reported this bill to the Senate. Why should we get excited now, when there is absolutely no danger of war? Of course, as has been said many times, war comes unexpectedly, but we are assured by the Committee on Foreign Relations that the sky was never as clear as it is today. Then, why four battle ships, when in 1905 the President recommended but one? Why four in place of two, when the revenues are in the condition they are? Why take away from our internal improvements their fair share of appropriation?

The improvement of our internal waterways means cheap transportation and permanent benefit to all our people. Adding unnecessarily to the strength of the Navy means that these necessary improvements must be delayed.

Mr. President, I can not see my way clear to vote for four battle ships, and I shall vote for two.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, we have had a week of unlimited debate—I was tempted to say of unbridled debate—and yet I feel that the rules of the Senate and its custom have been fully vindicated, since, by unlimited debate, we have driven the dogs of war back to their kennels, and have clothed the fleet of the United States in the garb of peace.

The best result of the week's discussion, so it seems to me, is that it brings the country to a full realization of the fact that nowhere on our horizon does there appear the slightest danger of war or conflict with our neighbors. But that is not all. The debate has demonstrated another fact, which perhaps was not entirely apparent to the country, namely, that the United States is the second naval power. One would have imagined at the beginning of the discussion that this was the initial move to create a fleet, and that four battle ships were an immediate necessity. But we find, at the end of the discussion, that we have now built and in process of construction twenty-nine battle ships, that the two provided for in this bill will increase it to thirty-one, and that in strength and power, ship for ship, we rank second among the nations.

Nor are these ships obsolete, as has been stated. In the message so frequently referred to sent to the Congress in December, 1906, the President recommended that we build one new battle ship each year to take the place of one which annually became obsolete, and not four which annually became obsolete.

Attention has been called to nine reasons which the President gives for the annual increase of four battle ships to the Navy. Only four were cited, and all four given existed when the original recommendation came to us for one new battle ship annually.

This bill carries an appropriation of $123,000,000 for the building and support of the Navy. With a single exception it is the largest naval appropriation bill ever passed by the American Congress, and that exception occurred in 1898, when as a part of the naval appropriation bill $50,000,000 was appropriated for the "national defense" in time of war.

I wish the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] had carried a little further his illustration with reference to the recommendation of the British Admiralty in the construction of a single battle ship of the Dreadnought type this year.

It has not yet been demonstrated that battle ships of the Dreadnought type are effective or efficient beyond improvement. That the great battle ship has come to stay there is no question, but who will say that in another decade battle ships of 30,000 tons displacement rather than battle ships of 20,000 tons displacement will not be the type preferred? Why go on building battle ships unnecessarily while this matter is still in an experimental stage, not only as to the size of the ships, but as to the thickness and strength and character of the armor, the size of the guns, the character of the shells, and the matter of high explosives? All these matters are still in the experimental stage, and unless there is great emergency demanding immediate action for an abnormal increase of the Navy, it seems to me the recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs, favoring the bill as it came from the House of Representatives carrying provision for two battle ships of this type, ought to prevail.

Another fact to be recognized, Mr. President, is this: Two added battle ships of the character which this bill carries gives us a squadron of four battle ships of the Dreadnought type. Who can gainsay that next year we may begin the creation of a new squadron of a new type, and since no emergency exists, no word of war, no danger to our peace, no menace to our commerce, no threatened attack upon our coast on either side—and if so, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has already stated we could divide the fleet and guard amply both coasts—why shall we burden the revenues of the nation beyond the reasonable, yea, the extravagant provision already recommended by the committee in this bill?

One point, Mr. President, has seemingly escaped the attention of Senators who have preceded me in this debate. We have talked about the character of our ships and their speed, and the character of our guns and their long range, and all features, but all will agree that in the last great naval contest, namely, that between Russia and Japan, the one thing which counted for more than battle ships or guns was the character and intelligence of the men who manned the ships and fired the guns, the spirit which animated them, the loyalty and devotion to their cause and to their country, and the matter of superior discipline and command; that in the one fleet there was mutiny and in the other there was such devotion to cause and patriotism to country that men were willing to die that the cause for which they fought might survive and succeed and their country be vindicated.

In this particular, namely, the personnel of our fleet, men and officers, I take it no one will challenge the statement that ours stands equal, if not superior, of any nation in the world. I admit, Mr. President, that it would be unfair to put such men in an unequal and unsafe position. But we are providing, and we have been providing, for the best ships and the speediest, with the largest and most effective guns, and in every way we have been providing for the protection of the country and of the men who are counted upon to defend it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not expect to be able to add anything of value to this discussion. I do not profess a wide knowledge of the subject, and I have been absent during the progress of the discussion, hence I am not advised as to the course it has taken. Indeed, I should not undertake at this time and under the circumstances to say a single word were it not for the fact that I find myself not in accord with the committee which has had this matter under consideration and has reported it to the Senate. I am as a rule very much given to supporting the committee that has had a subject, particularly one of this kind, under consideration and has given it careful thought and investigation. That is particularly true with me when a matter comes from a committee so ably constituted as is this one, and presided over by so distinguished a legislator and statesman as we know and recognize the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to be.

I have always stood for a powerful navy. I believe it a matter of great importance and concern to the people of this country that we should maintain such a navy. I would not largely increase our Army, although I would increase some branches of it—for instance, in the matter of the Coast Artillery and in the improvement and betterment of our coast defenses. For those purposes I would make larger appropriations. But I am particulary concerned in the matter of building up and strengthening our Navy. This is a great and growing country. Our wealth to-day is more than double that of any other nation on the earth. Our foreign commerce is growing as it never has in the past and as that of no other nation has at any time. We have become the owners of possessions in far-distant seas. Our insular possessions are of vast importance. I believe that one of the first duties of this country is to establish strong fortifications in the Hawaiian Islands. One of the first duties of Congress should be to direct its efforts to that end, and it will be nothing less than a national crime if we shall fail to take that matter up and carry it on speedily. But the Pacific Ocean, where we have no navy to-day, is going to be the scene of the greatest activity commercially of this nation in the near future. We have there the Hawaiian Islands and we have, away in the Orient, the Philippine Islands, and we have gone into those islands to stay. Some men argue that we are going to abandon the Philippine Islands. We can not do it. Men may talk, men may theorize, but the fact remains that we are in those islands to stay.

Mr. President, we may as well face the responsibilities that that fact entails and provide against it. That it means much of responsibility, that it means increased care, no one will deny. But it is our duty to rise to those responsibilities and meet them.

It is important and necessary that we shall have a strong navy in the Pacific, one equally as strong as that maintained in the Atlantic. We have as great a seaboard to provide for there. We have as important ports to protect there. We have as great interests, and our interests are growing and developing there as they are not on the Atlantic coast. I see no way by which we can provide for the necessities of the conditions prevailing there except by an increased navy. I do not mean that I know of any fact which indicates war or any conditions that mean a disturbance of the peaceful and happy relations that now obtain between this nation and all the nations of the earth. But, Mr. President, no man knows the hour when a condition will exist that will demand the employment of a powerful navy to protect the great interests of this nation on the Pacific.

If there is one fact more than another that was demonstrated by the naval battles of the Russian-Japanese war it is that the battle ship is the real defense upon which we must rely when the naval battle finally comes on. Unarmored cruisers, unprotected or partially protected ships serve their purpose, but when the real battle comes they must get beyond the range of the guns, and the battle ship is the one defense upon which we may rely. That was demonstrated by the Russian-Japanese naval battles.

Then, Mr. President, I do think that we would be derelict to our duty, taking into consideration the great interests that we have on the Pacific coast and the complicated situation which our interests there have brought about, if we should not adequately prepare for it.

Senators tell us that the revenues of the Government will not justify the expenditures that this amendment contemplates. In the first place, while we propose to provide for four battle ships instead of two, it is not required that there shall be an immediate expenditure. It may be that there will be a deficit of $60,000,000 during the present fiscal year. I assume that is correct, because the Senator who states it as a fact is well posted and knows what he is talking about. Be that as it may, I have no fears about the ability of this country, with its great moral powers, its splendid wealth and resources, being able to provide for whatever the necessities of the Government may prove to be.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, speaking is catching. I find that I have contracted myself a very mild form of this infection, from which I hope to recover in a few moments, which I shall occupy in stating my reasons for voting against four battle ships and for two.

In the first place, Mr. President, we are in no emergency. There is no crisis on hand which portends war with any nation. We are living in the "piping times of peace," and one must be like Job's war horse, and smell battle "afar off," to get any odor of gunpowder in the air, unless he were listening to one of the speeches which advocates a vastly greater navy under the idea that there is a "possibility" of war.

There will never be a day nor an hour when we ought not to order another battle ship if the possibility of war is a reason for doing it. Never will a time come, nor has there been a time in the past, when every nation was not under the possibility of war. There is no probability of war; there is no cloud of war, and every good citizen of this country has the right to rest under his own vine and fig tree, with none to make him afraid, and without having the specter of war flamed before his eyes to disturb his slumbers.

In the second place, Mr. President, and what is a substantial reason, as I conceive, for voting against four battle ships in a lump in this bill, is I think the fact adduced to us by experience and through the voice of science that we can build a better navy at the pace which we are building it than by trying to build it more rapidly. Fashions change. I read in an international law work this pregnant sentence:

> There is nothing unchangeable but change. Change is the shadow of time, and it moves, keeping step with every tick of the clock.

Men change, times change, gowns change, coats change, everything changes, and nothing is more sure to change than the best model of a battle ship. If we build a navy gradually and make each ship perfect as it can be made by the skill of man, according to the best model of this year, we will have done the very best that we can do, to arm this nation with ships that can hold their own in any line of naval battle.

If we build a cluster of ships the sooner will they go to a junk shop and the sooner will your Navy be dismantled.

The world is in a more inventive order of mind than it has ever been in the history of time. This nation is far ahead of any other nation of ancient or modern times in inventive genius. Smokeless powder has just been introduced. This is a novelty. Very many of us have never seen or experienced the discharge of smokeless powder, so little has it gone into the everyday walks of life. "Soundless" powder has just been announced as making its début upon the stage. The electrical gun, we are told, is soon to supersede the powder-filled gun, and it is said that one great English inventor has invented a gun that will kill almost everybody at once. So war will be made a very cheap business, a very wholesale business, and a very complete business when a few more inventions are established.

Mr. President, the pace that the Naval Committee has kept is a reasonable pace, a pace already accelerated by the cry that comes from here and there for a greater navy. I put myself abreast of the front rank of those people of this country who are ready to defend it at any sacrifice of life, of property, of wealth, or what not. We are going at a pace to prepare ourselves not for a war that is on hand, not for a war that we can discern as coming, but for that remote thing which is described by gentlemen on the other side as what troubles them, and that is the possibility of war. Of course war is possible. It always has been and always will be. I will go the four-battle-ship men one better and say it is certain; but, let me remind you, it is remotely certain in the dim and distant perspective.

I take consolation also to myself, Mr. President, of a self-evident fact which has been neglected in many of the discourses we have heard, and that is this. This is just the safest nation in the world. No nation ever did in all time occupy a position amongst the clustered nations of the earth that is as safe as that which America occupies. The oceans have made it so, and what the oceans lack in making it so its great people have completed. They were never more united than they are to-day. They were never strung to a higher or purer key of sincere patriotism than they are to-day. They would all be like the minutemen of the Revolution and turn out quickly and give what they had to meet any foe that might cast his shadow in our direction.

Does it ever occur to those gentlemen to look a little at the history of this country and the observation of some of the anterior statesmen in contemplating this subject? Abraham Lincoln said, when this nation was not half as strong as it is today, that if all the world were to attack America there is not a man of them all that could ever take a drink out of the Ohio River.

Great Britain had a great navy when they fought us more than a hundred years ago. We had none. They did manage to get a little partisan corps on our eastern and almost undefended shores, except with a few militia and their guns, as far up as Westham, a little above Richmond. I think they enjoyed the pleasure of spending a night there, but they went back where they came from, with no lodgment. That history of a people who had no navy and very scattered and few soldiers does not arouse my alarm as to the Japanese, or Englishmen, or Frenchmen, or Russians, or anybody else getting very far into the interior of this American country.

Some of our friends who were in the Navy of the United States during the war and some of them who took a tramp up the peninsula of Virginia along in the sixties may perhaps recall that, with all the valor of this nation, with all the guns of this nation, and with all the ships, armies, and wealth of this nation, they did not get above tide water after a four years' effort until about April, 1865.

Should a foreign foe undertake the job of assailing America, I venture to overreach the statement of Abraham Lincoln as to the Ohio, and say that not a man of them would ever take a drink out of the James River, close as it is to the Capes. Guns would cover the approaches. Mountains of defense would be raised up in front of them, and the American people, united and whole-hearted, would cover the earth with their myriads of martial men.

At peace with every nation of the earth, cultivating with everybody the arts of peace, intending neither to hurt or to wrong anybody, and provoking none to hurt or to wrong us, we stand serene, possessing our souls in peace.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as we are to vote not simply on the question of two battle ships, but upon the entire naval bill this afternoon, I desire to say just a word upon a matter that was under discussion the other day with reference to naval armor.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] made this statement as to the cost of naval armor in this country and in other countries:

> I have, Mr. President, a table of the prices per ton for furnishing armor in the European countries. In Austria it is $449; in Italy, $521; in Germany, $450; in France, $500; in England, $625; and in the United States it is $416.67.

That, Mr. President, is a most remarkable and startling piece of information. I have been informed that it comes from the Navy Department, and therefore I do not question its correctness. But one or two conclusions must necessarily be drawn from those figures. Either the armor plate manufactured in the United States is inferior to that manufactured in England or the cost of manufacturing armor plate in England is greater than the cost of manufacturing it in the United States. If the quality is the same in each country, we have the remarkable fact that in free-trade England it costs 50 per cent more to manufacture armor plate than it costs in protected America. We have the remarkable fact that in free-trade England it costs 33 per cent more in round numbers to manufacture armor plate than it does in protected Germany.

Mr. President, I think it important to call the attention of the country to this fact, and it is a fact which we must very carefully consider next year when we come to undertake the promised revision of the tariff, when the steel trust comes here and asks for protective duties on its steel products.

Mr. President, that is all I rose to say, but being on my feet I will add a word or two on the general subject as to the number of ships. When the debate began a few days ago, both from the message of the President and from the speeches of the Senators who argued in favor of four ships we gathered the conclusion, from the vague and uncertain outgivings, that the real reason at the bottom why four ships were demanded or desired was that there was an emergency, a danger ahead of us, which would make it unsafe for us to do less than authorize the construction of these four Dreadnought ships.

As the debate progressed, Mr. President, this has been practically abandoned and disclaimed by all. So that we are here considering the question whether or not, in a condition of profound peace, with nothing threatening to break into that peace, we shall depart from a policy which for ten years past has been recognized as the correct policy in the construction each year of one or two battle ships.

I am glad of the opportunity to add my testimony, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, to that which has been given by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and other Senators who are members of that committee, to the fact that there is literally nothing now to threaten the peace of the country, so far as the foreign relations of this country are concerned.

Mr. President, I wish to add one word to that which has been so well said, not only by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], but by other Senators, as to the character of this country, which makes the possibility of war remote. I think it is more than remote. In more than a hundred years we have never had a war but of our own making, and, in my judgment, in the next hundred years we shall never have a war except of our making. I can conceive of no question in the near future which is apt to make us seek to wage an aggressive war.

Aside from the other reasons, Mr. President, which have been mentioned, there are two considerations which render it altogether improbable that an aggressive war will ever be waged against us.

The resources of this country make it an absolute certainty that any nation that goes to war with us would in the long run have to pay the penalty for doing so. Our resources are such that in the long run we could prevail against any nation which sought war with us. Nations will count the ultimate cost before starting a war against the United States. Temporary advantage will go for nothing.

But there is another reason, which is more controlling with men than the anticipation of ultimate loss, and that is, that the business of the world will not permit a war with the United States. The business of a large part of the world would be brought almost to a standstill in any war which would paralyze or stop the industries of the United States. The exports and the imports of the United States make a commerce of $3,000,000,000 a year—over $1,700,000,000 of exports and over $1,200,000,000 of imports. Commerce is largely exchange, and when you arrest the commerce of this country you arrest not only the industries of this country, but you arrest the industries of other countries which make up their part of that commerce. Why, Mr. President, even in the civil war the simple blockade which stopped the export of the single article of cotton from the Southern States almost produced a revolution in Great Britain. The cotton manufacturing industries of England were paralyzed, and her people cried for bread. That was a small figure compared with that which now represents the great commerce of this country.

Mr. President, in the absence of anything which calls for any such provision on our part, what is there to demand that there shall be four more battle ships? It seems to me that there is nothing to demand it except the desire to make a grand-stand play. There is no desire except—I possibly ought not to say what I was going to say, but I will say it occurs to me that there is no more reason for it than for the sending of this great fleet around the world—something simply to make a boastful display of our power and make a spectacular performance for the people of the United States. I can see no good result from it. My observation, Mr. President, has been that the man who buckles a pistol around his waist and swaggers down the street is the first man who gets into trouble and is not always the man who comes out of it best.

I was a little disappointed, Mr. President, when the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] stated that he could see some good which might come from this spectacular parade, this globe-circling cruise of the fleet. I have tried in vain to suggest to my mind any substantial good which can come to us from it; nor can I see any interest of the country which will be subserved in the ordering of four battle ships at this time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, since my remarks last Friday a great deal of attention has been paid to what I then said; but that speech is not the issue. In the references to it upon Saturday, as the RECORD itself will show, not one quotation was correctly made. A violent attack was made in order, of course, as everyone understands, to make that utterance the issue, and thus to draw attention away from the real issue which we have to determine to-day. This statement and that statement was made; and when I called the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to their incorrectness, he replied vaguely that it was his "impression." This morning the same thing——

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I can not yield.

This morning the same thing occurred——

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator decline to yield?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I can not yield—I have no time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I hope the Senator will not make the kind of statement in which he is now indulging.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This morning when the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] was doing the same thing, I called his attention to it; and he echoed the word of the Senator from Rhode Island, that it was his "impression." The attack was made wholly on "impressions," and when these inaccuracies were pointed out on the spot and at the moment when they were made we were answered, "Well, that was my 'impression.'" Still they are continued, and when confronted with the facts we hear again the answer, "impression."

Well, Mr. President, we understand why that was done. I would not say it if the RECORD itself did not show it; but it was to divert the attention of the Senate and the country from the real issue.

Mr. President, as I said, there is no use trying, by attacking any person's utterances incorrectly, to attempt to divert the attention of the Senate and of the country from the real issue. The real issue is the request of the Commander in Chief of the Navy for four battle ships.

In his special message, in which he uses the word "solemn," he gives the reasons—the failure of his efforts at The Hague. the change in the style of battle ships, and the appalling fact that we are now actually falling behind the other naval powers of the world in our actual fighting strength.

Mr. President, another mountainous consideration presents itself, and that is that it has been brought to the attention of this nation that we have two great coasts instead of one, and that hereafter we must build up two fleets, one for each of those coasts. Why is not the Pacific entitled to a fleet as well as the Atlantic? Why are their resources and their cities and their people not entitled to the same protection as the resources, the cities, and the people of the Atlantic coast? Both should be equally guarded; both equally are American.

NO SHIP PROVIDED FOR.

Another thing; the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] from the Naval Committee, came in after hearing what other Senators had stated as to their great anxiety to build up a great navy. We heard the same from another Senator, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], who stated that this bill was reported by the two wisest committees of Congress; that behind it was all of their wisdom, and all that sort of thing. And yet, Mr. President, with all their "anxiety to increase our Navy," with all their "wisdom," what kind of a bill did they really bring in? Why, a bill was brought in really for no ship at all. It was brought in authorizing two ships, but making not one dollar of appropriation for either, and that appropriation had to be put in upon the floor of the Senate. The country was given to understand before that was done that we were going to build two great battle ships at once. That is what the country was given to understand, and that is what the Senate understood; and yet, according to the bill as it was brought in, not one nail could have been driven and not one bit of material could have been used nor even bought—nothing could have been done—for at least a year, and not even then unless we then should have made the appropriation which was left out of this bill when it passed the House and when, afterwards, it was reported to the Senate. That was the "anxiety" displayed for our Navy and that was the "wisdom" we hear so much about.

That does not look to me, Mr. President, like very ardently supporting the programme of a great navy, which Senators now protest they mean to do.

We have heard a great deal about appropriations. Certain Senators appear to be alarmed about making a little appropriation for the nation's defense. But nobody has stated yet that we have now in the Treasury a cash balance of $252,000,000; whereas other nations, with statesmen as wise and people as frugal as ours, are actually borrowing money with which to build a great navy. We have unused in our Treasury at this present moment $252,000,000 of cash, yet Senators are alarmed if we propose to use less than 3 per cent of it for peace.

We are told that our revenues are decreasing. What is the reason for the decrease of revenue? Why, Mr. President, the falling off of the revenues from the tariff is because the merchants have not paid their duties, but they have the goods in bond. The Senator from Rhode Island says there will be a deficit. He did not count that. The Senator knows there will be $20,000,000 in just as soon as those duties are paid for the goods now in bond. Why did he not mention it?

What would the authorization of these two additional battle ships call for? Seven million more dollars. Why, we are told that we are going to bankrupt the country with this $7,000,000; but yet we do not hesitate to vote scores of millions of dollars for the improvement of streams, which a few years ago the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] showed were absurd, and in many instances even worse than absurd—far worse. Yet we vote such questionable appropriations without winking an eye; but when we propose to give a little money to the Navy, we are in terror of the revenue. That is strange economy.

We must take care of these streams that are not navigable and can never be made so, even if it costs the people tens of millions of dollars; but we can not give $7,000,000 to build up a navy, which the President of the United States says he demands upon his solemn responsibility for the safety of the nation and the peace of the people. Four such battle ships would have prevented the Spanish war and saved us a billion dollars. Yet Senators whose stock in trade is a spurious economy will not take the same precaution now.

It is said that we are keeping pace with the other navies of the world. As a matter of fact, as a matter of a fighting force, with the new, great Dreadnought battle ship as the type of battle unit, we are rapidly falling behind. Instead of being the second nation in the world in our naval strength, we are as a fighting force actually the fourth and more nearly the fifth, and my authority for that is a high official in the Navy Department itself.

Well, Mr. President, when we are thus falling behind, when the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy asks this at our hands "solemnly"—that is the word he uses—when the committee itself brought in a bill which did not even provide for a single ship for a year, does it not occur to Senators that with over $250,000,000 in cash in our hands we ought not to hesitate to hand over $7,000,000 for these two extra battle ships?

I will not stop to quote what the other powers are doing. England with eight Dreadnoughts built, building, and authorized; France with twelve Dreadnoughts building and authorized; Germany with four Dreadnoughts building and authorized and four more every year until 1917, and ourselves with only two, and neither one completed. Senators may talk as much as they please about the impossibility of war. I call attention to the fact that every utterance of my speech was an answer to the declaration, not that we are in danger, but to the declaration of Senators that war is absolutely impossible. They have retreated from that. They now admit that war is possible. Very well. Then, if war is possible, the Navy must be on the basis of that possibility becoming a fact, which I hope never will occur. On your own statements, it is too serious a matter to haggle over.

Talk about appropriations and "this country going bankrupt." Mr. President, our enormous wealth exceeds that of any country in the world. We have $107,000,000,000 of wealth; we have absolutely inestimable resources. We are richer than England and Germany combined. Had we not better use some of that wealth to insure the remainder?

If we build four ships, and it appears that we do not need them so rapidly, we need not build any next year, and no harm will be done; but if it should occur that we do need them, then no mistake has been made and a great disaster may be saved; in other words, there is no danger whatever from building the four ships, but there might be possible danger if we do not, and Senators admit that.

Now, Mr. President, with reference to the educational forces mentioned by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. Of course that has never yet stopped a conflict. It did not between Germany and France, it did not between Russia and Japan, and it never has done so in any war. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that, ourselves alone excepted, the greatest educational people in this world—England, Germany, France, and even Japan, which is the most modern of all nations and making the greatest advances in her educational and moral progress—are the very ones that are building the greatest navies.

I shall not detain the Senate much longer. This request for four battle ships is made, and made in unusual form. It is made by the President of the United States, and made by him as Commander in Chief of the Navy—he says so himself. Is that request entitled to any respect? I will read, Senators, just what he said. It is serious language. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] charged me with speaking for the President. I at once replied, as the RECORD shows I said in my original remarks, that I spoke for no one but myself; but here is what the President said, and any Senator can have the same information:

> Under these conditions, to provide for but one or two battle ships a year is to provide that this nation, instead of advancing, shall go backward in naval rank and relative power among the great nations.

Such a course would be unwise for us if we fronted merely on one ocean, and it is doubly unwise when we front on two oceans. As Chief Executive of the nation, and as Commander in Chief of the Navy, there is imposed upon me the solemn responsibility of advising the Congress of the measures vitally necessary to secure the peace and welfare of the Republic in the event of international complications which are even remotely possible. Having in view this solemn responsibility, I earnestly advise that the Congress now provide four battle ships of the most advanced type.

And, Senators, if the President of this country were a Democrat instead of a Republican, and made that appeal, I would gladly yield my judgment as a patriot. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I should not have taken any of the time of the Senate if it had not been for the statement made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] that in the remarks I had made on Saturday I had misquoted his statements made on the day before. I repeat deliberately that I did not make a statement or a suggestion or draw an inference from any remarks the Senator made on Friday which was not only justified by what he said, but justified by what appears in the RECORD.

First, I stated that the Senator from Indiana said in terms that if this question were to be discussed in executive session there would be few votes against the proposition for four battle ships, the necessary inference being that that Senator had information upon this subject which other members of the Senate did not possess, but which, if known, would lead them to vote contrary to what their present judgment would be upon the question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the Senator's version.

Mr. ALDRICH. Now, let us see what the Senator's version is and what he did say, because the RECORD as made up by the Senator is much worse than the statement as I understood it at the time it was made. Let us see what the RECORD shows. The Senator from Indiana said, according to the RECORD—I do not know what the italics mean exactly, as I never happened to see them in a Senator's speech before, so I will not undertake to give any special force to them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If the Senator reads that, he ought to read further.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator said:

But so far as I am concerned, I do not think that in this open forum or even in executive session we ought to discuss the probability of conflict with any specific power. I think if we could freely do so there would not be very many votes against this proposition.

Now, what does that mean? The statement is more dangerous and mischievous in its present form than it was as I understood it to have been made originally.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. I can not yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator ought to read other things that I said.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the Senator says here that we should not mention any specific power. He did not say that, as I understood him, in his original proposition.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not a word was changed.

Mr. ALDRICH. If there was not a word changed, then I did not understand its full scope and meaning. The statement, I repeat, is much more mischievous than I had supposed.

He says we should not talk about the probability of war with any specific power. He then says if we could freely discuss that precise question there would not be very many votes against the proposition for four battle ships. What is the significance of that statement? If it has any significance at all, it means that there was some specific power the Senator has in his mind, whose attitude was such as to threaten our peaceful relations, and that if this was known by other Senators the vote would be different upon this proposition. If that was not an insinuation or an inference that there was some specific power that was menacing the United States at this time, within the Senator's knowledge, then I do not know the force of the English language.

There is another statement the Senator made as to which he thinks I misquoted him, and that was that Congress had been in the past filching from the American people the sums which have been appropriated for the American Navy. That statement has not been changed in the RECORD.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not one statement has been changed.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator says "not one statement has been changed." Then I say that I am completely justified in all the statements I made and all the inferences I have drawn. I would say to the Senate that these declarations were not only made by the Senator from Indiana on his responsibility as a Senator, but inferentially as the representative of the Administration. It is true he did not appear here in armor and with the mace of authority in his hands as a militant representative of the President, but he came as an apostolic delegate [laughter] clothed in the flowing robes of peace, and demanding that we should vote for the proposition for four battle ships.

If in the face of the Senator's declaration we should now vote for four battle ships, it would be a confession to all the nations of the world that we did have some sinister purpose in making this appropriation having reference to some specific nation.

One other word, Mr. President. The distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has said that he was in favor of sustaining the American Navy. So am I. I think the character and efficiency of our Navy should always be fully maintained, and I shall vote for this bill with the full knowledge that it will accomplish this purpose. I shall next year vote for two battle ships, or more than two, if they are necessary to maintain the efficiency of the American Navy. I may then vote for a different type from that being authorized to-day. As I said on Friday, this matter of building navies is a matter of evolution. There may not be a Senator here who next year will be in favor of voting for any battle ship of the Dreadnought type.

But whatever may be the requirements for the Navy, either for its maintenance or for its necessary extension, I shall be found among the first to vote for whatever is required to secure for the Navy the highest state of efficiency.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has done the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] justice in his quotations. It was upon my interruption on Saturday, after I had stated my dissent entirely from the view that war was imminent or even remotely possible, that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] replied, "I do not think so either. My argument has been upon the contrary."

Mr. ALDRICH. The quotation which I read is entirely disconnected from any statement or remark of the Senator from Michigan. It had no connection with it. It is entirely in a different part of the Senator's speech.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have read the speech of the Senator from Indiana, and I listened to it with pleasure and with satisfaction.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think that I did not read the words the Senator from Indiana used?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think you have unfairly criticised the Senator from Indiana for his utterances.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think that the language which I used is not contained in the Senator's speech?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not dispute the Senator's quotation, but I say he put a wrong interpretation upon the language of the Senator from Indiana.

The American people are accustomed to listen to the Senator from Indiana, and recognize his brilliant attainments. There is not a Senator upon this side of the Chamber who does not recognize his ability when help is needed in elections and campaigns. He is able to state his views then to your satisfaction, and sometimes to your advantage. It is his ability and his character and courage that have again and again come to the rescue of Senators in doubtful States when their elections were pending. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will admonish the occupants of the galleries that applause is not permitted under the rules of the Senate, and if it is repeated the Chair will entertain a motion to clear the galleries.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We have heard a great deal of talk about war in the last few days, but, so far as my ears have been my guide, there has been more talk about war by those ultra-conservative Senators opposed to this amendment than from those who favor it.

Is the President of the United States in favor of war? Everyone here knows he is not. Senators have risen here and quoted again and again, with approval, from his wise advice of two years ago. If he was wise then, may he not be wise now? He still is President of our country and fills that exalted station with a wonderful personality, and is entitled to respect, especially when he is specifically charged under the Constitution with the control and direction of the Navy.

Mr. President, I will not permit any Senator to array me against the President or against the Naval Committee. I have great respect for both. Both perform their proper functions under the Constitution. No one usually follows more willingly than I the wise counsel of the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The State from which I come rejoices in his legislative achievements as much as his own. His poise, his conservatism, his great ability, and his faithfulness to duty are the common heritage of the American people; but because he finds himself in difference with the President of the United States, there is no special reason why we may not likewise differ with the distinguished Senator, without disrespect or ill will, I have never hesitated to controvert the President's views upon questions of principle with which we were not in accord, but this is purely a question of policy and his judgment may be best.

I said last Saturday, and I repeat, that I would not vote for a single additional ship of war upon the theory that war is imminent. I do not believe it to be even remotely possible. But I am going to vote for this amendment because the President of the United States, who is deemed wise enough at least to hold his great office and fortunate enough to enjoy the respect and confidence of the American people, urges this amendment upon us. He may have some information of his own, which he has not seen fit to communicate to us, affecting the diplomatic relations of our country with the world, which he thinks this proposition may facilitate.

I will vote for it for another reason. I believe this to be the most opportune time that has existed for years to order ships of war. I believe that a better and more advantageous arrangement can be made to-day than could have been made at any previous time in a decade. Our experience with reference to public building material and work upon the Panama Canal has taught us this. Is it not the province of the Government to take advantage of the situation? Other countries are doing it. Germany's new finance minister faces a deficit as large as our own at this moment, and yet her naval programme goes on unchecked. She has just selected with great care an experienced financier to take charge of her financial affairs on the theory that he can work the country out of a large and growing deficit, but the Germans are taking no backward step.

Mr. President, as a Republican, believing in the principles of my party and with faith in my country, and without the slightest disposition to apologize for what we have done or to take a single backward step in our economic policy, I refuse to subscribe to the idea that the American people have entered upon a period of decay and that we must forsake the plans which seem to be wise and proper in the estimation of our Chief Executive. No, Mr. President; I will vote for four battle ships, because I have confidence in his judgment and believe in his wisdom and patriotism. I will vote for four ships because I believe this to be an opportune time to make the arrangement.

The Senator from Rhode Island knows that these ships are not to be paid for out of this year's revenue or next year's revenue or the year following. This is a mere authorization, vesting in the Secretary of the Navy large discretionary power as to when he will order the ships and the plans of construction, and I see no grim foreboding of disaster to my country if I vote in favor of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senate, I can plainly see, desires a vote on this matter, and I shall not keep it long.

I am a little impatient at the assumption that in this matter the public sentiment, the people, the interests of the Republic demand four ships. That need not be purely a matter of conjecture. The same impassioned appeal that has been made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] for four battle ships was made by his—I will not say counterpart, but in the same way before that great tribunal which considers and acts at the other end of the Capitol. The appeal was the same; the citations were the same; the figures were the same, and that great legislative tribunal, fresh from the people, immediately to go again to the people, sounded its note of decision in no doubtful voice. I am impatient, in view of that, of the assumption that we or any of us who are opposed to four ships, are voting against the people and the interests of the people.

Mr. President, I do not need to spend any time upon the war scare that has been invoked here and has absolutely vanished and faded away in the discussion. I do not put my belief that there is no danger of conflict or friction with Japan either upon the condition of her finances or her necessities. I put it higher than that. There has been no note of expression from that great people, either by her ambassador here or by any communication with our State Department, that has not been opposed to all this. I found my belief that there is no danger of conflict with Japan upon the self-restraint and the high character and spirit of the diplomacy that Japan has shown ever since it began to be mooted that there might be danger with her, and because of this most conservative and satisfactory and peaceful attitude of Japan I do not distrust her and see no occasion to distrust her.

There is another reason why all this which has been and was at first in this debate urged has left no impression on my mind, and that is the direction of our side of the negotiations and dealings that have taken place with the Empire of Japan under that great and conservative and safe administrator, the Secretary of State. I trust him. I believe in his conservatism. I believe that in this he meets Japan half way. He has told us, Mr. President, that not only now, but that heretofore, there has never been friction, and his last utterance is to the effect that he apprehends no danger.

Mr. President, in that great atmosphere of established peace and established peaceful relations which has been fixed by the Japanese Empire and the Secretary of State no rude voice from this Chamber can interfere that will be mischievous. It will die out because of this discussion. It has disappeared. The Senators who invoked the specter of war have disappeared from the stage. The specter of war itself has disappeared, and there is no discordant note left before the Senate.

I am glad, Mr. President, of this discussion. I think it may be a demonstration that the high-water mark of what may be called the war element, the jingo element, has been reached, and that calmness will prevail and has prevailed. I am willing, with this confidence that animates me, without taking more time of the Senate, as 6 o'clock has been reached, that the Senate shall vote upon this proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senate to an amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES]. But it is addressed to a different part of the bill than the point to which the pending amendment is directed.

Mr. HALE. I hope we may have a direct vote.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will offer the amendment at the appropriate place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 85, line 17, before the words "first-class battle ships," it is proposed to strike out "two" and insert "four," so that if amended it will read:

The President is hereby authorized to have constructed four first-class battle ships to cost, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated.

Mr. BEVERIDGE and Mr. PILES called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). On this vote, and I think on one other, I am paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CLAY. I have been requested to state, by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], that if he were present on this amendment he would vote "yea."

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). The Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] was called from the Senate last Saturday, and I agreed to pair with him. I should like to inquire if a pair has been arranged for him?

Mr. ALDRICH. One has been.

Mr. BURROWS. A pair has been arranged. I want to state for the Senator that if he were present he would vote "yea" on this proposition. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from North Dakota is present.

Mr. GAMBLE. The senior Senator from North Dakota is present and expects to vote.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He expects to vote.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not know that. I withdraw my vote and will stand paired with the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am in possession of a telegram sent by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] saying "I favor four battle ships." By agreement with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] the pair of the Senator from New York is transferred to him. The Senator from Minnesota and I have agreed to that, and the Senator therefore is released, and the Senator from Minnesota, who has voted, has agreed——

Mr. ALDRICH. I would suggest that the Senator from Virginina [Mr. MARTIN] is absent without a pair, and he can be paired with the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. ALDRICH. But they would vote the same way on this proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Discussion is out of order, Mr. President.

Mr. KEAN. Regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Discussion is out of order.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and supposing the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] was not here I proposed to transfer my pair to him. But he being present, I have withdrawn my vote and stand paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], unless it is perfectly certain that he would vote the same way that I would.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the calling of the roll.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] stands regularly paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. By the transfer of the pair with the Senator from Louisiana to the Senator from Minnesota the Senator from New York is released from his pair and can vote. The Senator from Minnesota will withdraw his vote.

Mr. DEPEW. The Senator from Minnesota has voted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; but he is willing to withdraw his vote because of the arrangement——

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from Indiana is entirely mistaken. My pair is with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and I have voted "nay." Now, in order to facilitate the preparation of the record, and that all present may vote, I have no objection to any arrangement that may be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that this discussion is out of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Regular order.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. This is a matter of personal privilege, then. I ask the Senator if I can not make this arrangement——

Mr. TELLER. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the calling of the roll.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I am paired, unless relieved from that pair, under a general pair covering the whole session, with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY].

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is detained from the Senate by illness, as we all know. But an arrangement has been made upon this vote by which my pair is transferred to the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. MILTON]. I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL (when Mr. DOLLIVER's name was called). The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] authorizes me to state that he is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. If the Senator from Maryland were here and not paired, he would vote "nay."

Mr. KEAN (when Mr. ELKINS's name was called). The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] asked me to state his pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. FRAZIER (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when Mr. KITTREDGE's name was called). If the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MILTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. RAYNER's name was called). The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. If the Senator from Maryland were here he would vote "nay."

Mr. KEAN (when Mr. SCOTT's name was called). I desire to state that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN].

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. That pair has been transferred to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] and I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I am informed that I can transfer my pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 50, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Ankeny	Burkett	Heyburn	Smith, Mich.

Depew	Knox	Milton	Tillman
Dolliver	La Follette	Penrose

So Mr. PILES's amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 87, after line 5, insert:

For an auxiliary navy consisting of transports, colliers, scouts, dispatch boats, and other vessels necessary in aid of the fighting ships in case of war, $20,000,000, and the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the Postmaster-General are hereby constituted a commission to recommend to Congress a plan for utilizing such ships in times of peace.

Mr. HALE. I am constrained to make the point of order against the amendment. It is a scheme of general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to offer an amendment to be put in the bill at the proper place. I send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 88, line 3, after the word "delivery," insert:

That all material used in the construction of the vessels authorized or provided by this act, whether in Government navy-yards or by contract, may be purchased abroad and admitted free of all duty, and shall be of American product and manufacture.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate at this late hour——

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I will not move to lay the amendment on the table, but I will ask the Senator to bear in mind that the order of the Senate provided that we should finish the bill to-day.

Mr. MONEY. I understand that, and I should like to have the amendment considered. Nevertheless, the day is not expired yet, and we can have a little more patience.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that I offered this amendment as in Committee of the Whole, and I was assured by the Senator from Maine that it was substantially the law as it has been for some time.

He was sustained in that statement by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT]. I was not willing to set up my memory in opposition to the statement of two gentlemen of such distinguished character and familiar with the bill, as I was not. But, still thinking that I was right about it, I had the books consulted, and I find there is not any such law on the books, and never has been. We are acting under the act of August 3, 1886, and that positively prohibits the purchase of any material manufactured abroad. Not only that, but the act of the next year, making an appropriation for the Navy, repeated the law with some emphasis.

As the whole of the debate has turned upon the expenses of this appropriation, and you can say that the fight between four battle ships and two battle ships turned almost exclusively at its conclusion upon the point of expense, here is an opportunity for the Senate to have the battle ships built at very much less cost than if we proceed under the law as it now stands. It seems to me that every man who has made an argument in favor of economy and has cited the declining revenues of the country and also the deficit, which now amounts to $47,000,000, and by the end of the fiscal year will amount to about sixty-eight or sixty-nine million dollars, can well consider this proposition that will relieve the bill of a great deal of expense. Therefore, I ask that the amendment be adopted by the Senate.

Mr. HALE. The Senator's proposition was voted down in Committee of the Whole, I understand, and the bill has not yet reached the Senate. I suppose the Senator can offer it in the Senate.

Mr. MONEY. This proposition was not voted upon. The proposition was withdrawn, and it was not voted on at all. It was withdrawn by me in deference to the statement made by the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Nebraska.

I find that both those gentlemen were entirely mistaken. The law is exactly contrary to what they said. I will add further that, not content with that, I communicated by telephone with the Bureau of Construction, and they state that under the present law and under this bill they could not buy a pound of material abroad, even of American manufacture.

Mr. HALE. The amendment is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONEY. In what respect? It reduces expenditures, and it is germane to the bill.

Mr. HALE. But it changes the law. The Senator himself has made the point that the law forbids it now.

Mr. MONEY. I do not understand that the rule prohibits an amendment which reduces expenses.

Mr. HALE. Yes; if it changes the law, it does. I did not make the point of order because it was my impression that there is no existing law on the subject, and I still think so; but if the Senator is right and there is a law that it can not be done, then the amendment is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. MONEY. The law says that all the material purchased for the construction of the Navy must be of American manufacture, and stops at that. This is a provision permitting the products of American manufacture to be bought in any part of the world, and to be admitted free of duty, but they must be of American manufacture.

Mr. HALE. Then, Mr. President, on that statement it is a question for the Senate to decide. The Senator bears out my position the other day. There is no law on the subject, and therefore it is not subject to the point of order, but it is a matter for the Senate in its wisdom to determine. Unless the Senator desires to debate it further, I will move to lay the amendment on the table, or we can take a vote direct on his proposition.

Mr. MONEY. I have no desire to continue the debate at this late hour. The Senate understands what all this means. I ask the Senator to permit me to have a yea-and-nay vote on the proposition, and there will then be no necessity for a vote to lay it on the table.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator makes that request, it is very late, and I will agree to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I have transferred that pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] seems to be absent. I decline to vote, having a general pair with him. Otherwise I would vote "yea."

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Owing to my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], as before announced, I am compelled to withhold my vote.

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], and the transfer of my pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN]. Therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LONG. On this vote, as on the previous vote, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. If he were present he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bacon	Foster	McCreary	Paynter
Bankhead	Frazier	Milton	Simmons
Clay	Gary	Money	Taliaferro
Culberson	Gore	Newlands
Davis	Johnston	Overman

NAYS—41.

So Mr. MONEY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill. It was read on Saturday last.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. —. That none of the amounts herein appropriated for construction shall be expended where any laborer or mechanic doing any part of the work contemplated by the contract, in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor contracting for any part of said work contemplated, shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day upon such work except upon permission granted by the Secretary of the Navy during time of war or a time where war is imminent, or where any great national emergency exists: Provided, That the contractor contracting with the United States shall, in the event of the violation of said covenant as to hours of labor, forfeit to the United States the sum of $5 for each laborer or mechanic for every calendar day for which he shall have been required or permitted to labor more than eight hours upon the work under such contract.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that the amendment proposes a general scheme of legislation.

Mr. CULBERSON. I recognize, of course, that the point of order, if insisted upon, is well taken, but I hope the Senator from Maine will give us an opportunity to pass upon this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine insist upon his point or order?

Mr. HALE. Yes, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I understand the Senator from Ohio wishes to correct an amendment that was adopted some days ago.

Mr. DICK. I do. On Thursday the Senate adopted an amendment which I sent to the desk, providing for the payment of six months' pay to the widows of enlisted men and officers of the Navy. In the amendment which I sent to the desk the enlisted men and officers of the Marine Corps were included, but upon the misapprehension that they had been provided for in a like amendment adopted on the Army appropriation bill, we struck out the Marine Corps. Upon examination we find that the Marine Corps was not provided for in the Army appropriation bill; and in order that the correction may be made, I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 3 was agreed to as amended.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee on page 3 as amended was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DICK. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an amendment to the committee amendment as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Navy," at the end of the committee amendment on page 3, line 24, it is proposed to insert the words "and Marine Corps," and after the word "Navy," where it occurs at the end of the amendment as amended, it is proposed to insert the words "and Marine Corps."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, there is only one more formal amendment, and I offer it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 86, at the end of line 5, it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a comma and the words "to be built by contract, not more than two by any one contractor."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in order to protect our merchant marine, I move to amend the amendment of the committee on page 87, line 7, by striking out the words "of American registry."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is not in order at the present time. The amendment will be in order when the bill reaches the Senate. It would be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was agreed to in order to consider the Senator's amendment at this time.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can offer the amendment when the bill shall have been reported to the Senate.

Mr. GORE. Then I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. GORE. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 87 in the committee amendment, line 7, after the words "steam colliers," it is proposed to strike out the words "of American registry."

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that is the present law. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 12, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert the following paragraph:

Navy-yard in Key West, Fla.: For foundry, $60,000.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. I move to strike out the words "at least one of said vessels shall be built in the navy-yard" and substitute the words "both be built."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Oklahoma please state where the proposed amendment should come in?

Mr. GORE. I move to strike out the words requiring that at least one of said vessels—I do not remember just the language now—shall be constructed in navy-yards and substitute the words "both of said vessels." I understand the bill provides that one of the vessels can be let under contract, the other to be constructed in a navy-yard of the United States.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator refer to colliers or battle ships?

Mr. GORE. To battle ships.

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 21003) fixing the compensation of certain officials in the customs service, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also transmitted to the Senate resolutions commemorative of the life and public services of Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN and Hon EDMUND W. PETTUS, late Senators from the State of Alabama.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of Ohio, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 57) asking Congress to provide for a national bureau of health.

Whereas the health of the nation is of paramount importance, and "our national health is physically our greatest national asset" (President Roosevelt); and

Whereas in the growth of nations it inevitably happens that the people are massed in large centers, thereby, if uncontrolled, creating insanitary conditions destructive of life and health; and

Whereas such conditions can be removed and prevented only by the intelligent care and oversight of public-health officials endowed with broad powers and necessary means for action; and

Whereas in the prevention of disease by the enforcement of health measures by local officials in both urban and rural districts adequate results can be obtained only when such measures are soundly based upon well-substantiated facts and observation in relation to sanitation and hygiene; and

Whereas the United States Government, in ways impossible for the State and municipality, may gather information and conduct research work to determine the causes of disease and the best measures for their prevention, and by cooperation with State and local authorities may promote the health of all the people; and

Whereas the President, in his Provincetown speech, expressed the hope "that there will be legislation increasing the power of the National Government to deal with certain matters concerning the health of our people everywhere:" Therefore be it

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Ohio, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized and urged to create and establish a national bureau of health, and endow it with power and funds commensurate with the highly important duties with which it will necessarily be intrusted; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from Ohio in Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested to urge the establishment of said proposed bureau of health.

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Ohio transmit immediately upon the passage of this resolution a copy thereof to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Representatives of Ohio therein.

FREEMAN T. EAGLESON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JAMES M. WILLIAMS,
President of the Senate.

Adopted March 5, 1908.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Princeton, Ind., and a petition of sundry citizens of Akron, Ohio, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, of Athens, Ga., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the prevention of tuberculosis, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a petition of the Academy of National Sciences of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to establish a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian and White Mountains, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURKETT presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Omaha, Nebr., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for an investigation of the methods of the treatment of tuberculosis, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also presented a petition of the Retail Grocers' Association of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEWART presented a petition of sundry citizens of Lyndonville, Vt., and an petition of sundry citizens of Barre, Vt., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law," relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAYNER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Cumberland and Baltimore, and of sundry trade and labor organizations of Cumberland, all in the State of Maryland, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DEPEW presented a petition of the Associated Press, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the duty on white paper, wood pulp, and the materials used in the manufacture thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Emmet Club, of Tarrytown, N. Y., remonstrating against the ratification of the treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Flushing Association, of Flushing, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the preservation of the natural resources of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Lancaster, Depew, New York City, Poughkeepsie, Corning, Tarrytown, and Cohoes; of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of Ilion; of the Bricklayers and Masons' International Union, of Elmira; of the Journeymen Tailors' Union, of Elmira; of the Blacksmiths' Union, of Elmira; of the Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers' International Alliance, of Elmira; of the International Union of Journeymen Horseshoers, of Elmira; of the Iron Molders' Union of Elmira; of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Elmira, and of the Central Trade and Labor Council, of Olean, all in the State of New York, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HEMENWAY presented petitions of the Central Trades Council of Marion, of sundry citizens of Muncie, and of the Trades Assembly of Logansport, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LONG introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 6841) granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. B. McClintock;

A bill (S. 6843) granting an increase of pension to Andrew C. McMaken.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 6844) to amend section 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railway Company in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," approved February 12, 1901, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for rent of temporary quarters for post-office purposes at Richmond, Va., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment proposing to amend the act of June 22, 1874, by inserting "and the collector of customs for the district of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia," intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS PUBLIC-BUILDINGS BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 to purchase a site for the erection of a post-office building at Frankfort, Ind., intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public-buildings bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 21003. An act fixing the compensation of certain officials in the customs service, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5126) to grant to the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, certain rights of way for sewer and street purposes through and along the military reservation of Fort Lawton, Wash., and through the reservations for the Lake Washington Canal.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

S. 5262. An act to repeal an act approved April 30, 1906, entitled "An act to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes," and for other purposes;

S. 6028. An act to provide for safety of life on navigable waters during regattas or marine parades;

H. R. 603. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 15219. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909; and

S. R. 48. Joint resolution instructing the Attorney-General to institute certain suits, and so forth.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consideration of the bill (H. R. 20063) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill can be laid aside temporarily. I will call it up in the morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the bill be laid aside temporarily. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would suggest that the reading of the message go over until to-morrow morning, as the hour is late and there are but few Senators now present.

Mr. LODGE. It has been given to the press.

Mr. TELLER. That will not make any difference.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 28, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

[Continuation of the legislative day of Monday, April 20, 1908.]

The recess having expired, at 11.30 o'clock a. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

FORT LAWTON MILITARY RESERVATION, WASH.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 5126), to grant to the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, certain rights of way for sewer and street purposes through and along the military reservation at Fort Lawton, Wash., and through the reservations for the Lake Washington Canal.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum. The point is sustained. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absentees, and the question will be taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 250, nays 2, answered "present" 17, not voting 118, as follows:

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 603. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

H. R. 12773. An act granting to the city of Woodward, in the State of Oklahoma, lot 2, in block 48, for park and other public purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to the enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 5262. An act to repeal an act approved April 30, 1906, entitled "An act to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes," and for other purposes.

S. 6028. An act to provide for safety of life on navigable waters during regattas or marine parades.

S. R. 48. Joint resolution instructing the Attorney-General to institute certain suits, and so forth.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. A. P. GARDNER of Massachusetts for the remainder of the session on account of ill health.

INVESTIGATION OF WOOD PULP AND PRINT PAPER.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following resolution with a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 350.

Resolved, That the select committee to investigate as to wood pulp and print paper, and for other purposes, shall have authority to have such printing and binding done as it may consider necessary in the conduct of its business; to employ a clerk, messenger, and stenographers, and to incur such other expenses as may be deemed necessary by said committee, and all the expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the usual vouchers, approved as now provided by law.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules a second is ordered.

The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. CURRIER] is entitled to twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, the resolution explains itself. On April 21 the House adopted a resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the wood-pulp and print-paper matter, and this resolution simply provides the money absolutely essential to carry on that investigation. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, from this side of the Chamber I think we agree that this committee has been created for the purpose of delay—for dilatory, filibustering purposes, in order to prevent quick legislative action in producing relief in connection with the wood-pulp and print-paper situation. That quick legislative remedy could be obtained if the Speaker would recognize anybody upon the floor, upon either side, to move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the further consideration of either of the several bills having free pulp and paper in view, and putting it under suspension of the rules upon its passage through the House. There is not a Member of the House on either side of the Chamber who is not aware of that fact. I think we Democrats agree with the substance of the resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Associated Press held at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York City, on Tuesday April 21. That resolution read as follows:

Representatives of 774 daily newspapers gathered at the annual meeting of the Associated Press, respectfully ask the President and Congress to grant immediate relief from the exactions of combinations of paper makers. In September, 1907, and again in November, 1907, the attention of the authorities was directed to the excessive prices then demanded by the paper combinations. Immediately upon the assembling of Congress, twenty or more bills aiming to correct these conditions and to put paper and pulp on the free list were introduced and referred to the Ways and Means Committee. Persistent efforts to obtain a hearing have been refused. Dilatory tactics have been employed to prolong present conditions and to carry over to another session of Congress every proposition designed for relief. All newspapers here represented protest against delay.

Attention is also directed to the false reports of news-print paper prices which were recently furnished to Congress by the Director of the Census Bureau. The newspapers here represented use approximately 80 per cent of the news-print paper consumed in the United States. We denounce the quotations as submitted to Congress as misleading and unworthy of credence. The reiteration of the accuracy of these figures of the Director after the error had been called to public attention tends to shake public confidence and respect for statistics thus compiled.

Notwithstanding that fact, however, Mr. Speaker, the committee has been organized. There is at least an allegation to the country that this committee is going to examine into this wood-pulp question with the sincere desire to arrive at the truth. It would ill become us, therefore, to refuse to the committee the instrumentalities for taking down and publishing the testimony of men who are ready to show that this tariff upon wood pulp and print paper has had very much to do with the rise in the price of paper and that behind that tariff as a shelter a combination has become possible and that both the combination and the tariff as cause of monopolistic exploitation exist. If you could get any other result from it or if the committee can, they will have to indulge in a degree of intellectual gymnastics that will astonish the country. Now, Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Clerk to read this during that time. It is a continuation of a paper part of which was read the other day and the reading of which was stopped by the expiration of my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

At whose expense? Solely at the expense of the most unprotected among all manufacturing industries in the United States—the printing and publishing industry, more especially the newspapers. The latter insist that the paper manufacturers, in view of the protection granted them against competition from abroad, are at least under so much obligation as to provide for the demands of consumers in this country. Have they lived up to the fulfillment of this just expectation?

When the paper manufacturers got together for the purpose of bettering their conditions, they accomplished the first step through the Dingley tariff, which put a minimum duty of $6 per ton on news-print paper valued at not above 2 cents per pound, and $8 per ton on paper valued above 2 cents per pound, and raised the duty on wood pulp from $1.20 to $1.67 per ton. The next step, although encountering many delays, was finally consummated by creating a combination to exhaust the surplus stock of paper, to cause a paper famine, and to raise prices. From $35 per ton, in 1906, the price has been raised to $40 in 1907, and to $50 in the present year, being an increase of 25 to 40 per cent, respectively. The pretext put forward by the manufacturers for their advance in prices is the increased cost of wood and labor. Now, let us look into that a little closer. Government records show that paper mills in the United States and Canada are making paper at a cost of less than $28 per ton at the mill, and that American mills can and do make paper more cheaply than Canadian mills by reason of a better supply of skilled labor, cheaper coal, and an adequate home market for their product; also lower ocean rates and lower marine insurance on their exports. Furthermore, it is a fact that Canadian paper manufacturers, after paying the duty, have profitably undersold American manufacturers in the American market, and that American paper makers have with profit disposed of their product abroad in competition with Canada, Great Britain, Norway, and Germany at prices considerably below those maintained in the American market.

As to the increased cost of labor, figures printed in the Paper Mill Directory for 1907 show an increase of only 1 per cent in labor cost of a news-print paper mill, modern machinery and other improvements having offset the increased pay of the paper-mill employee. The labor employed in news-print paper mills is not the beneficiary of the oppressive advances that have been made in paper prices. Not one-twentieth of the advance in paper prices goes to labor.

At the beginning of the year 1907 there was a stock of 60,000 tons of news-print paper on hand. Owing to increased activity at the mills and decreased consumption on the part of the newspapers during the summer months, there should have been an accumulation of stock at the beginning of the fall season, but at that time the announcement came from the paper makers that a paper famine was imminent and that prices must be raised. It was difficult to reconcile this statement with the increased shipments of paper to Mexico, Cuba, Chile, Argentina, and Japan and an export of 60,000 tons of news-print paper during the year ending June 30, 1907, in disregard of the depleted condition of the domestic market.

In May, 1906, the United States Government dissolved the General Paper Company as an unlawful combination and warned its subsidiary corporations to avoid certain forms of combination. These prohibitions have been disobeyed in such a flagrant manner as to enable the American Newspaper Publishers' Association to lay before the Attorney-General of the United States incontrovertible proof of the efforts made by the seven groups of the American Paper and Pulp Association—under which guise the paper trust is operating—to stifle competition, to increase prices, and to put an additional burden amounting yearly to many millions upon the printing and publishing interests of the country. One of these groups centers about the International Paper Company, which operates in the Eastern market. It was organized nearly ten years ago by a consolidation of thirty mills, most of them in bad condition, with antiquated machinery, half of which was no better than junk. During the ten years since that consolidation was made the old machinery has not improved with age. The company's capacity to make paper is less to-day than it was rated at the time of the consolidation. Not one new machine has been added to the equipment until within a recent period, while one or more of the original plants have been dismantled and abandoned. The International Paper Company has not grown with the demands of business. It has remained stationary. It has squeezed out of the paper consumers all it could without developing manufacture, meanwhile pouring millions of dollars into speculative investments in Canadian forests, although the company previously held woodland that would produce forever a supply of spruce pulp wood sufficient to make twice the quantity of pulp it now uses.

Contrast the paper manufacture with the printing and publishing industry. The newspapers and periodicals had in 1905 a reported capital invested of $239,000,000. They paid salaries and wages amounting to $106,000,000 per annum to 160,000 workers. They paid $58,000,000 per annum for their principal article of use, white paper. The printing and publishing business as a whole turns over its capital in about ten months; large department stores that advertise energetically will turn over their stock about seven times a year, but the largest paper manufacturer in the world, the International Paper Company, with a capital exceeding $60,000,000, does a gross annual business of only $21,000,000, thus requiring three years to turn over its capital. To maintain that concern and its allied combinations with their oppressive weight of overcapitalization and to provide a pretext for protecting the labor of 15,000 paper-mill employees receiving less than $9,000,000 per annum, the publishing business has been subjected to a series of deliberately planned schemes of extortion.

The printing business stands for the intellectual growth of the country, and it is helpful to good government in that it promotes intelligence and raises the standard of citizenship. If the combination of paper makers can succeed in its course it will cripple the publishing business, it will tax intelligence, because the newspapers and the periodicals are the people's school and library. Under any government such a tax would be oppressive and proscriptive. In a government, based as ours is, upon the intelligence and resultant virtues of the people, it is anomalous and monstrous. In recognition of this fact President Roosevelt in his recent special message to Congress has recommended the immediate repeal of the duty on wood pulp, with a corresponding reduction of the duty upon paper made from wood pulp.

The Reform Club will undoubtedly lend its weighty and influential aid to the President so that at least this one revision of the tariff may be accomplished—before the Presidential election.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. CURRIER] desire to use any of his time now?

Mr. CURRIER. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time an editorial from the New York Herald of April 22. I hope we may have order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ONE-CENT NEWSPAPERS AND THE "PAPER TRUST."

[New York Herald, April 22, 1908.]

"Be sure you are right—and then go ahead."

The famous motto of David Crockett has not been much in favor during the present Administration, which has too often acted as if its device were, "Go ahead—and then find out whether we are right."

There has been great complaint about an advance during recent years in the price of the sort of paper on which newspapers are printed. All other grades of paper, in common with all commodities and the wages of all grades of labor, also advanced during the period of expansion, and prosperity had also risen.

Manufacturers generally adopted the businesslike plan of raising the price of their finished products to meet this increased cost of raw material. A great many publishers of 1-cent morning newspapers in various parts of the country, finding that the raw paper in their sheets cost more than they were sold for at wholesale rates to newsdealers, adopted the same simple plan and raised the price of their papers.

A considerable number of publishers, however, fearing that higher prices would result in decreased circulation, have continued to sell their wares at less than cost, and clamorously insist that the community in general and the paper makers in particular must be compelled to bear the expense of enabling them to persist in their unbusinesslike course. With all their facilities for giving publicity to their views, they have raised such a loud and protracted wail that the community, which has heard little or nothing about advances in other commodities, has its ears deafened with complaints about the high price of news print paper and clamorous demands that Congress compel the paper makers to sell cheaper under penalty of having the tariff removed from this kind of paper and the wood pulp of which it is made.

The plea of the paper makers that the cost of their wood and chemicals and labor—all the elements of manufacture—had advanced was ignored and the Attorney-General was asked to investigate the largest manufacturers. He recently decided that there was not sufficient evidence upon which to base an investigation, whereupon extraordinary pressure was brought to bear upon the President and upon Congress to remove the tariff from pulp and paper. In his message of March 25 Mr. Roosevelt yielded so far as to express the opinion that "one change in the tariff could with advantage be made forthwith," namely, to make wood pulp free, "with a corresponding reduction upon papers made from wood pulp when they come from any country that does not put an export duty upon them." The suggestion that this great American industry be arbitrarily singled out for such savage attack has not been followed by the Committee of Ways and Means, which has in its hands more than a score of bills aimed against the paper makers.

Common justice requires that no such invidious action be taken without investigation to ascertain the facts. The House has wisely rejected the President's suggestion to "go ahead and then find out whether he was right," and it yesterday adopted Speaker Cannon's resolution authorizing the appointment of a commission to inquire into the reasons for the existing price of white paper. The facts, when elicited, may convince the complaining publishers that their energies would be more profitably employed in revising their own business methods than in dragooning the paper makers.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. A minute and a half.

Mr. CURRIER. I will yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to be read in my time an editorial from the New York American of April 25.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LET THE PUBLISHERS BE CONSISTENT.

It seems to the American that the publishers of this country are placing themselves in a peculiarly narrow position and in a peculiarly selfish light before the community when they urge Congress to adopt a free-trade policy in regard to certain products which affect only the publishers themselves.

The conception of their duty that newspaper publishers ought to have is that they are attorneys for the people, and represent the readers of their publications and employ the power of their publications in the interest of those readers and of the whole community. If the publishers maintain that standard of professional ethics, they would conclude either that protection was a beneficial policy and that they were willing to pay their tax along with the rest of the people to maintain that policy, or else that a reduction of the tariff was desirable and that it was their duty to secure the benefits of such a reduction for all the people and not merely for themselves.

The present attitude of the publishers appears to be that they are ready to use the power of their papers to secure every benefit for themselves without regard for the interests of the rest of the community. There seems to be no consideration of how protection or how tariff revision may affect the working people or how it may affect the consumers generally, but merely of how the particular matter of wood pulp may effect the publishers. This is an attitude which lays the publishers open to rather more than a suspicion of sordid self-interest.

The American recommends to the publishers of this country the tariff-reform plank of the Independent party platform: "No protection for oppressive trusts." Not merely no protection for the one oppressive trust that has its grip upon the publishers' personal pocketbook, but no protection for any of the oppressive trusts that rob the people, the clients whom the publishers are presumed to protect.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KÜSTERMANN].

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the good shepherd of my friends, the Democrats, whose flock follows him blindly, looked straight into my face—something that is to be wondered at when you consider what he has been doing here for the past few weeks—and said that "that gentleman would be the right one to force this pulp and paper business onto the floor of the House."

Now, while it is true that I thought it would be well to correct the mistake made as to petroleum, an error made by both Democrats and Republicans, and to take the little joker out of the Dingley tariff, I am far from saying that the tariff on pulp and paper should be removed without a thorough investigation.

I am representing a district whose leading industry is the manufacture of paper and pulp, and I believe to-day that our paper and pulp manufacturers would have done better if they had invested in other industries. They have not made any great fortunes. I had the misfortune of investing $4,000 in a pulp factory six years ago, and I can assure you, gentlemen, that with the best of management and the best of machinery I have not realized more than 1½ per cent a year on my investment. So I say it is no more than fair and just that we should have an investigation of this and not act in this matter blindly. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am very glad the commission was appointed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] desire to use the balance of his time?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the Republicans say that the "friends of protection" must, and will, make the next tariff to suit themselves. Why do you not do it now, gentlemen? Why defer? You have the House, you have the Senate, and you have the President—a Republican Administration out and out. You know that the next House may not be controlled by the Republicans, the chances, to say the least, are favorable to the Democrats, the enemies of protection. If you are sincere protectionists and feel that protectionists only should remodel the tariff, why do you not proceed at once to do so? The power is within your grasp, and you know it.

If you are sincere in your statement that protectionists only must refix the tariff, why, I submit, in all seriousness, do you not proceed to do so while the Democrats are in the minority? The Democrats may have the next House and the White House, and you know it. You know, gentlemen, that there is more than "probable cause to believe" a monopoly is controlling the wood pulp industry, and the President thinks so, and you know that. You know the Department of Justice thinks so and filed a bill against the paper trust, against which trust the people are protesting, and you know the Federal judge trying that case rendered a decree entering an injunction against that trust.

When Mr. Blaine was Speaker of the House a resolution was passed by the House directing the Ways and Means Committee "at its earliest practical moment to report a bill to this House abolishing the tariff on coal, so as to secure that important article of fuel to the people free from taxation." Note the language, "at its earliest practical moment." That resolution was passed by the House, Mr. Speaker, and a little later a similar resolution as to salt was passed, in these words:

That the Committee on Ways and Means are hereby instructed to report to this House forthwith a bill reducing the present duties on all classes of salt 50 per cent.

Why do you not "forthwith" act in this matter of wood pulp, at least? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why does not the Speaker of this House follow the illustrious example of Speaker Blaine, the "Plumed Knight," and permit some one to call up a wood pulp resolution or a bill—to free list wood pulp? Why can not the Republican Congress of 1908 follow the shining example set by the great Congress of 1870? Why do not you Republicans follow the prescription which Senator John Sherman said was his cure for the "monopolized articles." He said that the moment such a fact was called to his attention, that is that a tariff duty protected a monopoly, he would "without a moment's hesitation" put that monopolized article on the free list.

Mr. Speaker, I say to you and your great party that here are precedents, wise and sane, but which this Republican House refuses to follow, although the people are clamoring for relief. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I agree that this resolution should be adopted, because it provides means and facilities to enable the committee of the House created for the purpose of inquiring into the extortions charged against the "wood pulp and paper trust;" that is, that this trust has, by reason of the protective tariff, been enabled to extort from those who use print paper the additional sum of nearly $65,000,000 in a very short period. I want to remove this tariff duty. I am ready to vote for it now, to-day, but if I can not be permitted to do that, then I want this committee to have all the means necessary to find the facts.

It is true that the Department of Justice has been investigating this matter after a fashion, but the Department of Justice has not yet arrived at any conclusion; and, so far as we are informed, found nothing; and I thought that this House ought to act without taking intermediate steps, like the appointment of this committee, that seems to block the removal of this unjust and unnecessary tariff on wood pulp and print paper. Such a tariff is a tax on intelligence; we ought to repeal it now. In my opinion, if this House had an opportunity to vote here and now on the matter, it would repeal this tariff on wood pulp and print paper by an overwhelming majority. This opportunity is denied and, because this is the only means left to us under the direction of the majority, therefore I am willing, cheerfully, to grant to that committee who are investigating the question the power, the money, and the means to investigate and find out all the facts so that we may as soon as possible force the majority to act.

THE BARTLETT AMENDMENT.

Mr. Speaker, on the 17th of December, 1902, the first action was taken to provide a specific sum to prosecute the trusts, although in 1901 and in 1902 the President had sent messages to this House asking for specific appropriations to prosecute the trusts; yet these had lain here before the House for nearly a year. These two messages from the President, requesting Congress, then largely Republican as now, for a special fund to be appropriated for the purpose of prosecuting violators of the antitrust law, were unheeded; Congress refused to do anything about it.

On the 17th of December, 1902, I had the honor to offer an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, then being considered, an amendment which will appear on page 411 of the RECORD of December 17, proposing to appropriate $250,000 for the purpose of making these prosecutions and directing the Attorney-General to proceed to prosecute all violators of the antitrust laws; and since that day all these prosecutions against the beef trust, the Standard Oil, and all other trusts have been carried on under that appropriation, offered by myself, supported by Democratc colleagues, and forced in the bill over the protests of a very reluctant Republican majority. And while this fund has been added to, it may be truly stated that the Democratic minority forced this amendment on this bill when I offered that amendment, which I will read:

For the purpose of enforcing the antitrust laws of the United States, and to enable the Attorney-General of the United States to prosecute suits and legal proceedings against persons or corporations who shall violate the antitrust laws of the United States now in force, or that may hereafter be enacted, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may, in the judgment of the Attorney-General be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General; and he is hereby directed to proceed against any and all persons or corporations who may have violated or may violate any of the provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States.

There was a point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], then in charge of the bill, but at the suggestion of the present Speaker of the House, then Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the point of order was not insisted upon. It is true, in order to get some credit of carrying out the suggestion of the President, and that all the credit might not go to a Democrat, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] offered an amendment increasing the amount to $500,000, which I promptly accepted, and in that shape it was passed and became the law. The amendment was put upon that bill on the 17th day of December, 1902, and the money that was furnished to the Department of Justice for all these prosecutions, $500,000, was first inaugurated, first proposed, and first placed upon that bill in this House by myself, supported by the Democrats, as will appear by reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that day.

In fact, for several years the Department of Justice had more money than was needed, and my first amendment of $250,000 was ample for all the needs of the prosecutions at that time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what will be the result of this investigation. The New York Sun says:

The House leaders are inclined to blame the Administration for the position of the party in the lower branch of Congress. The House Republicans are facing angry publishers in nearly every district in the United States. They want the duty on wood pulp and print paper removed, and if it is not removed they threaten reprisals at the coming elections. The House would, therefore, like to go before the country as a more effective trust buster than the Department of Justice, just to get even with the Administration.

I do not know whether that is true or not. It is true, however, that the Department of Justice, even with all this money at its disposal, has not done anything to reveal and disclose or prosecute effectively this trust, which, it is charged, have in the past year increased the price of print paper nearly $50,000,000 to the consumer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to say on this, except it is a resolution in the usual form, providing means to carry on this investigation, and we have been compelled to adopt this plan, because of the refusal of the majority to do anything else. This is the only relief we could afford the people from the oppressions of this trust. The members of that committee to which this resolution was referred, and the members of the minority on this side, as we were when we appropriated the $500,000 in 1902 on the amendment I suggested at that time, are willing to-day to give all the money and all the means that are necessary in order to find out the truth and to prosecute, if necessary, and destroy, if possible, this iniquitous trust known as the paper trust, and all such trusts and combinations.

Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I know no difference between a good trust and a bad trust. "Monopolies are odious" to the English-speaking people, as was stated by Lord Coke in his decision in the Card monopoly case in 6 Coke Reports. The feeling has come down to us from our English ancestors; every man who draws inspiration from the battles of our English-speaking ancestors for the rights of the people, and from the decisions of those great judges of the courts of England, feels "that monopolies, private monopolies, are odious" to the American people. A private monopoly is indefensible, and whether it be of "wood pulp or print paper" or of any other commodity, should be destroyed. Certainly it should not be protected by the tariff.

For one, I repeat I think that all trusts, whether the gigantic ones like the steel trust, the Standard Oil, the beef trust, all monopolies which oppresses the people, or whether they be what the President and some of his followers have chosen to call a "good trust," or "innocent trusts," are bad trusts in my opinion. They differ only in the degree of harm they may do. None are good; they are all bad, and I would destroy them all; right now I would endeavor to destroy the paper trust by making wood pulp and print paper free of tariff duty. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CURRIER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the pending resolution is one to authorize the select committee appointed under the recent resolution of the House to carry on its necessary work. Ordinarily such a resolution would pass in the House without debate and without a roll call; but I suppose it is the intention of my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], after causing the exhaustion of practically forty minutes of time in debate, to exhaust or waste thirty minutes more time in a roll call on this resolution. Our committee was in session this morning, engaged in hearing a very distinguished representative of the American Publishers' Association, but was compelled to adjourn because of the obstructive tactics of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did the gentleman from Mississippi make the point of no quorum?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have never had occasion——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I have never had occasion to seek work from the Speaker of the House or from the House itself. It has fallen to my lot to be appointed chairman of this special committee, and I think I can say, without unjust reflection, or any reflection upon the other Members of the House, that the other members of that committee are known to be as industrious and as fair-minded as any gentlemen who have ever sat upon the floor of this House. [Applause.] That committee, Mr. Speaker, was not appointed, as I understand it, for the purpose of prejudging the case. It was not appointed for the purpose of bringing in a report fixed in advance. It was appointed by this House under the resolution for the purpose of honestly and fairly ascertaining the facts, so far as they could be ascertained, and of making a fair and honest report to this House as speedily as can be done. It is the desire of the committee, if the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] will not insist that the members of the committee shall be constantly on the floor of this House, that the committee shall keep in session from now until it shall finish its labors. It is the hope of the committee and my own expectation that the committee will be able to make a report to this House before the final adjournment of this session of Congress. I do not know how much of our time may be uselessly wasted through the obstructive efforts of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. But I dare say that if we are not obstructed by the efforts of the gentleman from Mississippi we will be able to bring in a report, and I hope and believe that in spite of his efforts we will be able to bring in a report. Now I yield to my friend from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman says his work was interrupted by the obstructive tactics of the gentleman from Mississippi to-day. How?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I do not propose to bandy words with my friend from New York, who is one of the keenest-minded men in this House and who is about the last man in the House I would endeavor to instruct upon that point, because he knows as well as I know that the present condition in the House is owing to the obstructive, the deliberately obstructive, tactics of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman from Illinois knows that the committee has no right to sit during the sessions of the House, and when the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] made the point of no quorum and there was a call of the House the gentleman was compelled to come here to help make a quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me half a minute?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] knows, in the first place, so far as that is concerned, that this committee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House. That nails the first proposition of the gentleman from New York. The resolution provides for that. Secondly, anybody in the House knows, and I think nearly everybody in the country who pays any attention to the matter—unless it be my friend from New York—knows that the point of no quorum was made because of the obstructive tactics of the gentleman from Mississippi. That is exactly what I am complaining about.

Everybody in this House knows that ordinarily business in this House is carried on, and has to be carried on, without the presence of a quorum; but because the demand for a call of the roll by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] precipitated a case where it would either take probably two hours' time, or under the point of no quorum half an hour's time, that point was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. That demand was made for the purpose of shortening the delay caused by the gentleman from Mississippi. Nobody knows that better than my friend from New York. Now, that is neither here nor there. What I want to say to the House is that notwithstanding the tactics of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] it is the intention of the special committee to give just as full and fair hearings to everybody as can be given. We shall do our duty as well as we know how, regardless of the attitude of the newspapers on the one side or the paper manufacturers on the other side. [Applause on the Republican side.] Feeling that the House has placed upon us a trust and that we must be bound to deal fairly and honestly with the House, the committee will endeavor to do that.

All of the reflections which the gentleman from Mississippi makes, purely partisan, purely prejudged, without regard to his knowledge of the facts, I leave to himself. If he has any information the committee will be glad to have him lay it before it. If the gentleman from Tennessee has any facts in his possession, if he knows anything except mere talk, the committee will be glad to hear from him. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will tell the gentleman where he can find some information, and that is in the Federal court of Minnesota.

Mr. MANN. We will have the gentleman from Tennessee come before the committee and testify under oath where it can be found.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I can tell the gentleman that there is proof there and that an injunction was had upon it.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman from Tennessee can tell more things without being placed under oath than any man I know of.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will swear that your Attorney-General said that he filed the evidence there and got the injunction. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am ready to do it now.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee is always the same yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow; he never varies, and so I can not help yielding to him.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman from Illinois called my name; he attacked me first. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I always notice, Mr. Speaker, that wherever a matter of partisanship comes up in the House and an assault is made, you can get plenty of applause on that side of the House. All that is needed on that side of the House to obtain applause is for somebody to attack some gentleman upon this side and apply to him an opprobrious epithet; but so far as that is concerned, it has no effect upon me.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman certainly does not mean to say that I have applied any opprobrious epithet to him?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Because I am wholly incapable of doing such a thing.

Mr. MANN. I admit everything the gentleman from Tennessee says for the sake of argument so that he will leave me alone. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Tennessee and I can never have any personal difficulty because we have such a high personal regard for each other.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to argue any further in this matter. It is for the House to determine. Gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have said that the committee was not appointed in good faith. Some newspapers have said that the committee was not appointed in good faith, but they are now before us in good faith, and we are endeavoring to deal in good faith with the House and with the country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GAINES of West Virginia). Debate is exhausted, and the question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the resolution with the committee amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 263, nays 1, answered "present" 10, not voting 113, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For the day:

Mr. JENKINS with Mr. BOOHER.

Until further notice:

Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania with Mr. SAUNDERS.

Mr. MCGAVIN with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. MCCALL with Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES.

Mr. LONGWORTH with Mr. HAY.

Mr. LAWRENCE with Mr. GILLESPIE.

Mr. LANDIS with Mr. BURLESON.

Mr. ANTHONY with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.
For the session:
Mr. BRADLEY with Mr. GOULDEN.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

TORNADO IN GEORGIA, ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI, AND LOUISIANA.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the following joint resolution be read and agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GAINES of West Virginia). The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the following resolution be read and agreed to. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on the 25th day of April, 1908, there occurred in the States of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana a disastrous cyclone or tornado, causing the loss of hundreds of lives and the destruction of much property and rendering many persons homeless and temporarily without means of support: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to use such means as he has at hand, or that may be furnished to him, in the way of tents, provisions, and supplies to relieve the distress occasioned by such storm or cyclone, and that he take such steps as he may deem proper for the relief of such distress and need among the people who have suffered from the results of said storm or cyclone.

Resolved, That the Congress has heard with much regret and profound sorrow of the terrible loss of life and destruction of property attendant upon the disastrous storm or cyclone which visited the States of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana on the 25th day of April, 1908, and hereby extends its sympathy to the sufferers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. What is the request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request is that the resolution just read be agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I have no objection to that; but I wanted to see what it was, so that there would not be any roll call on it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. There will not be any roll call on this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following order, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That immediately on the adoption of this order the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 21260, the sundry civil appropriation bill, that general debate thereon be closed in eight hours, and that the first reading of the bill in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a second is ordered. The gentleman from Minnesota is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, in order to facilitate the adoption of the rule and that we may proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, I shall not occupy any of my time now. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that in the gentleman's time he would give some explanation of the bill. The bill is a long one, stretching over very many items, and I think it is due to the House that such new legislation as the bill may carry should at least be stated and explained to the House. I shall yield to the gentleman from New York, Mr. FITZGERALD, a member of the committee, five minutes, reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I regret that this resolution was not referred to the Committee on Rules. If it had been, it would have been perfected so that the usual course adopted in the consideration of appropriation bills would have been followed. The universal practice has been to divide the time equally between the two sides of the House and to have it controlled by members of the committee. In the consideration of this bill it so happens that under the usual practice of the House the request would have been made that I should have control of the time on behalf of the minority. I regret that the chairman of the committee did not, in preparing the resolution, arrange to protect his rights and my rights under the usual practice of the House. I know that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] had reported this resolution from the Committee on Rules, he would not have overlooked either the gentleman from Minnesota or myself. The adoption of this rule will be most embarrassing to me. Assuming that the usual practice would be followed, a number of gentlemen upon this side of the House have requested me to obtain time for them under general debate. In my innocence, assuming that the House would proceed in the orderly manner under its rules to consider this great bill, I foolishly agreed to allot to several gentlemen the time requested by them. I find now that the chairman of the committee proposes the adoption of a rule which strips both from myself and himself the ordinary privilege accorded to Members who have charge of appropriation bills. For that reason those gentlemen upon this side whom I have assured would have time will have to understand that if I am unable to carry out the assurance given them it is not through any fault of mine, but because of the tyrannical manner in which the House is now being handled by the majority.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from New York permit an interruption?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that it is not the purpose of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill to deny to the minority the right to control one-half of the time, and I intend to follow the adoption of the rule with a request that the usual division between the minority and the majority be allowed; and if the gentleman will consent, that division will be made; on the contrary, if the gentleman or any Member on his side objects to it, then the division of time will be with the Chair, as it has always been.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt I shall assent to the request, but I can not make any promises for my colleague from New York [Mr. PAYNE] when unanimous consent is asked; and I doubt very seriously whether, in view of the statements that he has made during the past few weeks, he will consent that, by unanimous consent, any Member on this side of the House shall obtain privileges under the peculiar rules under which we are now operating. So I have again to express my regrets that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations after preparing this rule did not ask that it be sent in the usual way to the Committee on Rules, to be perfected in the ingenious rule hopper there, so our rights would be protected without having to depend upon the generosity of my colleague, the leader of the majority.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to remind my colleague also of the fact that if this bill had been taken up under the ordinary rules of the House, a request would have been made for a division of time, and the gentleman would have the same opportunity to make the request and submit himself to the mercy of his colleague from New York upon that question that he has now under this order of the House, so that he loses nothing because of this proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I only want to console him before he yields——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Accepting the statement of my colleague in the spirit in which it is offered, it is nevertheless true that the gentleman from Minnesota evidently did not have the same confidence in the gentleman from New York that I have, because if he had, he would have asked, under the rules, that this bill be taken up in the ordinary way.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield three or five minutes more, as the gentleman may desire.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that this is the second time the Committee on Rules has been set aside within a week. I expect the next time that is done to see the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] sorrowfully and dejectedly march down the aisle, walk up the steps, address the Speaker, remove from his lapel the carnation which he wears with so much grace, and lay it there as they were accustomed to lay the heads of victims before the imperial Cæsars in the past. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Of what use is it to occupy the distinguished position of senior member of the majority upon the Committee on Rules if he is to be passed over and all of these intruders, these outsiders, are given the little glory of moving to suspend the rules and adopt a special rule? Mr. Speaker, it should be called to the attention of the House that a number of these special rules have been adopted here without justification. A rule was adopted providing for the passage of appropriation bills under a suspension of the rules, not because of anything that had happened, but because of a nightmare with which some men of this House are afflicted. I happened to go to a playhouse the other night, and there a scene was enacted that depicted accurately the condition in which the Speaker finds himself. A gentleman having been caught in a very unpleasant situation pretends that he is asleep, and picking up a lighted candle he goes about reciting praises of his devoted wife. The Speaker here a short time ago imagined that he had been caught asleep. The minority did not demand separate votes upon amendments of the Senate to the deficiency bill, but the Speaker with his candle imagined that would happen to some other bill, and ever since then he has been going around with a lighted candle in a dream; and unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania blows that candle out and wakes the Speaker up, this House is not able to tell what outrages will be perpetrated by the sleeping Speaker in his dreams. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that some time the candle will come sufficiently near me, and if it does I hope to be able to accumulate sufficient wind to blow it out, let the Speaker wake, and let the House do business in an orderly and proper manner. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not accumulate wind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, my friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has made the situation perfectly clear. The whole country understands it. The country understands the difference between "filibustering," which means taking up time to prevent legislation by a majority, and calling the roll for the purpose of focusing public attention upon legislation in order that a majority of the House may have an opportunity to consider legislation that it may wish to be enacted.

One of the gentlemen this morning for a while talked about being compelled to be here for fear there might be no quorum instead of sitting as member of a committee to "investigate" the paper trust. I have not made the point of no quorum. On the contrary, the Democratic side of this Chamber has furnished you with a quorum to do business, and it is likely to continue to furnish you with a quorum to do business. If this special committee desires to sit during the recess of the House and really to work, it will find plenty of time; and if the point of no quorum is made at all, it will probably be made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the leader of the majority. There have been several times when you had no quorum, and this side did not raise the point, because it wanted to emphasize the difference between obstruction and focusing public attention upon desired legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], instead of putting in his special order the programme that the time should be equally divided between the two sides, has chosen rather to put everything else in his order and to leave himself to ask unanimous consent that the time may be divided between the two sides. He has thought by that, doubtless, to "deposit me in a cavity," or to put me in a hole. The gentleman has not watched very clearly what has been going on on the floor of the House. I have thus far not objected to any request for debate. That is one of the arrows held in the quiver in reserve, that may or may not be used hereafter. I have not objected to any Member's desire to extend his time to speak upon the floor. I have objected to inserting things in the RECORD and to extending or printing in the RECORD what has not been said on the floor.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say, if the gentleman will permit me, it was because I knew of that fact that I knew the gentleman would not object to an equal division of the time between the two sides of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. Now, if it were an ingenious scheme to have the appearance of putting this side in a light of seeming inconsistency because I would not object, the gentleman's scheme has failed, because I should be inconsistent if I did object. I am perfectly willing to have all the light that debate from that side of the House can shed upon any matter. In fact, I have been so anxious to have debate that I have invariably demanded a second upon every motion to suspend the rules in order that that side might furnish light, if it had any light to furnish. Sometimes I have found they had no light to furnish. This morning, for example, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] reserves his time and does not enlighten the House even as to so much of this bill as is a change of existing law. That much, at least, is due to the House before we go to a consideration of the bill. Especially is it due in a case like this where the first reading of the bill is dispensed with, so that Members can not learn what is in the bill by hearing and must send out and get the bill and learn its contents by reading it before it comes up—a rather difficult operation with gentlemen upon the floor who are constantly interrupted in every imaginable way.

Mr. Speaker, the great supply bills of the country have not been interferred with, will not be interferred with, and all attempts to lead the country to suppose that there has been or will be any effort of that sort is a part of a programme of idle pretense. The supply bills are further ahead right now than they ever have been in my recollection at this time of the year at the long session of Congress. And there will be a continuation of the policy of focusing public attention by demanding a roll call on every affirmative proposition and refusing unanimous consent, except in certain delicate matters, death, suffering, and public calamity, and so forth; and every time that roll is called it will be understood—no fear of it—that it merely means that the minority upon the floor calls once more attention to the fact that that part of the President's message demanding remedial legislation, in so far as it is good, in the minority's opinion, and in the interest of the public, in their opinion, has not yet been permitted to be considered by the House. [Applause on Democratic side.] That is what it means, and there is no danger of its being misunderstood. It was misunderstood in the "way-back corners" just a little bit at the beginning. It is not being misunderstood now. And if any of you have any doubt about that read your morning's papers, Republican as well as Democratic. Read the Record-Herald, of Chicago. Read nearly every paper in New York, except the Tribune, and, of course, nobody expects much from the Tribune in the way of nonpartisan or impartial and just consideration of any question. The whole country understands the situation, and you of the Republican side are not going to be wise enough, you are not going to be subtle enough, you are not going to be acute enough, you are not going to be intelligent enough, to deceive the country one moment about the actual situation.

The country knows that this movement upon this side will stop the very minute the House is permitted to consider, not to enact (we do not care whether you pass a law or not, so far as our programme goes, though as good citizens we want the legislation), but the country knows that the minute you permit the majority of this House to express its opinion upon the passage of a campaign publicity bill, upon the passage of a bill to put wood pulp and print paper upon the free list, upon the passage of a bill to modify the use of injunctions so that they can not be used on an ex parte hearing before one judge and without notice to invalidate a solemn State law; upon the passage of a bill to conserve the rights of labor in connection with the injunction laws as now administered, affording some protection, giving at least notice to the defendant in the case; that the moment that you give the House the right to consider a bill denying to a judge of a Federal court the right upon the equity side of the court to send a man to jail, to deprive him of his liberty or to fine him or to deprive him of his property without recourse to a jury without notice and on ex parte hearing, in cases of mere constructive contempt, not direct contempt—the moment this House gets permission even to consider these propositions, that minute this movement will stop [applause on the Democratic side], and until that moment this movement will not stop. [Loud applause on the Democratic side].

Mr. DALZELL. Go right ahead; we are getting on with business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, you need not believe that you are deceiving the country about what you are doing. It is not my movement, though inaugurated on my initiating; it is a movement made at the request of almost the unanimous voice on this side of the House. It is a Democratic movement; it is a minority attempt to exhaust what little power it has—which is not much, merely the power to rivet attention, merely the power to focus public attention and to arouse public opinion, with the view of securing consideration of each of these measures. Are they treasonable, are they wrong, are they anarchistic? Why, your own President has recommended every one of them. I know some things that are better to be done than any he has recommended. I know of some things that I would rather see passed; but I did not want to put you in the attitude or ourselves in the attitude of going outside of the things recommended by the head of your own party. Otherwise you might plausibly charge that we were trying to "run the House." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We follow him when he is right. We do not follow him when he is wrong. This side of the House belongs to nobody. We belong neither to the Speaker nor to the Committee on Rules on the one side nor the Committee on Ways and Means on the other, and we do not belong to the White House either. Whenever the White House is wrong, as we thought the White House was when it wanted to begin a great era of militarism with the time-worn fallacy of "national prestige," when it in that spirit wanted four battle ships, we cooperated with those who are conservative on your side, and nearly all on this side voted in the negative, not as a party, because the party whip was not drawn nor the party lash inflicted upon anybody. A majority of us, each voting upon his individual conscience and conviction, voted for a conservative naval increase.

Now, then, what sort of an attitude do you stand in? You tell the country that I am responsible, that the minority is responsible, for your not getting unanimous consent for legislation and having to have roll calls for legislation. The truth is that everybody knows—the President knows, the newspapers know, and you know—that all we on this side want is a chance for the House to consider these measures. [Applause on the Democratic side.] All we want is an opportunity for a majority of this House—constituted by those on that side and those on this side—to express its opinion upon these several questions by a vote. That is all. Take the responsibility for defeating them if you will or if you dare, but at least step up to the line like men and vote and let us vote. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the adoption of the order.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to show my desire to expedite public business, I desire the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 136, nays 97, answered "present" 12, not voting 142, as follows:

So the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York with Mr. BRANTLEY.

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. PRAY with Mr. BYRD.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio with Mr. CARTER.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut with Mr. MCLAIN.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. HACKETT.

Mr. LANDIS with Mr. HULL of Tennessee.

Mr. LAWRENCE with Mr. LEWIS.

Mr. LILLEY with Mr. MCDERMOTT.

Mr. MCMILLAN with Mr. PATTERSON.

Mr. MCMORRAN with Mr. PUJO.

Mr. STEENERSON with Mr. REID.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio with Mr. RHINOCK.

Mr. THOMAS of Ohio with Mr. SHEPPARD.

Mr. WASHBURN with Mr. SABATH.

Mr. DRISCOLL with Mr. SPIGHT.

Mr. LAW with Mr. ELLERBE.

For the remainder of this day:

Mr. OLMSTED with Mr. FULTON.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, pending the announcement, I ask that the time for general debate be equally divided between the two sides of the House, and that the gentleman from New York, my colleague on the committee [Mr. FITZGERALD], may control one half of the time and that I myself may control the other half.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided between the two sides, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the order just adopted the House will resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21260) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] will please take the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SHERMAN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 12773. An act granting to the city of Woodward, in the State of Oklahoma, lot 2, in block 48, for park and other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 40. An act to correct the military record of Mirrick R. Burgess;

S. 643. An act for the erection of a monument to the memory of Gen. Patrick Edward Connor;

S. 890. An act for the relief of William Boldenweck, assistant treasurer of the United States at Chicago;

S. 2734. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Milledgeville, Ga.;

S. 4134. An act to correct the military record of Thomas Smith;

S. 4242. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at the city of Everett, in the State of Washington;

S. 4451. An act to amend record and grant honorable discharge to Joseph S. Oakley;

S. 5883. An act to correct the military record of John Oates; and

S. 6033. An act to provide for the resurvey of certain townships in Colorado.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 19541. An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 40. An act to correct the military record of Mirrick R. Burgess—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 6033. An act to provide for the resurvey of certain townships in Colorado—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 5883. An act to correct the military record of John Oates—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4451. An act to amend record and grant honorable discharge to Joseph S. Oakley—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4242. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at the city of Everett, in the State of Washington—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 4134. An act to correct the military record of Thomas Smith—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2734. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Milledgeville, Ga.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 643. An act for the erection of a monument to the memory of Gen. Patrick Edward Connor—to the Committee on the Library.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 15219. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909; and

H. R. 15852. An act to confer title in fee and to authorize the disposition of certain lots now situate on Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, in presenting to the House the sundry civil appropriation bill, the last bill the Committee on Appropriations is charged with the duty of preparing and reporting which carries appropriations for expenditures during the fiscal year 1909, I desire to refer briefly to what I said early in this session regarding the necessity of the committees of the House having appropriating jurisdiction revising the estimates sent to Congress at the beginning of this session. At that time I called attention to the aggregate estimated expenditures for the next fiscal year and the estimated revenues. A comparison of these estimates showed that the expenditures estimated for exceeded the estimated revenues by $118,000,000, and that the estimated revenues exceeded the revenues of the last fiscal year in the neighborhood of $32,000,000.

While addressing the House upon this subject at that time the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] asked whether I thought these estimated expenditures could be materially reduced without injury to the public service. In reply I stated that, in my judgment, they could be reduced at least to the extent of $100,000,000 without retarding the progress of any public work heretofore authorized and without detriment to the public service. Now, that all the bills carrying appropriations for expenditures during the next fiscal year have been reported to the House, except the Military Academy appropriation bill, which will carry less than $1,000,000, and all of them have passed the House with the exception of the sundry civil bill, now under consideration, I am able to show to the House and to the country the exact amount by which the estimated expenditures for the next fiscal year have been reduced as a result of the practical revision of the estimates which was recommended at the beginning of this session.

The Committee on Appropriations had submitted to it estimates for appropriations amounting to $379,609,504.64. This includes the regular annual estimates and the supplemental estimates submitted during the session. The five regular annual appropriation bills reported to the House from the Committee on Appropriations carry appropriation aggregating $306,693,002.83, being a net reduction in the estimates as submitted by the Departments under the District of Columbia, fortifications, legislative, executive, and judicial, the pension, and the sundry civil appropriation bills of $72,916,501.81, and I will submit and print in the RECORD the detailed statement of the estimates and reductions in each of the foregoing bills.

Upon comparing all the estimates with the amounts carried in all the appropriation bills reported from the several committees having appropriating jurisdiction we find that there has been a total reduction by the House of the regular estimates, not including the supplemental, of $99,948,098.37. Sixty-six million two hundred and eighty-five thousand three hundred and sixty-eight dollars and eighty-one cents of this reduction was made by the Committee on Appropriations, and $33,662,729.56 of this total reduction of practically $100,000,000 was made by the other committees of the House having jurisdiction of appropriations. This, as I have said before, does not include the supplemental estimates. Including these, the aggregate reductions in all the estimates equals in round numbers more than $110,000,000.

The following is the statement of the estimates for expenditures under the five regular annual appropriation bills of which the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction, the amounts reported to the House in each bill, and the amount of reduction of the estimates:

	Estimates.	Reported.	Reduction.
District of Columbia	$13,798,126.35	$9,561,449.35	$4,236,677.00
Fortification	38,443,945.36	8,210,611.00	30,233,334.36
Legislative	35,040,066.13	32,336,573.00	2,703,493.13
Pension	151,043,000.00	150,869,000.00	174,000.00
Sundry civil:
Regular estimates $134,618,623.80
Supplemental estimates 6,665,743.00
	141,284,366.80	105,715,369.48	35,568,997.32
Total	379,609,504.64	306,693,002.83	72,916,501.81

For the information of the House I desire also to insert in the RECORD here a statement of the appropriation bills as passed by the House compared with the regular estimates as submitted to Congress:

Appropriation bills as passed by the House compared with regular estimates as submitted to Congress.

Total	469,811,232.20	436,148,502.64
Reduction of regular estimates under control of other committees		33,662,729.56

Total reduction in regular estimates in bills controlled by the Committee on Appropriations	$66,285,368.81
Total reduction in regular estimates in bills controlled by other committees	33,662,729.56
Grand total	99,948,098.37

In the foregoing statement the figures of the sundry civil bill are those of the report to the House, and the sums for the Military Academy bill are those as submitted in the estimates, the bill not yet being reported.

In respect to the amount carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill I desire to say that the regular estimates for the sundry civil expenditures were $134,618,623.80. These were increased by supplemental estimates aggregating $6,665,743, making the total estimates $141,284,366.80. The amount carried in this bill as recommended to the House by the committee is $105,715,369.48, being a reduction of $35,568,997.32.

The title of all the appropriation bills, except the one now under consideration, conveys a very accurate idea of the scope of the public service provided for by the appropriations carried in each bill. But the title to the sundry civil appropriation bill does not give any adequate idea of the scope of its provisions or the importance of the various public works and branches of the public service included under its title.

It carries the appropriations for all of our insular possessions, including Samoa, the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, Alaska, and Porto Rico. It would be impossible for any man to give an adequate explanation of the provisions of the bill in the time that is usually occupied in presenting other appropriation bills, and for personal and other obvious reasons I shall not attempt to do so at this time. I will say, as I said a year ago in presenting this bill to the House, that in view of the diversity of objects for which appropriations are recommended, and in view of the fact that it is a bill in which almost every Member of the House has some direct interest, there will be no disposition on my part to restrict debate under the five-minute rule when provisions of that character are reached in the reading of the bill.

The general provisions of the bill may be divided into two parts, namely, appropriations for public works, and second, for administrative purposes. The principal items under the head of public works are appropriations for the continuation of work on public buildings and rivers and harbors. Your Committee on Appropriations has allowed all the recommendations submitted by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury and by the engineers of the War Department as to the amount needed and which can be expended on public buildings and river and harbor improvements heretofore authorized. We have accepted their estimates without change, and the bill provides for all the money that, in the judgment of these two Departments, can be expended until the next appropriation bill becomes available for these purposes.

Appropriations for public works made under previous authorization and limit of cost become available when made. With the unexpended balances that will remain July 1 next and the amounts recommended in this bill there will be ample funds for all public work heretofore authorized until the next appropriations become available, which will be not later than the 4th of March next.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of provisions recommended in this bill which are legislative provisions and are therefore obnoxious to the rules of the House. But I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact—and I trust that the members of the committee will carefully examine these various provisions—that all these provisions are necessary limitations upon the administration and expenditure of appropriations made for the public service. They are not only deemed necessary but under the circumstances the necessity for their enactment would not come to the attention of any other committee. All of them originate with the committee and not with the Departments. If agreed to by the House they will safeguard public expenditures and prevent abuses in public administration.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes his seat, can he tell the committee how much the reduction has been due to the elimination of that part of the estimates which contemplates expenditures between the 4th of March and the 1st of July next?

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not. There are only two items, however, that come under that head. One is in respect to the public buildings, which I think is about $2,000,000, if I am not mistaken, and the other is the river and harbor appropriation, and the amount carried in this bill for river and harbor appropriation is $11,000,000, as I recall it, in excess of the current river and harbor appropriations or the appropriation for the continuation of river and harbor work. Those are the only two items that I recall that come under the head referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Now, Mr. Chairman, unless some Member desires an explanation of some particular provision of the bill, I will defer all further explanation until the various items are read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, not having had the opportunity at any other time, I avail myself of the courtesy just now extended to me to make some remarks on a subject that I believe to be of interest to the membership of this House and to the thoughtful people of the country. Inasmuch as this is a Presidential year, as it is usually termed, inquiries as to the qualifications of Presidential electors have been made of some of the Members here, and editorials voicing the desire for information on the same subject have appeared from time to time in some of the leading papers of the country. These inquiries and editorials have been directed to obtaining an answer to the proposition of what qualifies a man for and what disqualifies a man from being a Presidential elector.

There has never been very much said or written on this subject, and that is true because, naturally, the rivalry and jealousy existing between the great political parties has forced the leaders of the respective sides to insist in any case of doubt of the qualification of a proposed candidate for elector that he stand aside and let some one else be voted for about whose eligibility there could be no dispute.

I received recently from one of the leading citizens of Alabama, prominent at the bar and in the politics of that Commonwealth, Hon. H. S. D. Mallory, this inquiry:

Ascertain accurately and inform me of the qualifications of Presidential electors and what disqualifies.

I have, Mr. Chairman, made careful examination, and I beg leave to submit the result of that examination to the membership of this House, to the lawyers here, and I know from personal conversation with more than a few of them that they have had the same question propounded to them by some of their constituents.

MODE OF SELECTION.

The selection, qualifications, and duties of Presidential electors are regulated in part by Federal and in part by State constitutions and laws.

THE PROVISIONS OF THE FEDERAL CONSTITUTION

And statutes bearing thereon are as follows:

2. Each State shall appoint in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

3. The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors and the day in which they shall give their votes, which shall be the same throughout the United States. (U. S. Constitution, Art. II, sec. 1.)

THE FEDERAL LAWS

Bearing upon the matter of electors are to be found in sections 131 to 151, inclusive, of the United States Revised Statutes, of which it is necessary to cite only:

SEC. 131, Revised Statutes. Except * * * the electors of President and Vice-President shall be appointed, in each State, on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November in every fourth year succeeding every election of a President and Vice-President. (Act March 1, 1792, c. 8, sec. 1, Stat., 293; act January 23, 1845, c. 1, 5 Stat., 721.)

SEC. 132, R. S. The number of electors shall be equal to the number of Senators and Representatives to which the several States are by law entitled at the time when the President and Vice-President are to be chosen come into office, except that where no apportionment of Representatives has been made after any enumeration, at the time of choosing electors the number of electors shall be according to the then existing apportionment of Senators and Representatives. (Act Mar. 1, 1792, ch. 8, sec. 1, 1 Stat., 239.)

SEC. 133, R. S. Each State may, by law, provide for the filling of any vacancies which may occur in its college of electors when such college meets to give its electoral vote. (Act Jan. 23, 1845, ch. 1, 5 Stat., 721.)

SEC. 134, R. S. Whenever any State has held an election for the purpose of choosing electors, and has failed to make a choice on the day prescribed by law, the electors may be appointed on a subsequent day in such manner as the legislature of such State may direct. (Act. Jan. 23, 1845, ch. 1, 5 Stat., 721.)

Section 135, Revised Statutes, superseded by—

Be it enacted, etc., That the electors of each State shall meet and give their votes on the second Monday in January next following their appointment, at such place in each State as the legislature of such State shall direct. (Act Feb. 3, 1887, ch. 90, sec. 1, 24 Stat., 373.)

SEC. 2. That if any State shall have provided by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the electors, for its final determination of any controversy of contest concerning the appointment of all or any of the electors of such State, by judicial or other methods or procedures, and such determination shall have been made at least six days before the time fixed for the meeting of the electors, such determination made pursuant to such law so existing on said day, and made at least six days prior to the said time of meeting of the electors, shall be conclusive, and shall govern in the counting of the electoral votes as provided in the Constitution, and as hereinafter regulated, so far as the ascertainment of the electors appointed by such State is concerned. (Act. Feb. 3, 1887, ch. 90, sec. 2, 24 Stat., 373.)

Now, I turn from the Federal provisions on this subject to the State provisions, for, as I said in the beginning, this matter is controlled in part by the Federal Constitution and laws, and in part, in every case, by the State constitution and statutes of the particular State where the elector is chosen. What I shall say generally of the laws of Alabama, both organic and statutory, are but illustrative of what could be said in a given case of the qualifications and disqualifications of an elector that might arise in the case of an elector chosen or appointed by any other State.

The Alabama State provisions are as follows:

ARTICLE XVII. Constitution of Alabama, 1901:

"SEC. 280. No person holding an office of profit under the United States, except postmasters whose annual salary does not exceed $200, shall, during his continuance in such office, hold any office of profit under this State; nor unless otherwise provided in this constitution, shall any person hold two offices of profit at one and the same time under this State, except justices of the peace, constables, notaries public, and commissioners of deeds."

"SEC. 282. It is made the duty of the general assembly to enact all laws necessary to give effect to the provisions of this constitution."

ARTICLE VIII. Constitution of Alabama, 1901:
"SEC. 183. No person shall be qualified to vote or participate in any primary election, [a] party convention, mass meeting, or other method of party action of any political party or faction who shall not possess the qualifications prescribed in this article for an elector or who shall be disqualified from voting under the provisions of this article."
ARTICLE V. Constitution of Alabama, 1901:
"SEC. 132. No person shall be eligible to the office of attorney-general, State auditor, secretary of state, State treasurer, superintendent of education, or commissioner of agriculture and industries unless he shall have been a citizen of the United States at least seven years and shall have resided in this State at least five years preceding his election and shall be at least 25 years old when elected."
ARTICLE VI. Constitution of Alabama, 1901:
"SEC. 154. Chancellors and judges of all courts of record shall have been citizens of the United States and of this State five years next preceding their election or appointment and shall be not less than 25 years of age and, except judges of probate courts, shall be learned in the law."
ARTICLE IV. Constitution of Alabama, 1901:
"SEC. 47. [State] Senators shall be at least 25 years of age and representatives 21 years of age at the time of their election. They shall have been citizens and residents of this State for three years and residents of their respective counties or districts for one year next before their election if such county or district shall have been so long established, but if not, then of the county or district from which the same shall have been taken, and they shall reside in their respective counties or districts during their term of office."

THE STATE LAW.

Chapter 33, Art. II, Code of Alabama, 1907:
"SEC. 1467. (3056), (241), (149), (144), (105)." Persons ineligible to office.
The persons who are ineligible to and disqualified for holding office under the authority of this State are:
"1. Those who are not qualified electors, except as otherwise expressly provided.
"2. Those who have not been inhabitants of the State, etc., the period required by the constitution and laws of the State.
"3. Those who shall have been convicted of treason, embezzlement of public funds, malfeasance in office, larceny, bribery, or any other crime punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary and those who are idiots or insane.
"4. Those who have given, accepted, or knowingly carried a challenge.
"5. Those against whom there is a judgment unpaid for any money received by them in any official capacity, due to the United States, the State of Alabama, or any county or municipality thereof.
"6. Soldiers, seamen, or mariners in the Regular Army or Navy of the United States.
"7. No person holding an office of profit under the United States shall, during his continuance in such office, hold any office of profit under this State; nor shall any person hold two offices of profit at one and the same time under this State, except notaries public."

It will be noted that under the constitution justices of the peace, constables, and commissioners of deeds also are excepted, but by the above paragraph of section 1467 they are made ineligible to hold any other office.

SEC. 1468. (3057), (244), (152), (147), (108). Code of Alabama, 1907:
"All officers must reside in this State."
ART. IV, SEC. 331. (1573), (338), (243). Code of Alabama, 1907:
"The following officers in the State shall be elected by the qualified electors thereof * * * electors for President and Vice-President of the United States. (Mar. 6, 1876, p. 103.)"
SEC. 332. (1574), (339), (244). Code of Alabama, 1907:
"General Election.—General elections throughout this State shall be held for * * * electors for President and Vice-President of the United States. (Mar. 6, 1876, p. 103.)"
SEC. 338. (1579), (343), (248). Code of Alabama, 1907:
"Electors for President and Vice-President of the United States shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1902, and every fourth year thereafter. (Mar. 6, 1876, p. 103.)"
ART. XX, SEC. 446. (1653), (435), (342), (388), (339). Code of Alabama, 1907:
"On the day prescribed by this Code there are to be elected, by a general ticket, a number of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States equal to the number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the State is entitled at the time of such election. (Mar. 3, 1875, p. 76.)"
SEC. 450. (1657), (439), (346), (394), (345). Code of Alabama, 1907:
"The electors of President and Vice-President are to assemble at the office of the secretary of state at the seat of government at 12 o'clock noon on the second Monday in January next after their election, or on that hour on such other day as may be fixed by Congress, to elect such President and Vice-President; and those of them present at that hour must at once proceed by ballot and plurality of votes to supply the places of those who fail to attend on that day and hour. (March 3, 1875, p. 76.)"
SEC. 451. (1658), (440), (347). Code of Alabama, 1907:
"Each elector for President and Vice-President shall receive $8 for each day he necessarily attends at the seat of government, and 20 cents for every mile traveled to and from the same, to be estimated in the same manner as is provided by law in relation to members of the general assembly from his county, to be paid on oath of each elector, by warrant on the State treasurer. (March 6, 1876, p. 103.)"

ELECTOR IS STATE OFFICER.

It is clear, therefore, from the foregoing, that the Presidential elector is an officer of the State, holding an office of profit, and that the determination of the State, in the manner provided by law (act of Congress, February 3, 1887, 24 Stat., 373), of any controversy or contest concerning the appointment of any or all of the electors of such State is conclusive.

This view is confirmed by the decisions of Federal and State courts in which the question has arisen.

The office of Presidential elector is a State and not a Federal office. (In re Green, 134 U. S., 377, 379; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S., 1, 35.)

With the exceptions of the provisions as to the number of electors and the ineligibility of certain persons, which provisions are so framed that Congressional and Federal influence might be excluded, the appointment of electors belongs exclusively to the States, under the Constitution of the United States. (McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S., 1, and bottom of page 35.)

Mr. HARDWICK. Before the gentleman leaves that point, will it disturb the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Not at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. In the decision to which the gentleman has just referred——

Mr. CLAYTON. I have it here on my desk——

Mr. HARDWICK. Is not it true that Congress would have no power whatever to direct the manner in which Presidential electors should be selected in the several States except as to the time of choosing them and that the time of choosing them should be uniform?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes; I think the gentleman is entirely correct, but no person declared ineligible by the provisions of Federal law that I have just referred to can be a Presidential elector.

PERSONS DISQUALIFIED.

The Federal exceptions are Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, Article II, Constitution of the United States.

The State laws exclude every person holding an office of profit under the United States, except postmasters receiving less than $200 per annum compensation, who are ineligible under the Federal Constitution, and every person holding any other office of profit at the same time under the State, except notaries public.

ART. XVII. Constitution of Alabama, 1901.
SEC. 1467. Page 7, Code of Alabama, 1907.

In addition to the above all the persons disqualified by section 1467, Code of Alabama, 1907 (1–6), are made ineligible to any office.

And the following under Article IV, constitution of Alabama, 1901:

SEC. 60. No person convicted of embezzlement of the public money, bribery, perjury, or other infamous crime, shall be eligible to the legislature or capable of holding any office of trust or profit in this State.

WHO ARE OFFICERS.

The only question open for discussion is what is an office and who are officers in the meaning of the Federal and State constitutions and laws governing such election.

A United States Senator or Representative in Congress is not an officer of the United States, therefore is provided for eo nomine in the Federal constitutional and statutory exclusions.

Federal officers are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, by the courts of law and the heads of Departments where Congress has, by law, vested the appointment of such inferior officers.

Article II. Section 2 (2) U. S. Constitution.

As examples, it has been held that an officer of a national bank is not an officer of the United States. He is elected by his fellow-stockholders, and his duties are not public. He is not a part of the Government, albeit executing certain functions under his authority. (Branch v. United States, 12 C. Cls., 286, affirmed in 100 U. S., 673.)

On the other hand, the receiver of a national bank has been held to be such officer, because appointed by the Treasury Department. (In re Chetwood, 165 U. S., 443.)

A member of a board of examining surgeons appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions (not the Department) is not an officer. (United States v. Van Leuven, 62 Fed. Rep., 62.)

Curiously enough, it may be remarked that a sailmaker at a navy-yard, appointed by a warrant under the hand of the Secretary of the Navy and seal of the Department, is an officer of the United States. (Sanford v. Boyd, 2 Cranch, C. C., 671.)

A United States commissioner is an officer duly appointed by the United States circuit court, under authority of the Constitution, therefore undoubtedly disqualified, although it has been held that a State justice of the peace, while authorized to arrest and commit persons violating the Federal laws, does not thereby become an officer of the United States (Ex parte Gist, 26 Ala., 156), and such justice of the peace is especially excepted by the State constitution, but disqualified by the code of 1907.

A notary public is not such officer and therefore not disqualified under the State constitution. (Kirksey v. Bates, 7 Porter, 529; Governor v. Gordon, 15 Ala., 72.)

The enrolling clerk of the legislature is only an employee, and not an officer; neither is an attorney.

A special deputy employed and authorized by the sheriff to execute a particular process is an officer of the State within the generic meaning of the term and of the statute against resisting an officer in the discharge of his duty. (Andrews v. State, 78 Ala., 483; Pentecost v. State, 107 Ala., 91.)

Mayors of cities and incorporated towns have ex officio powers of justice of the peace, and usually hold the police courts; therefore doubtless ineligible on account thereof.

It has been held that the following are officers within the meaning of the Constitution and laws:

A police judge, in Montgomery v. State (107 Ala., 372).

A State printer, in Ex parte Screws (49 Ala., 64).

County solicitor, in Diggs v. State (49 Ala., 326).

It has been held that administrators, general or special, are not such officers, in Michell v. Nelson (49 Ala., 90).

These exceptions are so plain and explicit as to need no elaboration.

The definition of office and officer are many in number, but uniform in character. They will be found collected at pages 4920–4923, Volume VI, Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, and their general tenor is as follows:

(1) A right to exercise a public function or employment and to take the fee belonging to it. Olmstead v. City of New York (42 N. Y., Sup. Ct. (10 Jones & S.), 481, 487).

Quoting 7 Bac. Abr. (Ed. 1879), p. 279. (Office.)

(2) An office consists in a right, and correspondent duty, to exercise a public trust, and to take the emolument belonging to it. (Kent citing Blair v. Marye, 80 Va., 485, and numerous cases.)

(3) It is a right to exercise a public or private employment and to take the fees and emoluments in which one has a property and to which there are annexed duties, and oaths to support the constitutions of the State and United States. Worthy v. Barrett (63 N. C., 199).

ALL STATE AND FEDERAL OFFICEHOLDERS INELIGIBLE.

Every person holding any office of trust or profit under the United States, or of profit under the State, except notaries public, is specifically excluded from serving as Presidential elector. Under the general provision that inhibits any person from holding two offices of profit at one and the same time in Alabama, every other officeholder is made ineligible for elector.

A notary public who is at the same time an ex officio justice of the peace probably would be held to be disqualified also.

In addition to officeholders of every description under the State and the United States, all the persons mentioned in section 60 of the constitution of 1901 and section 1467 of the code of 1907 are disqualified. These embrace all persons not entitled to vote, who have been convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude, who have been concerned in challenges to fight, and against whom is an unpaid judgment for public moneys.

ELECTOR'S QUALIFICATIONS.

For all executive, legislative, and judicial officers in Alabama, the constitution or code seems to require certain age, residence, etc., qualifications, but for the office of Presidential elector I find no regulation other than that the elector shall be duly qualified to vote at general elections in the State, shall not be within any of the inhibited classes under either Federal or State constitution or laws herein-above mentioned, and shall not have been convicted of certain classes of crimes named, owe unpaid public moneys reduced to judgment, nor been concerned in a challenge.

SUMMARY OF QUALIFICATIONS AND DISQUALIFICATIONS.

Without further amplification, the conclusion is that only a person duly qualified to vote in a general election of the State is eligible to be a Presidential elector, or to be voted for as such, in the State of Alabama; that United States Senators and Representatives in Congress and every person holding any office of profit or trust under the United States or any office of profit under the State, which includes every person required to take and subscribe to an oath to support the constitution of the State or the United States, is disqualified by law from holding or being voted for for elector for President and Vice-President as well as all the other persons disqualified from holding office generally.

ADVICE.

As even one vote may be important, the least risk should not be taken, but only private citizens, unquestionably disconnected from public office or employment, fully qualified to vote and hold office at the election, should be voted for as elector for President and Vice-President.

I thank the House for its considerate attention. [Applause.]

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Chairman, I am now serving my fourth term as a Member of the House of Representatives, and unless all signs fail or the people of my district make a most serious mistake I fully expect to continue my services in this body for many years to come. [Applause.] When I first became a Member of the House I possessed all the credulity that attaches to the innocence and inexperience of youth.

So guileless and gullible was I that I actually believed everything that was said on this floor. Even a Democratic speech, intended strictly for home consumption, was received by me at par, without discount or allowance for campaign shrinkage. My preconceived faith in the absolute truth and reliability of all Congressional humanity would not permit me to accept any part of any statement made by any Member on any subject cum grano salis.

Well do I recall how I trembled with fear as some Democratic Member, in deep sepulchral tones that smacked of the gloomy depths of the cheerless tomb, arose in his seat and, assuming the attitude of Ajax defying the lightning, hurled anathemas upon anathemas at our devoted heads and predicted the overthrow, swift, sure, and immediate, of the Republican majority in this House. A speech of that kind always struck terror to my youthful soul. It "froze the blood in my young veins" and made my hair stand on end like "quills upon the fretful porcupine." Like Eugene Aram—

> All night I lay in agony,
> In anguish dark and deep;
> My fevered eyes I dared not close,
> But stared aghast at sleep.

In the still small hours of the slumberless night my tortured soul cried out aloud, again and again, with the penitent sinner of old, "O, Lord, what must I do to be saved?"

Perhaps my genial and tender-hearted friend from Missouri, CHAMP CLARK, was not aware of it, but he certainly caused me no end of tribulation and vexation of spirit in the early days of my service here. But it is quite different now. Democracy's dismal and doleful note of warning, which from time immemorial has been sounded in this Chamber at regular intervals of two years, no longer terrifies—it simply amuses. What was once high tragedy is now comic opera. I have long since learned that giving gratuitous advice to the Republican party is an inalienable Democratic right, and prophesying Republican defeat an irrepressible Democratic habit. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I, for one, refuse to accept the advice, and the biennial prophecy now has no other effect on my mental composure and political equanimity than to produce a sort of tired feeling, which is wholly ephemeral. In the light of my own experience I would bid my Republican colleagues who are serving their first terms here to be of good cheer. You are in no danger. Be steadfast, keep the faith, hew to the line, and you will continue to assist in making the laws of the land while our friends on the other side of the aisle will continue their ancient and harmless pastime of beating tom-toms, demanding senseless roll calls, and dancing the political hoochie-koochie. [Applause.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, we had a special election for Congress in Illinois since the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] delivered his great speech, in which his enraptured soul beheld a vision of the Democratic party clothed with the emblem of official authority and political power; and, notwithstanding the fact that the Democrats were united on one candidate, and an independent Republican candidate polled 4,000 votes, the regular Republican nominee, Colonel THISTLEWOOD, increased the plurality given his popular Republican predecessor in the regular election two years ago over 25 per cent. [Applause on the Republican side.] The result of the recent election in the Twenty-fifth district of Illinois—the only one that has been held this year—is a complete and effective answer to the gentleman's predictions, and it indicates in language so plain that he who runs may read that when the roll of the Sixty-first Congress is made up the Republican party will be found doing business at the old stand with the same old-time majority. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, the average Democratic statesman has always been a disciple of the doctrine of despair. His is the philosophy of pessimism. To him the Lamentations of Jeremiah are an inspiration, an exhilaration. His face is ever turned toward the setting and not the rising sun. He is never so much at peace with himself as when he is quarreling with some one else. Instinctively, he prefers a funeral dirge to a wedding march, and believes that the song of the dying swan would make a most glorious national anthem. [Applause on the Republican side]. When camping out, purely as a matter of choice, he always pitches his tent amid the somber surroundings of a cemetery, in the cheerless shade of a weeping willow. [Laughter.] He is happy only when his fellow-man is sad. Night after night he sends up a fervent petition to the Great White Throne, asking the good Lord above to visit his children with some great disaster, such as fire or fever, flood or famine, drought or death, earthquake shock or ocean storm, for in a visitation of that kind his morbid and melancholy mind thinks it sees some promising political possibilities. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It does not take much to encourage him, however. When he picks up his morning paper and reads of a defaulting bank cashier, he at once grows hopeful; when he scans the market reports and finds that the price of wheat has dropped 1 cent, he actually becomes cheerful; and when he learns that cholera, or some other contagion, has broken out in one of our insular possessions, he simply grows delirious with joy, and forthwith proceeds to gather together all manner of indorsements for a political job under a Democratic administration. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

Our Democratic friends are even now trying to extract some comfort out of the fact that the Republicans are not an absolute unit as to who should lead us to victory in November next. Get all of the comfort and satisfaction out of that situation that you possibly can, gentlemen, but I want to say to you that I am proud of the fact that the Republican party is not the personal asset of any individual. [Applause.] No man holds a mortgage on its principles, its policies, or its purposes. It has never issued a commission in perpetuity to anyone to write its platforms and to do all its thinking. [Applause.] Thank God, it has never been afflicted with a political Old Man of the Sea, who has secured a strangle-hold on its windpipe and choked it into abject submission to his every whim and caprice. [Renewed applause.] In all its history, the Republican party has never developed, and I hope it never will develop, a perennial "disappearless leader," who arrogates to himself the sole power of political excommunication. [Laughter and applause.] I say it more in sorrow than in anger, but it is true, nevertheless, that you on that side have long since lost your courage, your independence, your political manhood. You have been compelled, nolens volens, to submit to the inevitable and to accept Bryan with all his idiosyncracies or suffer the consequences of his mighty wrath.

There is not a Rienzi among you. There is not one among you, unless perchance it be the eloquent young gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEAKE], and it is doubtful if even he would have the temerity to do so now after sitting for four months at the feet of the minority leader, in close proximity to the "heir apparent," CHAMP CLARK, and the "heir presumptive," OLLIE JAMES [laughter]—there is not one among you who would have the courage to-day to even protest against the story of your thralldom.

But try as you may to create the impression that you are sincerely united on the candidacy of your self-appointed and self-annointed leader, whose knowledge of political generalship seems to embrace only an elaborate and comprehensive plan of retreat [applause], yet the fact remains, and is known of all men, that the great majority of you have simply taken counsel of your fears and that your simulated enthusiasm is in reality the hysteria of a crushed and conquered hostage. No real change has come over the spirit of your opposition to Bryan and Bryanism. You have not been converted; you are still the same old Saul of Tarsus. But your feigned loyalty will not last. You can not keep up the delusion. The history of the Democratic party teaches us that the glory of to-day is the pathos of to-morrow. Only a few short years ago you had another idol to whom you swore undying fealty and devotion. Grover Cleveland was once your uncrowned hero, your man of destiny. Around his massive brow you twined the wreath of immortality, and in his mighty presence you "crooked the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift might follow fawning." Where, oh where is that idol now? Ask of the populistic winds that blow from the sand dunes of the River Platte, and that have grown in volume and velocity since 1896, until to-day they have reached the menacing proportions of a cyclone of socialism! In the language of Mark Antony:

> But yesterday he might have stood against the world.
> Now lies he there with none so poor to do him reverence!

During the four terms of my service in this body I have yet to hear for the first time a single word of praise or commendation from the lips of any Democrat in behalf of the only Democrat who has occupied the Presidency since 1860, and to whom you once ascribed powers supernatural and wisdom infinite. Mr. Chairman, when I contemplate the fate of Grover Cleveland, when I recall the once high estate of that discarded and forgotten idol of democracy, then, indeed, do I feel sorry for one William Jennings Bryan. The day will come, and it is not far distant, when he, too, will be made to walk the gang plank of Democratic execration and go to his political grave "unhonored, unwept, and unsung."

I repeat, gentlemen, and I take pride in the statement, that the Republican party has always been opposed on principle to the incorporation of a Presidential nominating trust, in which one man enjoys a monopoly of all the stock, both common and preferred. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I glory in the fact that there is a division of sentiment among Republicans as to the personality of our candidate for the Presidency, but, whoever he may be, whether that splendid rugged type of old-fashioned American manhood, that man whose every heart-beat has been in sympathy with the best aspirations of the common people, and who gained his education in the great school of human experience, the school that has given to the world's heritage of true nobility its best and brightest men, that man who presides over the deliberations of this House with firmness and fairness, and who lives in the hearts of his fellow-members, JOSEPH G. CANNON [great applause on Republican side]; whether it be that brave and manly man of magnificent judicial poise, who in the far-off Philippines has reared a monument to his own greatness of intellect and genius of organization that will endure until time shall be no more; whether it be the distinguished son of Indiana who is to-day Vice-President of the United States, and who has brought to the discharge of his every duty the highest ideals of intelligent and patriotic citizenship; whether it be the governor of the Empire State of the Union, who drove the money changers from the temple and is to-day cleaning out the Augean stables of questionable finance—whoever it may be, the man who receives the Republican nomination at Chicago in June will receive the united support of the Republicans of the nation in November [applause on the Republican side], and will succeed Theodore Roosevelt in the White House on March 4, 1909. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

The Republican party deserves success and will succeed because it has been right on all of the great questions that have confronted the American people since the foundation of the Republic. It was right when, as the old Federal party, in the days of Alexander Hamilton, it advocated the formation of a Government big enough and strong enough and grand enough to protect the humblest citizen of the land. It was right when, as the old Whig party, in the days of Daniel Webster and Henry Clay, it made the protection of American industries the cornerstone of American greatness. It was right when, in the days of Abraham Lincoln, it said that this Republic could not endure half slave, half free. It was right when, in the days of Ulysses S. Grant, it dealt a death blow to the Democratic doctrine of repudiation and said that every bond of this Government should be held as sacred as a soldier's grave. It was right when, in the days of William McKinley, it said that the laborer was worthy of his hire, and that the man who performed honest work was entitled to honest money for that work. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is right to-day when it says with Theodore Roosevelt that no man or combination of men is greater than the law of the land, and that he that transgresses, be he rich or poor, shall be made to pay the penalty of his transgressions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The history of the Democratic party, on the other hand, is an unbroken record of incoherent inconsistencies. The Democratic party has demonstrated a capacity only for mischief and mistake. It has been so persistently and insistently wrong on all of the great social and economic questions of modern times that every thinking citizen instinctively looks upon its promises and professions with doubt and misgiving.

In 1892 we were told by the Democratic party that the one great, overwhelming, paramount issue before the American people was the question of the tariff. Protection was denounced as robbery of the many for the benefit of the few. War, fierce and unrelenting, was declared on the protected industries of the country, and it was to be a war to the death. Import duties were to be abolished, custom-houses were to be scattered to the four winds of the heavens, our home market was to be opened to all the world, and every citizen, without regard to creed, color, or previous condition of servitude, was to be accorded the proud and priceless privilege of buying where he could buy the cheapest and selling where he could sell the dearest. The golden era was to be ushered in. Our cup of national happiness was to be filled to overflowing with the untold blessings that were sure to gush forth in never-ending abundance from a tariff for revenue only. Aye, we were told that the protective system of the Republican party was a delusion and a snare, a miserable mockery, a travesty on truth, and God alone knows what not. They told us that we were taxed from the cradle to the grave and that even death brought no surcease from sorrow, for the wicked Republican party had placed a tariff on tombstones. I almost shudder, even at this late day, as I recall the harrowing and grewsome picture that was painted by the Democratic spellbinder of 1892.

Well, the American people, like Ulysses of old, finally succumbed to the song of the siren. Grover Cleveland was elected President and with him came into power a Congress Democratic in both branches. And then came the deluge. The Wilson bill, that bright and shining example of Democratic constructive statesmanship, was enacted into law—and you know the rest. It is not necessary for me to-day to lift the veil that hangs over that darkest period of our national industrial life. The farmers, the merchants, and the mechanics of this generation have not forgotten, and they never will forget, their one sad experience with a tariff for revenue only. Nor will they forget that William Jennings Bryan, as a Member of Congress, was one of the most eloquent champions of that measure. It was then that the farmer's wheat brought 40 cents a bushel, his corn 10 cents, his oats nothing, and his potatoes considerably less than nothing. It was then that the merchant turned prematurely gray and the deep furrows of care and trouble appeared on his brow. It was then, too, that labor walked the streets night and day searching in vain for work. The mills and factories throughout the length and breadth of the land closed their doors, and across their silent and smokeless chimneys was written the epitaph:

Died of an overdose of Democracy.

[Laughter and applause.]

For four long and weary years, years that were lean and barren, years of sorrow and of suffering, of poverty and of pain, we struggled on and on under this weight of woe, hoping against hope, but relief came only when the Republican party was restored to power and the Dingley Republican protective tariff bill was enacted into law, for when that great constructive statesman of the Fifty-fifth Congress touched the buried industries of the nation with the magic wand of protection, Phœnix like, they sprang forth from their ashes, their Democratic tombs.

In the wealth of the products of field and factory, of mill and mine, and in the magnificent growth of our export trade, far exceeding that of any other nation on earth and reaching every part of the civilized world, we behold an enduring monument to that great cardinal principle of the Republican creed—protection to the products of American genius, American brain, and American industry. [Applause.]

Our Democratic friends say that they intend to make the tariff an issue in this campaign. I suppose this is their intention, for the Peerless One has spoken, and "I am Sir Oracle; when I ope' my lips let no dog bark." I hope it is true and that they will make it the paramount issue. I for one shall welcome an opportunity to contrast the barrenness of yesterday with the bounty of to-day. I shall be glad to match Democratic fancy with Republican fact, Democratic promise with Republican performance, Democratic expectation with Republican realization. [Applause.]

Ah, my countrymen, the protective policy of the Republican party needs no defense. It has stood the test of time and experience. Its manifold benefits are altogether too apparent to admit of the possibility of successful attack. It constitutes the proudest boast of our civilization and finds its glorious justification to-day in the strength and power and prestige of the nation and in the prosperity and happiness of all the people. [Applause.] It is possible that new conditions have made necessary some changes in our present tariff law, as no law devised by mortal man ever possessed the element of perfection, but the time will never come when the great body of the American people, remembering the disastrous experience of twelve years ago, will ever be willing to surrender any part of their loyalty to the great principle of protection. Whenever a revision of existing tariff schedules shall become necessary that work must and will be done by the friends of the protective system, and not by its enemies. The wage-earners of America prefer the practical patriotism and the good common sense of Republicans like JOSEPH G. CANNON and JOHN DALZELL to the violent vaporings and visionary vagaries of any Democrat in the United States. [Great applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in 1892, as I have just stated, tariff for revenue only was Democracy's battle cry, but four years later they tried their very best to have the people forget all about the tariff. In 1896 the Democrats discovered their second paramount issue. In that year, when every one of them had taken to the woods to escape the righteous wrath of an indignant and impoverished people, a new Moses appeared upon the political horizon who thought that he held a commission from on high to lead the forlorn and scattered children of Democracy out of the wilderness and back into the promised land of official plenty. It was then that you on the other side of the House made the discovery that the one panacea for all the ills that the body politic was heir to, the one sure, never-failing remedy for every real and imaginary political disease, was the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the heaven-born ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation on earth. It was then that you spread the doctrine of discontent, the pessimistic propaganda of Populism. Class was arrayed against class, and inflammatory appeal was made to passion and to prejudice. You denounced those of us who believed in preserving the financial integrity of the nation as enemies of the plain people, tools of Wall street, goldbugs, oppressors of the poor. You completely exhausted the vocabulary of vituperative abuse in your characterization of the friends of honest money as the unscrupulous hirelings of plutocracy. Why, a young Democratic friend of mine actually became so wrought up in that campaign that he had the gold fillings removed from his teeth as a practical evidence of his uncompromising hostility to the gold standard. [Laughter and applause.]

And then there was the awful, awful "crime of '73." You remember that phrase, don't you? You remember how our Democratic friends used to roll it under their tongues like a sweet morsel, and how throughout that frenzied campaign they clung to it closer than to a brother. They told us in lurid and bloodcurdling language how, one dark and stormy night, while the owls were hooting and the spooks and hobgoblins were abroad in the land, old John Sherman, than whom a better patriot never lived, arose from his slumbers at midnight and "with Tarquin's ravishing strides toward his design moved like a ghost," and how, before he returned to his plutocratic bed, murder, "murder most foul" had been committed. The dollar of our daddies had been slain, and Democracy shrieked out aloud against the "deep damnation of his taking off." [Laughter.] Oh, you remember that, don't you? You also remember Coin's Financial School. By the way, what has become of that famous publication, which in 1896 supplanted the family Bible in every well-regulated Democratic household? [Renewed laughter and applause.] You recall the ingenuity of the author's argument, that the price of wheat and silver rose and fell together, and how he succeeded in proving, to his own satisfaction at least, that the American farmer would never again receive more than 50 cents for a bushel of wheat until the old ratio of 16 to 1 were reestablished. In that campaign Mr. Bryan told the American people that if McKinley were successful, and the gold standard were continued as the monetary standard of this country, the farmers and the wage-earners of the nation would be unable to educate their children, because they would not have sufficient means with which to purchase schoolbooks and clothing for them.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, in every city, in every village, in every hamlet, his matchless voice sounded the note of loud alarm, calling upon bewildered Democrats and bewhiskered Populists to storm the citadel of our financial honor and to overthrow the nation's credit. But the Republican party met the attack boldly and fearlessly. We pointed out the dangers of an inflated and debased currency and proved by the experience of mankind that free silver and fiat money meant national dishonor and national disaster. To the eternal credit of the American people be it said that they awoke to a full realization of the impending danger and buried this Democratic financial fallacy so deep that it will never hear the blast of Gabriel's trumpet on the morning of the resurrection. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

I would like to know why it is that the mere mention of free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 or at any other old ratio to-day throws the Democratic party into convulsions. I would like to know what has become of the "crown of thorns" and the "cross of gold." The peerless leader said in 1896 that no question is ever settled until it is settled right. If he still believes that he was right in 1896, and in his recent speech at Freeport, Ill., he maintains that he was, why is it that the Democratic party seems so anxious to abandon the silver question without waiting for its settlement in accordance with the declaration contained in the Democratic platform of that year? I leave this for them to ponder over.

Now, Mr Chairman, in the campaign of 1900, our Democratic friends maintained a discreet and dignified silence on the question of free trade and free silver. In that year they discovered another paramount issue. The thought has occurred to me that perhaps after all the Democratic party was created for a good purpose. It seems to be their special mission on earth to make original discoveries, and if, perchance, they should ever start out in search of the North Pole, that elusive and much-sought-for place might just as well make up its mind to allow itself to be discovered. In 1900 the Democratic party found the issue of imperialism. In that year they made the startling discovery that the foundations of the Republic were slipping away. They said that William McKinley—the gentle, loving, gracious McKinley, who, in the dark days that tried men's souls, gave practical proof of his patriotic love of country, and whose every heartbeat was in sympathy with the oppressed of all mankind—they said that he was a tyrant, a despoiler of human liberty, an oppressor of his fellow-man.

They accused him of trying to establish a monarchy on the ruins of our once glorious Republic. They talked about the "man on horseback," the modern Napoleon, about dynasties, and kingdoms, and empires. They said that the American flag in the Philippines was an emblem of tyranny and oppression. In the frenzy of their hypocritical fears they heard the death knell of human liberty and beheld the downfall of the Republic. They even surrounded the retreating brow of Aguinaldo with a halo of imperishable glory and, but for the vigilance of the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. JOHN WESLEY GAINES, the holy trinity of Democracy would certainly have been recast and remodeled; brave old Andrew Jackson would have been compelled to surrender his time-honored place between Thomas Jefferson and William Jennings Bryan to make way for the little Filipino.

But the Republican party, true to its magnificent record of courageous performance of every public duty, was not dismayed. With full confidence in the righteousness of our cause, we appealed again to the conscience of the nation, and we did not appeal in vain. We showed that the Philippines had come into our possession as the result of a war that was sanctioned by every American citizen, a war that was waged for humanity and Christianity, and that, having supplanted the sovereignty of Spain in the islands, it was a duty we owed to civilization itself to establish a government there that was fully capable of enforcing the fundamental guaranties of every civilized government—the protection of life, liberty, and property. This, we proceeded to do, and thank God, this we have done. When the impartial historian of the future shall record the achievements of the Republican party, among the brightest and most inspiring pages of that history will be the record of our great and benevolent work in the Philippines. The bolo has been beaten into a plowshare, the blockhouse and the fort have been supplanted by the schoolhouse and the church; anarchy has made way for law and order, and the American flag, whose stars and stripes have been baptized in the best blood of American patriotism, is still the emblem of liberty and equality wherever it floats, whether from the Dome of the nation's Capitol or over the humblest hut in far-off Luzon. [Loud applause.] Ah, my Democratic brethren, you can not stop the wheels of progress. You might just as well attempt to stem the resistless tide of the mighty Mississippi at high flood as the river rolls on majestically to the sea as to try to interfere with the manifest destiny of the American Republic in the great work of the world's civilization.

You may carp and you may criticise, you may fret and you may fume, you may prate in ponderous platitudes about invasion and usurpation, but the fact confronts you nevertheless that our occupation of the Philippines is in full accord with that splendid spirit of progress that has characterized the history of the Anglo-Saxon race the world over, and before whose victorious advance the idols of paganism fall and lie shattered in the dust. Ignorance must give way to intelligence, superstition to enlightenment, lawlessness to ordered liberty. [Applause.]

And now, Mr. Chairman, we come to the never-to-be-forgotten campaign of 1904. In the beginning of this campaign it looked very much as though our Democratic friends had at last run short of paramount issues. Experience had taught them that it was the part of political wisdom carefully to eschew all reference to the tariff, finance, and imperialism, and whatever other mistakes the Democratic party has made in the past, no one can ever truthfully accuse its leaders of failing to show at all times a quick appreciation of the exigencies of party expediency. A new paramount issue had to be discovered at any cost, and so, after calling into conference those four great champions of the rights of the plain people, those brave and valiant knights who had always eagerly welcomed every opportunity to engage the octopus in mortal combat—those four pure and undefiled patriots, Thomas Ryan, August Belmont, Augustus Van Wyck, and "Blue-Eyed Billy" Sheehan [Laughter]—it was unanimously decided that the question of the trusts and their regulation should be the paramount issue. Every Democrat at once became infused with the zeal and enthusiasm that inspired the brave young knights of Scotland, who followed the Black Douglas as he carried the casket containing the heart of Bruce to the sacred sepulcher of the Savior. He buckled on his shield, drew his sword, and swore by all the patron saints of Democracy never to sheath his trusty blade until he had lopped off at least a dozen of the tentacles of the octopus. Oh, it was to be a battle royal! The country was to be freed for all time to come from the cold and cruel grasp of monopoly and predatory wealth. The American people were to be redeemed, rejuvenated, and sent on their way rejoicing.

But just as enthusiasm was running highest somebody made a discovery that sent the cold shivers down the back of every Democratic knight who had enlisted in the holy war and caused this latest crusade to end much the same way as Don Quixote's famous and heroic attack on the windmill. Some one pointed out that the Republican party had years before provided the people with an adequate remedy against corporate oppression in the shape of the Sherman antitrust law, a law that was framed by a Republican Senator, passed by a Republican Congress, and signed by a Republican President. It was also pointed out that during the Democratic Administration of Grover Cleveland this wise and salutary law, which was designed to curb the power of corporate greed and to protect the consumer against the extortions of monopoly, lay dormant upon our statute books because Richard Olney, a Democratic Attorney-General, by a peculiar process of reasoning which was satisfactory to himself and to the Administration of which he was a part, concluded that the law was unconstitutional and positively declined to bring any prosecutions under it. It remained for that matchless champion of the rights of the people, that great exponent of the enforcement of both the letter and the spirit of the law, Theodore Roosevelt, to carry to a successful conclusion the first prosecutions under that law, prosecutions that were begun under the Administration of his Republican predecessor. To-day the great combinations of capital realize as they never realized before that their power is not as great as the power of the Government, that their rights are not superior to the rights of the public, and that they will not be permitted to show less regard for the majesty of the law than the humblest citizen of the land.

If Theodore Roosevelt had accomplished nothing more than the awakening of the public conscience to a realization of the dangers of corporate encroachment, if he had done nothing more than to enforce without fear or favor the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law, he would still lead all of the men of his day and generation in the great work of practical and permanent reform. [Applause on the Republican side.] And that work so vigorously prosecuted under his Administration will be continued in 1909 under the Administration of his Republican successor. [Applause.] The Republican party was conceived in a spirit of justice and dedicated to the proposition of equality, and a party so conceived and so dedicated, and imbued as it has always been with the true spirit of progress and reform will never turn a deaf ear to the demands of the people.

And now, Mr. Chairman, we are about to enter upon another Presidential campaign. I do not know just what the paramount issue will be this year, as I am not in the confidence of the Democratic party. But I am prepared for almost any old thing. I would not be surprised to find in the Democratic platform this year a declaration to the effect that the only clean, legitimate, untainted money in the United States is that which is derived from the lecture platform and from the publication of the Commoner, a newspaper which, with a becoming sense of modesty, seldom mentions the name of its editor oftener than one hundred times in any one issue. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I happen, however, to have here a copy of the issue of the Commoner of February 28 and March 6, 1908, in the first of which Mr. Bryan's name appears by actual count exactly 135 times [laughter], and in the latter 108 times, and it isn't a very large paper at that—only sixteen pages, with one name ever present. [Renewed laughter.] But so intent is the editor on keeping that name before the public that even the advertising column does not escape, as is evidenced by the following notice:

FOR SALE.—An excellent registered shorthorn bull, 1 year old. In fine condition; color, red. W. J. Bryan, Lincoln, Nebr.

The pedigree of this "excellent registered Shorthorn bull" is not given, but in all probability he is a lineal descendant of the fifteen-hundred-dollar blooded heifer which we are told Mr. Bryan purchased shortly after he was overtaken by the prosperity that followed the election of his Republican opponent in 1896. [Great applause on the Republican side.]

Then, of course, we can expect in this year's platform the usual stereotyped declaration in favor of adhering rigidly to the Constitution as interpreted by the fathers and that, too, in face of the admitted fact that the only States in this Union in which, according to Democratic authority, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], the Constitution has been lynched, and where the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to that great "sheet anchor of our liberties" are violated with absolute impunity are the States that habitually give their electoral votes to the Democratic candidate for the Presidency.

Mr. Chairman, much stress will no doubt be laid on Democracy's pretended friendship for labor. Crocodile tears will be shed in great abundance by the Democratic spellbinder of 1908 as he tells of the heroic efforts of the minority in this House to enact legislation in behalf of the horny-handed sons of toil, and yet an examination of the record will disclose the fact that the only place in this country where labor is underpaid, where the efforts of workingmen to organize themselves into unions meet with determined opposition, and where few laws favorable to the cause of toil have been incorporated into the statutes, are the States that have never given an electoral vote to the Republican party. [Applause on the Republican side.] Organized labor to-day has a membership of approximately three million and, while I have no statistics at hand, I undertake to say that less than 5 per cent of this great army of workers is to be found in the Democratic States of the South. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we will be told in this campaign that the Republican party has appropriated Democracy's ideas and that Theodore Roosevelt is masquerading in the garments of William Jennings Bryan. The claim will be put forth that Roosevelt stands for the same principles of government that Bryan stands for; but when this claim is made we will ask for a bill of particulars. For instance, we will ask them to show when and where Theodore Roosevelt ever advocated the destruction of the protective policy of the Republican party; we will ask them to show when and where he ever favored the heresy of free and unlimited coinage of silver; we will ask them to show when and where he ever expressed contempt for the Supreme Court of the United States; we will ask them to show when and where he so far forgot his Americanism as to question the integrity of the flag of his country; we will ask them to show when and where he became inoculated with the populistic virus of initiative and referendum; we will ask them to show when and where he ever advocated a Government guaranty of bank deposits; we will ask them to show when and where he became a convert to the damnable and socialistic doctrine of Government ownership of railroads. No, no, my friends, Theodore Roosevelt and William Jennings Bryan are not one and identical. They have nothing whatever in common. One is the direct antithesis of the other. One is a practical statesman, the other an impractical dreamer; one is patriotic, the other is platitudinous; one is constructive, the other destructive; one believes in intelligent action, the other in unintelligible agitation. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the Republican party has now been in continuous control of the destinies of this nation for eleven years. This is not a long period of time in the life of a nation. It is not a long period of time in the life of a political party that has the courage of initiative and the genius of constructive statesmanship. It has been long enough, however, for the Republican party to present to the people a record of achievement unparalleled in all the annals of political history. In that time we have settled forever the question of our monetary standard and have strengthened and securely fortified the national credit. We have raised the standard of freedom and independence in the little island of Cuba and have banished forever from the Western Continent the last vestige of monarchial misrule and oppression. We have carried the blessings of American civilization, with its Christianizing, harmonizing, and elevating influence to the people of the Philippines and have pointed out to the Filipinos the path that leads to constitutional self-government. We have repealed the Democratic Wilson tariff law, that debt-producing measure of odious memory, and have dispelled the clouds of doubt and disaster that for four long years obscured our industrial horizon. We have strengthened the hands and enlarged the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission by enacting a railroad-rate bill, which does away forever with unjust and unfair discriminations in the matter of freight rates. We have given life and force and effect to the Sherman antitrust law and made it a power for good in the land. We have passed a national pure-food law to protect the lives and the health of our citizens. We have established the most cordial relations with the Republics of South America and have placed our trade with them on a firm and lasting foundation. Under the masterful genius of the Republican party the dream of a century will soon be an actual living reality.

The work of constructing the Panama Canal is being pushed forward with vigor and enthusiasm, and when this, the greatest of all modern undertakings, shall have been completed, there will follow as its natural and logical sequence the deepening of our waterways from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, and the multiplied products of the valleys of the Ohio and the Mississippi will soon be transported by water to the teeming millions of the Orient. Before this Congress shall have concluded its labors other great measures of progress and reform will be placed upon the statute books by the Republican party. An employers' liability law which will bear the test of constitutionality, and which effectually destroys the barbarous doctrine of "fellow-servant," has already been enacted; the other demands of labor will be given full and fair recognition, and a system of finance will be inaugurated that will make impossible all future speculative panics.

This is our record.

It is a record of patriotic achievement and true Americanism.

On this record we stand and ask a continuation of Republican control. We do not go into this campaign with an apology on our lips. Unlike our opponents, we have nothing to apologize for, nothing to explain, nothing to take back. The Republican party to-day stands, as it has always stood, for home and fireside, for law and order, for the dignity of labor, for the elevation of citizenship, for the extension of commerce, for the development and protection of industry, for America against all the world. [Loud and long-continued applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, $61,500 is a large sum. That amount was stolen from the United States subtreasury at St. Louis. Nobody had any opportunity to take it but the United States officers in charge. This money had been wrung from the people by the inexorable processes of taxation. It was the people's money. Mr. Chairman, who got it?

That subtreasury was under the control of Hon. Thomas J. Akins, Assistant United States Treasurer. The money was in the immediate hands of two tellers, D. P. Dyer and M. B. Ferguson.

Mr. Akins and both of these tellers were under bond. Under the law it is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed against these officers on their bonds to recover the loss which the Government has sustained by their criminality or carelessness as the case may be. Instead of commencing action as the law provides, the Secretary of the Treasury has been waiting nearly two years for Congress, on insufficient data, to relieve Mr. Akins from his legal liability.

Mr. BURLESON. Does this man Akins hold any position in the Republican party organization?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes; that will appear later. A bill for the purpose of relieving him of his legal responsibility was introduced in the last Congress, but failed to pass. It has been reintroduced in this Congress and is now pending in the Committee on Claims.

I introduced a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to Congress all the facts in the case that the bill might be considered on its merits. I called my resolution up a few days ago, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moved to lay it on the table, which was done by a vote of 126 to 123. I was astonished that the gentleman from New York was willing to smother the facts, even though Mr. Akins is of his party and a member of the national committee. But, Mr. Chairman, I shall not be put down so easily. I shall at the proper time move to take my resolution from the table and put it upon its passage.

In pressing this resolution I am not assuming to be more watchful than other members of the committee. This loss occurred in Missouri, and as I am the only Missourian on the committee it seemed to me to be my peculiar duty to call for the facts surrounding the unfortunate and discreditable affair.

I am personally acquainted with Mr. Akins. I esteem him highly. He has always enjoyed an enviable reputation for integrity. I should be greatly surprised if an investigation should show that he got any of the loot. But did he carefully look after his charge? He says he did. The circumstances indicate that he did not. Let us have the facts.

I believe Mr. Akins would not, and certainly he should not, object to the most searching investigation. He has in the past been an ardent advocate of investigations. Only a few years ago, as the manager of a Missouri campaign, his battle cry was "Let us see the books!" He and his coadjutors insisted that the Democrats had looted the school funds of many thousands of dollars, and from every hilltop they shouted "Let us see the books!" By a strange turn of fortune they were permitted to see the books, but they found them correct.

Now, by the same token, I demand, "Let us see the books." If they show Mr. Akins blameless we will all rejoice with him, but, Mr. Chairman, "let us see the books."

In a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Akins says:

As to the charges against Teller Dyer, I have to say that the examination of the office disclosed a shortage in his accounts of $61,500, and Mr. Dyer has admitted to me personally the existence of the shortage. He also admitted that he knew of the existence of the shortage on September 27, and therefore the entries in his books from that date until October 5, showing that his accounts were correct and that no shortage existed were false entries. He also admitted to me that on October 5 he got $61,500 from Teller Ferguson to make his accounts balance when Cashier Johnson was about to check them up. The evidence gathered by the Secret Service shows clearly that for the last three years Mr. Dyer has been given to frequent and excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquors and has been a frequent visitor to houses of ill repute.

As to the charges against Teller Ferguson, I am advised that the evidence conclusively shows that he was an intimate acquaintance and constant companion of Mr. Dyer and thoroughly familiar with his personal habits, and, like Mr. Dyer, he has for the last three years been given to frequent and excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquors and has been a frequent visitor to houses of ill repute, and that he usually accompanied Mr. Dyer in his dissipations.

Then, according to Mr. Akins's own admissions, these two tellers had for three years been leading lives of drunken debauchery. We should have the facts, that it may appear whether Mr. Akins has any excuse for not knowing the habits of these young men and having them discharged before such a large sum had been lost.

Mr. Akins says in the letter from which I have just read that Mr. Dyer admitted that he knew of the shortage in his accounts for nearly two weeks and that he altered his books to conceal it. Is there no penalty for a public officer altering his books to force a balance? If there is, why has it not been enforced against this recreant teller?

It appears from Mr. Akins's letter from which I have just read that Mr. Dyer admitted that when he found his cash was to be counted and his accounts checked up he got $61,500 from Teller Ferguson to conceal his shortage. What was this but a conspiracy between these two tellers to defraud the Government? Let the Secretary of the Treasury tell us why they have not been prosecuted for their crime.

These tellers were under bond, making them liable for this shortage. Why has not the Secretary of the Treasury proceeded against them to collect it? Let him tell us why.

The letter of Mr. Akins, from which I have just read, discloses that Mr. Dyer admitted that he knew of his shortage for nearly two weeks before his accounts were checked up. Why was it not discovered sooner? Where was Mr. Akins during these two weeks? I have heard that he was out in the State making political speeches and directing a political campaign. Let us have the facts, so that we may know whether this is true. One put in charge of the funds of the Government amounting to many millions of dollars ought not to leave those vast sums of public treasure in the hands of minor employees while he goes on extended tours of campaign speaking and political intrigue. Did Mr. Akins do this?

It may be argued that Mr. Akins was a member of the Republican national committee, and that when he was appointed United States Treasurer it was intended that he should continue active political work. Sir, there are some questions which every man should settle for himself. He ought to have frankly told the President that he could not properly fill the office of subtreasurer and at the same time conduct an active political campaign. He either should have given up the one position or not have accepted the other. Indeed, the President ought not to have saddled both places upon him.

Mr. Chairman, what a melancholy chapter in the history of our State is the account of the participation of Mr. Akins and other Federal officeholders in the politics of Missouri. This loss of public money happened in the midst of a strenuous political campaign of which Mr. Akins was manager. Mr. Bloebaum, postmaster at St. Charles, for months at a time left his office in the hands of minor employees while he went to St. Louis to assist Mr. Akins in the campaign. Hon. A. F. Shriner, from the office of the surveyor of customs, devoted much time to the same purpose. Other Federal officers were equally busy. With what result? A shortage in the St. Charles post-office—a shortage in the office of the surveyor of customs, and a $61,500 shortage in Mr. Akins's office. At the time these Federal officers were neglecting their offices to carry on political work the present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Cortelyou, was chairman of the Republican national committee and in supreme command of the campaign in every State in the Union. Now he comes and recommends that his faithful lieutenant, Mr. Akins, be relieved from his legal liability for the money which has been lost. Why does not he furnish us with the facts upon which he bases his remarkable recommendation?

Under the peculiar circumstances surrounding this case, to relieve this man without an investigation would be to establish a very dangerous precedent. A United States treasurer has access to the money under his control. He may put his hands on it when nobody sees. If he happens to be at once both United States Treasurer and head boss of a political machine what temptation and what facility for securing campaign funds is presented. Men have been known to take money from the coffers of insurance companies to be used to control the ballot box. Mr. Cortelyou ought to know that whoever would take the money of widows and orphans to carry elections would not hesitate to take it from the Government for a similar purpose, if only we establish a precedent that Congress will relieve them from liability because nobody saw them take it.

It is rumored that Mr. Akins and both of these tellers were in the habit of running "snakes" in the cash. That when one of them wanted money he wrote his name and the amount on a slip of paper, put it in, and took the cash out. Such a practice is not only a clear violation of law, but it tempts employees to take out beyond their ability to replace. I hope an investigation will show that Mr. Akins neither did this himself, nor permitted any employee to do it. But, sir, let us know whether he did or not. Let the Secretary of the Treasury furnish us the facts.

Mr. Cortelyou has recommended that Mr. Akins's bill do pass, but he does not explain to us upon what he bases his recommendation. I know there are those who believe that Congress ought to legislate upon the mere recommendation of the President, or the head of one of the Executive Departments. I do not concur in that view. Congress is one of the coordinate branches of the Government, and should not be driven or dictated to by the President or his Secretaries. Congress should legislate upon its own judgment. We come direct from the people to represent them. It is our duty to obey their will—not that of the executive department. If we surrender our power we betray the people whose representatives we are.

Mr. Chairman, aside from the Speaker's unwarranted repression of the will of the people as it is sought to be expressed by their representatives upon this floor, nothing so threatens our system of representative government as Executive encroachment. As an illustration, let us contemplate what has occurred here within the past few days. The President has caused to be prepared a bill, introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], the effect of which is to make trusts and monopolies lawful and to authorize the big corporations to enter into and carry out contracts in restraint of trade. Under such a law every State would have taken away from it all power to prevent trusts and monopolies from oppressing and outraging the people.

Not even Congress would have any control over the subject. All of the vast interests of the people would be committed absolutely to one man—the Commissioner of Corporations. If, as in Mr. Akins's case, this Commissioner of Corporations should also be a member of the national committee what marvelous opportunities would he have for collecting campaign funds. The people do not favor such a law. A majority of the Members of this House are opposed to it. But, sir, it has been prepared and introduced at the direction of the President. He is furiously brandishing his club and demanding its passage. You Republicans have the majority and can pass the measure if you so determine. You do not want to do it. You know very well you ought not to do it. But there is the "big stick." If you fail to pass the bill, you may be banished from the "Federal pie counter," and what Republican could live without "pie?" If you do not pass the bill, an army of Federal officeholders may get busy and nominate in your places men who will be more placable. I know your situation is a hard one. Nevertheless, I would encourage you to stand up with us for the doctrines of representative government as they were delivered to us by the fathers of our glorious Constitution. Let us zealously defend the powers of Congress, for they are the powers of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. MARSHALL].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman from Missouri use all his time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the gentleman used practically all of his fifteen minutes.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, the most striking feature of our history is that in this Republic "the man of the hour" has always been forthcoming, and our most reliant hope for the future lies in the perfect faith that "the man of the hour" will always be forthcoming.

The fact that for many years these men have come up from the ranks of the Republican party is neither incidental nor accidental, but a logical outcome, a plain proof that the principles of the Republican party are in tune with and keep abreast of the best thought of the times and that the best citizenship of the country falls into the ranks of the Republican party.

Theodore Roosevelt is the best illustration of "the man of the hour" this country has ever produced. He came into command when, out of the development of our great resources, a prosperity had come which aroused and challenged the wonder of the world.

Great factors in this development were the corporations and the combinations of corporations, representing vast aggregations of wealth which became arrogant and drunk with power, controlling with iron hand our transportation facilities and industries, annihilating competition, overriding laws, and undertaking, through this tremendous power, the domination of our politics, State and national, until the issue became, Shall the people or the interests rule?

Such, in a word, were the conditions when that "man of the hour," Theodore Roosevelt, came into power, with his slogan, "A square deal for all."

And running through all the years of President Roosevelt's Administration his mighty influence in this battle has been with the people, and the most flagrant of the offenders have been brought to a partial realization that they are the creatures and not the masters of the Government. But let no man make the mistake of counting the battle won; it is only begun, and to halt now means defeat for years to come. Somewhat disabled, but nothing daunted, the ranks of the predatory interests are closed up, and they stand ready at every opportunity to regain any lost ground by taking advantage of every condition.

Growing out of the panic, for which they were the most directly responsible, their latest move is to come to Congress for relief, through currency legislation, because they have been brought face to face with a period of liquidation.

Let me ask, What relief did the farmers of the West get from Congress, when, after a period of inflation of land values, they were compelled to face liquidation and see their homes sold under the hammer for a mere song? They coaxed relief from the soil by tireless energy and patient toil rebuilding their fortunes by the slow process of self-denial and rigid economy.

It is of currency legislation that I want in part to speak.

The currency question used to be looked upon as purely technical and was discussed largely by experts along theoretical lines, more or less in the air, over the heads of the people. Growing out of the recent stringency, the question seems to have been brought down to earth. It has come home to every man and become a practical question, and is being thought out and discussed by practical men along practical lines. This is encouraging, for when the combined—perhaps I might be permitted to say, composite—common sense of the people contribute from day to day their full share to the general welfare and it is brought to bear on a matter like this, it is in a fair way to be settled, and settled right.

Our currency and banking system was doubtless admirable in its time, but that is faulty now and has outlived the conditions for which it was devised most men will concede. It saddles an enormous unnecessary tax on the people for interest on the bonds that should and would have been paid long ago but for the necessity of these bonds as security for national-bank currency.

Our currency and banking system, when coupled with the pernicious system of stock gambling on Wall street, tends to put the agricultural interests and industrial business of the country under the domination of a few. I do not mean to imply that the laws were intended to bring about such results, but rather to emphasize the fact that out of our wonderful progress have come such entirely new conditions that our systems are a misfit.

Currency laws which fail to properly—I might say automatically—distribute our money over the country according to its needs, coupled with banking laws and regulations which permit vast sums of the people's savings, accumulated through legitimate business methods, to be used for the illegitimate business of stock gambling are wrong and a serious menace to the prosperity of our country.

It was no surprise that out of the panic came a cry from all over the land for a change in the currency and banking systems that would prevent a repetition of the disaster. Neither need there be surprise that there were those who stood ready to take advantage of the conditions—to capitalize the needs of the people, so to speak—believing that the masses, in their desire for a change, would accept anything rather than nothing. Out of these propitious conditions came the now well-known Aldrich bill, devised to still further centralize the money and wealth of the country in New York by adding and giving greater scope to an already bad system.

Years ago it might have been fairly safe to calculate that when public clamor ran high you could hand the people a gold brick, but not so to-day. Thanks to our printing presses, our rural free-delivery facilities, our telegraph and telephones, our intellectual growth has kept pace with our grand industrial and physical progress, and the men on our farms and in villages not only know full well what they want, but they want what they want when they want it.

The big banks were the first to get frightened when the stringency came; and they, in turn, frightened the smaller ones, but the masses of the people were cool; they kept their heads, and if they had not, three-fourths of the banks in the country would have closed their doors. This splendid demonstration of the superior intelligence and confidence of the people showed a remarkable knowledge of conditions and marked a new era in our progress. Such superior citizenship has earned the right to the best and safest currency and banking systems and the wisest protection that the law can give them. In the face of this, it is worse than a mistake to undertake to force on them such a proposition as the Aldrich bill. The people have condemned it; the composite common sense of the people turns against it. Its sponsors claim for it that it is only a makeshift. Its passage will result in no better legislation for years to come.

I have no intention in the brief time I have to discuss in detail the faults of this measure or the good features of any other; but let me say, its main feature is that it creates a new kind of bond-secured currency which will necessarily add a speculative value to the bonds affected and opens a new fertile field of exploitation to the bond-dealing and stock-gambling banks and their allied trust companies; and, while it adds to the currency with one hand, it reduces the reserves and depletes the loanable funds of the banks with the other.

The other features still further contract the loanable funds of the banks—all this at a time of stringency. When it is considered that our recent panic was, in fact, a credit panic, rather than a currency panic, the full force and weight of these objections can be realized.

It is well calculated to sound an alarm when a panic is approaching, and its practical workings would do more harm than good to the country, as a whole. A full and free discussion has failed to disclose a single valuable feature; it is truly astonishing that such an indefensible measure should have commanded so much serious attention and consideration at the hands of Congress and the country.

I make no pretense of undertaking to discuss the technicalities of the money question, but to my mind it is plain that the fewer kinds of money we have, the better; it is equally clear that a currency secured on bonds, and especially which are subject to violent fluctuations in the market, is a mistake. Under present conditions the Government is obliged to keep out hundreds of millions of dollars of its bonds to make it possible for the banks to procure them, thus entailing expense for interest running into millions.

The centralization of our money and credits is clearly wrong, and that the money and credits of the people should be spread out over the whole country according to its needs to facilitate the exchange and transportation of our commodities is plain to all. This calls for a currency that will ebb and flow and stay where it is needed, and come home and go out of use when it is not needed.

SECURITY FOR BANK DEPOSITS.

Our people should be encouraged to save, and their savings sacredly safeguarded by every means in our power.

Ten years ago in the senate of the State of North Dakota I introduced a bill to provide for the security of deposits in banks and ever since have advocated that system. To me the evils of a system where the savings of the people are not properly safeguarded are inexcusable, and are something appalling and the system is far behind our progress in other lines. The evils to the depositors attending such a system, to say nothing of the bankers, are so great that they fully justify a change, even at some considerable risk. The question of security for bank deposits resolves itself on final analysis to this: That the banks, through systems of rigid inspection and supervision, are better able to protect against each other than the people are to protect themselves against the banks, and most certainly the banks are better able to stand the losses.

It is said that the man who deposits money in a bank does so voluntarily. True. He is therefore all the more a public benefactor, because every dollar of his money deposited creates a reserve for $4 or $5 put into the working channels of trade. Tell me, then, why should he not be protected?

The Government and the States—in my State the counties, townships, and school districts—demand security for the deposit of public moneys; then why should not the individual be secured?

The Government owes this protection to the people. The masses of the people, in their splendid confidence and courage, saved the country from a financial crash, while the banks of New York held up the money of the people, and that of the Government as well, and the rich men were locking up immense sums of money in safety-deposit boxes.

It is due to the people that Congress legislate to protect their savings, and they demand it. It is not, however, my purpose, in the time allowed me, to undertake an argument for, but rather to put myself on record as favoring a fund to guarantee bank deposits, preferably created and maintained by the banks, under rigid supervision of the Government.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

One way of perfecting security of small deposits would be by the creation of a postal savings bank. With this system properly established confidence would be restored and the country at large greatly benefited, as all the money would be at work all the time and we would hear nothing more of a demand for more currency. I think an ideal plan would be a system of postal savings banks, where the savings of the people would be gathered in by the Government and returned to the public use by the Government depositing the postal savings funds in the banks in the community where they accumulate. The banks in turn might be authorized to loan these moneys on real estate under stringent regulations, and in this way the small savings would be made to do a large service in the development of the country, and great sums sent away for interest could be kept at home, and much would be done to prevent the centralization of money and credits which we have under present conditions.

By all means let us provide a safe place for the people's savings—the fruits of the toil, economy, and energy of those who make this country what it is.

The business man's savings go, generally, to increase his business, and he is apt to be a borrower as well as a depositor. I am speaking more particularly for the laborer, the farmer, the mechanic, and the professional man—the thousands who do not employ their savings in active business, but deposit them in banks, providing the sinews of war for the business world.

By encouraging and protecting them you will protect all, for their savings are the corner stone for the foundation of our business prosperity.

STOCK GAMBLING IN WALL STREET.

The right kind of currency and banking laws and systems will do much for the business prosperity of the country and toward the prevention of panics, but with this the work will be only half done. The legitimate business of the country must be separated from the illegitimate; the commercial business as distinct from the stock gambling as from horse racing and card games.

The business of the country can not prosper part dishonest and part honest. Our currency and banking systems can not perform their full and rightful functions serving at the same time both stock gambling and legitimate commerce, nor can wealth be equitably disturbed when the business of the country giving value received, based on actual values of commodities, is brought into competition with gambling business, which creates nothing, gives nothing, and takes everything. It is evident that under such a condition the wealth of the many will pour into the coffers of the few.

The time has come when the business of stock gambling and the legitimate business of the country must be divorced and the banks confined to their legitimate functions.

Let me quote from an editorial in the New York World:

This system drains the reserve money of the United States to Wall street. A commercial bank charging merchants and manufacturers 6 per cent interest can not afford to pay interest on deposits in competition with the Wall street banks, which can frequently get 20 to 50 per cent on the stock exchange for the use of their deposits. Thus these reserve moneys gravitate to the banks which can afford to pay high interest on them.

Wall street thus became a great funnel into which the savings of the people, instead of being available to the local manufacturer or the local storekeeper, were driven by higher rates of interest to the stock exchange.

Again the editorial says:

DEPOSITS AND LOANS.

When the recent panic became acute in November the clearing-house banks reported deposits of over $1,000,000,000. Of these deposits, one-half were due to other banks. Of the loans, which slightly exceeded the deposits, over half were on stock exchange collateral. That is, the money collected from millions of depositors throughout the country by their local banks was used as the basis of Wall street credit, and was the real money in the stock exchange game.

BANKS AS GAMBLING TOOLS.

In no other country than the United States are incorporated banks part of the machinery of stock gambling. In no other country are the methods of stock gamblers such as to require the constant use for that sole purpose of hundreds of millions of dollars of other people's money. In no other country is the National Treasury called upon to turn over the public revenues for the use of members of a stock exchange. In London, Paris, Berlin, Frankfort, and Amsterdam gamblers in stock must use their own money and their own credit as if they were playing at Monte Carlo instead of on a stock exchange.

This difference in stock gambling accounts for the great fluctuations in the rates of interest in New York as compared with the stability of European financial centers. In New York call money may be 3 per cent one day and 50 per cent the next day, something unknown in Europe.

The banking laws and the banking system of the United States concentrate the fluid capital of the country in Wall street. By bidding up the rate of interest higher than legitimate business can pay, stock gamblers are able to draw from productive industry its means for supplying pay rolls, for carrying on manufacturing, for distributing goods, and for moving the crops.

* * * * * * *

In Great Britain an increase of 1 per cent in the discount rate of the Bank of England is regarded as a serious fluctuation. For the Bank of France to alter its rate one-half of 1 per cent is a matter of international finance. For the Bank of Germany to charge a third of last week's highest rate in Wall street is done only after serious consultation with the Government, with great capitalists, and with business interests.

And the Herald says further:

These gambling transactions amount to over $30,000,000,000—four times the value of the products of all the farms of the United States, half the value of all the land and buildings, one-third the census valuation of all the wealth of every kind in the country.

Let me say that in stock speculating the buyer puts up only a small margin and the broker furnishes the balance by borrowing from the bank and paying interest on the whole amount, involving the use of vast sums of money. Of all the stock deals on Wall street more than 99 per cent are nothing but bets that the price will go up or down. They are as much gambling as betting on a horse race or a card game. Emphatically, our national banks should not be allowed to loan the money of our people to these gamblers. Many New York banks not only loan money on these stocks and bonds, but often buy them outright, and when a stringency comes they are obliged to hold up the stock gamblers by sustaining the price of stocks or they will endanger the banks, and the commercial customer is thus made to suffer.

CORPORATIONS AND POLITICS.

Through the machinery of stock speculations and by the use of the accumulated millions of the country's savings a few men are enabled to control public service and industrial corporations of the country, more or less, in defiance of the laws, and with this tremendous power undertake to dictate our politics.

The work of bringing the corporations doing an interstate business under Government control and supervision must go steadily on until all are brought onto the same common plane of honesty with other business enterprises, until every dollar of capitalization stands for a dollar of actual value, and the people are no longer compelled to pay tribute in the way of interest and dividends on watered and inflated stocks and bonds. When this is accomplished it will assure stocks a stable value from day to day and year to year; thus they will become current and command the confidence of the people.

This must be done more and more. The influence of the corporations must be eliminated from politics. They will take their hands off our politics no more graciously than they loosen their iron grip on our industries and commerce. The taint of corporate influence is a disgrace to American politics and must be wiped out.

In my own State there is a bold attempt by the agents of these corporations to thwart the will of the people by the use of all the methods known to experienced politicians, and so much are the people aroused that the issue is no longer one of candidates, but whether the people or the corporations shall rule. Instead of permitting the voters to go to the primaries and register their wills, these men who make politics a business, and live and grow wealthy by the favors of corporations, are engaged in a determined effort to fool and, if possible, stampede the people, in order to perpetuate their hold on the politics of the State.

So let no man make the mistake of counting the battle won. To stop now is to lose all the ground gained.

The founders of the Government made it purely representative in form; it rests with the people to make it representative in fact, by freeing themselves from domination of any kind. This Government is in its infancy. To survive we must progress. What was radical ten years ago is conservative and imperatively necessary to-day. A conservatism which blocks progress is radical in its effects. Inaction means dry rot. New conditions demand new measures and new methods. Old methods of warfare are obsolete and inefficient to win battles now, but not more so than old laws and old methods to cope with new conditions. Growth and advancement must be coupled with progress in legislation in order that the people may be benefited in full measure.

The people demand legislation along progressive lines. I for one am committed to progressive policies, and firmly believe that progress along political lines is the first and most imperative essential to progressive legislation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SPIGHT].

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time a letter from the secretary of the senate of the Mississippi legislature, transmitting a memorial addressed to the Congress of the United States. I ask also that the memorial be read:

MISSISSIPPI LEGISLATURE,
SENATE CHAMBER,
Jackson, Miss., February 27, 1908.

Hon. THOMAS SPIGHT,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of the resolution adopted by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Mississippi, which is self-explanatory.

Yours, very truly,
FRANK ROBERSON,
Secretary of the Senate.

A joint resolution memorializing Members of Congress to pass a law appropriating cotton-tax fund now in the United States Treasury to pension ex-Confederate soldiers and their widows and orphans.

Whereas there has remained in the United States Treasury for a number of years a sum approximating $60,000,000 illegally collected as a tax on cotton produced and marketed in Southern States during the years 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868; and

Whereas after the passage of so many years it becomes impossible to secure the return of this tax in an equalized manner to the greater number of those who paid this illegal tax; and

Whereas recognizing it is the wish and desire of the people of the southern cotton-growing States who paid this tax and their descendants that this fund now held by the United States Treasury be paid out for the pensioning of old ex-Confederate soldiers, their widows and orphans, and understanding that by this method it would, in a practicable way, reach the class of people who bore this injustice: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to pass a law authorizing and instructing the Treasurer of the United States to pay over this cotton-tax fund to the treasurers of the different southern cotton-growing States in the proportion as each State contributed and paid this tax that constitutes this fund, for the purpose of distributing the same as pensions to the old Confederate soldiers as the legislatures of the different States may deem proper. Be it further

Resolved, That the Members of Congress from Mississippi are earnestly requested to take such steps as will aid in accomplishing this end.

Mr. Chairman, a similar communication was sent to every Member of Congress from Mississippi. Immediately after its reception the Representatives in this House from that State had a meeting and unanimously conferred upon me the honor of presenting this memorial to the House. This action was taken, first, because I am the only ex-Confederate soldier in the delegation, and secondly, because I am the only man from any State who has ever introduced a bill in either House of Congress for the specific purpose mentioned in this memorial.

In explanation of the delay in presenting it, I may properly say that as soon as I was notified of the action of my colleagues I sought recognition from the Speaker for that purpose. He very courteously agreed to recognize me, but at the same time informed me that the Republican floor leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], had been objecting to everything of the kind and that I would better see him. I did this, with the result that I was told by the gentleman from New York that if I offered it he would object, as he had been doing in all other cases. I will do him the justice to say that I did not understand that he took this course out of any spirit of hostility to the purpose of the memorial, but in order to be consistent with himself. I can not yet understand, however, why a respectful memorial of the legislature of a sovereign State of the Union should be denied recognition on the objection of a single Member. But inasmuch as, under the rules, this one objection would prevail, I had no alternative but to accomplish the purpose in this indirect manner.

In connection with the presentation of this memorial of the Mississippi legislature, it may not be improper for me to state that the disposition of this cotton tax in the manner indicated in this memorial has been indorsed by the Mississippi Division of United Confederate Veterans, commanded by Gen. Robert Lowry, an ex-governor and one of the noblest and purest men in the State, and by other Confederate organizations all over the country. It is based upon no partisan or sectional feeling, or any plea for charitable consideration, but alone upon the incontrovertible proposition that the Government of the United States has, for more than forty years, enjoyed the use and benefits of this money unjustly, illegally, and unconstitutionally collected, almost entirely, from the Confederate soldiers and their families, and that the living few of those grand old men and the widows of those who are dead, should, in their last days, have the help which this pittance of their own money would bring them. These gallant old men, who are so few in number and who are so rapidly approaching the sunset of life, do not ask for themselves and the incomparable women who have shared with them the hardships of so many years, any pensions from the Federal Government. They recognize that they are not entitled to that consideration, and, poor as they are, they are too proud to ask for it. Without a murmur they have contributed their share of the billions of dollars which have been given to Union soldiers by way of pensions.

In asking Congress to refund this money to the cotton States with authority to use it for Confederate pensions, they do not feel that they are putting themselves in the attitude of suppliants, but are only demanding of the Government a restoration of that which of right belongs to them. At the time of the collection of this tax the South was utterly impoverished as the result of four years of devastating war. After the surrender of her armies, her surviving soldiers returned to their once prosperous homes to find them desolate. The accumulations of generations of industry were gone. They accepted the situation with the manhood and courage which has ever characterized them and went to work to rebuild their lost fortunes. In their poverty-stricken condition the Government of the United States, whose power they had resisted for four years, met them upon the very threshold of their new life with this tax upon their only money-producing crop and subjected them to burdens imposed upon no other section of the country. In the years 1866, 1867, and 1868, when nearly all of this tax was collected, the war had ended and peace prevailed in every part of our domain. Of the total of a little more than $68,000,000 in the six years from 1863 to 1868, each inclusive, nearly $65,000,000 were collected in the three years, 1866, 1867, and 1868. Portions of Kentucky, Louisiana, Tennessee, and Virginia being within the Federal lines, there was collected from these States during the years 1863, 1864, and 1865 nearly $3,000,000, but not a dollar was collected except in 1866, 1867, and 1868 from the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Texas. There is no disguising the fact that this tax was a punitive one and levied and collected from the principal agricultural product of the South as a punishment of our people for having engaged in open, honorable warfare against the United States.

I have never been ashamed of the part our people played in that momentous struggle, nor do I ever expect to be in the frame of mind to apologize for it. We believed we were right. We submitted the questions at issue to the arbitrament of arms and lost. We accepted the result in good faith, and to-day Mississippi is as loyal to the Union as Massachusetts. But no matter whether in the estimation of the Federal authorities we were right or wrong, it was distinctly declared by the Federal Government that the Southern States were never out of the Union. The acts of their conventions in adopting ordinances of secession and the organization of the separate government of the Confederate States of America were all held to be null and void. The fearful and humiliating period of reconstruction through which we passed was not excused upon the ground that our Southern States were conquered provinces, but because it was claimed to be necessary to reestablish the Federal authority and "guarantee to the States lately in rebellion a republican form of government." If this was true, then we were entitled to the protection of every provision of the Constitution of the United States. In section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, it is declared that—

All duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

Can it be said that a tax is "uniform throughout the United States" which is levied upon an agricultural product which was confined to eleven States of the Union?

Another clause of the Federal Constitution declares that—

Direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included in this Union according to their respective numbers.

The Supreme Court has said:

Taxes on real estate being indisputably direct taxes, taxes on the lands or incomes of real estate are clearly direct taxes. * * * Taxes on personal property are likewise direct taxes.

This cotton tax was a tax "upon the income of real estate." The merest tyro knows that cotton is "personal property." Then, according to the Supreme Court, in either case it was a direct tax.

The Supreme Court says further:

The tax, so far as it applies to the income of real estate and personal property, being a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, and therefore unconstitutional and void, because not apportioned according to representation * * * is necessarily invalid.

There are other equally cogent arguments against the constitutionality of this tax, and while the Supreme Court of the United States has never directly decided the question, it is generally conceded that the levying and collection of this tax was without constitutional authority. The immediate question was never before the Supreme Court but once. This was on appeal from a judgment of the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Tennessee. Unfortunately, this judgment was rendered in 1868, before the passions incident to the war had cooled. The circuit court held the law under which the tax was collected to be constitutional. The Supreme Court, on appeal, divided equally—four in favor and four against its constitutionality, one judge being absent. This operated as an affirmance of the judgment of the lower court.

In the recent decisions of what are known as the "income-tax cases," from which above quotations are made, the Supreme Court has settled the very principles involved in this case, and it is no longer an open question. I do not believe that any court, State or Federal, would now hold that the cotton tax was constitutionally collected. If not, then simple honesty would require that this money should be refunded. It is not a question of law, but of good morals. The only remaining thing to be determined is, How shall it be done? Beyond doubt the proper thing to do, if it were practicable, would be to refund it to those who paid it or to their legal representatives. In the very nature of the case, after the lapse of more than forty years, this would be almost impossible in most cases. The difficulty in making the proof would be well-nigh insurmountable. Receipts are lost or destroyed, witnesses cognizant of the facts dead or inaccessible, and in nearly every case the only evidence would be the meager and unsatisfactory records in the Treasury Department. As a matter of interest to those now living who paid this tax, and to the representatives of those who are dead, I submit the following letter from the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 12, 1908.

Hon. THOMAS SPIGHT, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 5th instant, asking whether or not there is any record from which can be ascertained the names of persons who paid cotton tax under civil war tax acts, I have the honor to advise you that the assessment lists in the Office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue contain the names of persons, firms, or corporations who paid the tax aforesaid, with the amount paid by each.

This Department will take pleasure in supplying you with any information that you desire that is contained in these records, so far as it is possible to do so.

The statement containing the amount of cotton tax collected, inclosed by you, is herewith returned.

Respectfully, GEO. B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary.

While this of itself would fall far short of what would be required to enable the Treasury Department to refund to those who paid, it could, by appropriate legislation, be made very helpful to claimants in identification of the persons, firms, and corporations from whom the tax was collected and the amount paid by each. If it should ever be determined to repay this money there ought to be an act of Congress making these records competent evidence of what they contain, and prescribing the method of obtaining the same. In view of the information contained in these records, which I did not have when I introduced former bills on this subject in the Fifty-ninth Congress and in this, I shall, at an early day, prepare and present to Congress another bill providing that the amounts, shown by the records to have been collected from each State, be turned into the treasuries of such States, to be paid to such claimants as present their demands within a prescribed period of time and upon certain defined rules of evidence, giving to the records in the office of the internal-revenue collector full faith and credit as to what they contain, and after the expiration of that time, whatever balance remains, to be used for Confederate pensions, or in such other manner as may be directed by the legislatures of the respective States. I am sure the rights of parties interested can be far more readily and cheaply ascertained by the States than by the officials of the United States Treasury.

It may be interesting to call attention to the fact that in August, 1861, after armed hostilities had actually begun and some bloody battles had been fought, Congress enacted a law levying an annual tax of $20,000,000 to be collected from the States. This was a war measure and the tax was apportioned among the States according to population as required by the Constitution. In October, 1862, the law was so amended as to make this tax a charge upon the land in the "insurrectionary States" to be defined by the proclamation of the President. This was a direct tax and the law imposing it was within the purview of the Constitution.

Of course this tax was not collected from the States composing the Confederate government, for obvious reasons, but it was collected from those denominated "loyal States." Later this tax was remitted to the States that had not paid it and refunded to those which did pay it. Now, then, if it was right to refund this tax constitutionally levied and collected, why, in all reason and fairness, is it not right to refund this tax collected from certain other States which was collected without constitutional authority? No other answer can be given to this question than that every principle of right, fair dealing, and governmental honesty requires that it should be done. The question is, Will Congress do it?

I give here the respective amounts collected from the nine principal cotton-growing States. None of the other collections run as high as $1,000,000 from any State.

NOTE.—The tax on raw cotton was levied by act of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat., 465), and repealed by act of February 3, 1868 (15 Stat., 34).

I confess that I am not so much concerned about how this money, when refunded, shall be employed as I am about its actual repayment. Various propositions have been presented to Congress as to how this money ought to be apportioned. Most of them have asked that it be applied to the common-school fund. After the most earnest consideration of this question in all its bearings, I have been unable to bring myself to the conclusion that this would be the most equitable disposition of this money. I yield to no man in my desire to have the benefits of a common-school education extended to the children of the whole country, but there are limitations beyond which I can not go without violence to honest convictions. The conditions existing in Southern States are peculiar and not well understood in some other sections of the country. With a white native population there is no material blessing comparable to that of the education in substantial matters of the rising generation. We want them fitted not only for enlightened citizenship, but also for the intelligent direction of public affairs, municipal, State, and national. While this is true, it must be admitted that distinctions should be made along racial lines based upon peculiar characteristics.

I assume that no true American citizen will insist that Asiatic peoples and other foreign elements, whether of one color or another, from which anarchists are recruited, constitute the sources from which we may expect to evolve the truest citizenship of the nation. From England, from Scotland, from Ireland, from Germany, from Norway and Sweden, and from other European countries, we have inherited some of our richest and noblest blood, but we never got any of it from Africa. Having been born and raised on a Southern plantation, surrounded by a multitude of little negroes who were my earliest playmates, I have nothing but the kindest feeling for them. But while this is true, I know, from a long and intimate association with them, that the negro, neither of the pure or mixed blood, can ever become a safe and trusted American citizen in the broadest sense. This feeling must be shared by every unbiased man who has had the opportunity of forming an impartial opinion. I am far from wishing to deny the negro any and every possible growth and development mentally and morally which he is capable of using advantageously to himself and the community in which he may live; but when we undertake, by law, to make him the equal of the white man, we essay the impossible. I have always been willing to give him such rudimentary education and manual training as will fit him for his station in life, and to this end our Southern States have voted liberal appropriations of money raised by taxation from the white people. Beyond this I am not willing to go. There is nothing truer than—

A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring.

The negro as a race, with rare exceptions, is not capable of this "deep drinking," and the effort only serves to make him a more "undesirable citizen." I want to help him to be useful in his sphere, and there his greatest happiness lies. It is worse than idle to talk about making him equal to the white man.

This is not a digression from my subject, but leads up to the fundamental objection to the use of this cotton-tax money, if it should ever be refunded to the States, for school purposes. We are taxing ourselves in an increasing ratio for educational objects, and we are willing to bear it under directions prescribed by our State legislatures. This we have done and are now doing cheerfully, and are giving the negro children a full benefit. We will continue to do this from a humanitarian and Christian standpoint, and because it is to the interest of all alike that the negro, whose home must always be in our midst, shall be prepared for the greatest degree of happiness and usefulness of which he is capable. That he ought not to be encouraged to figure as a prominent factor in the domain of politics his best friends must admit. Eliminated from the political equation, as he is now in the South, every man familiar with the situation knows that he is happier, better contented, and more prosperous than ever before since his emancipation. There are two controlling reasons, therefore, why I believe that so much of this money as can not be refunded direct to parties entitled to it should not be used as a common-school fund. One of these I have just given. The other is that, next to the people who actually paid it, the Confederate soldiers and their widows have the strongest equitable claim.

They represented the wealth-producing power of their section, and this tax was so much subtracted from the product of their toil. They and their families owned the land upon which the cotton was grown. They are all old, and very many of them are feeble and poor. Our State governments are doing what they can to relieve their necessities and smooth the short pathway that lies between them and the grave. We do not intend that any of them shall ever die in the poorhouse. We are giving them all the pension we are able to provide, but in most cases the annual allowance does not amount to more than the monthly pensions to Federal soldiers. We do not ask that they be placed on the pension rolls of the Government, already so heavily burdened, but I thought it might appeal with special force to the gallant old men in Congress who "wore the blue" in the bloody days from 1861 to 1865, when the equally gallant "wearers of the gray" appeal to them to be allowed to use their own money to help the needy of their comrades. Under the act of Congress of February, 1907, every Federal soldier who served ninety days, without regard to physical or financial ability is allowed a pension of from $12 to $20 per month, according to age. No such rule will ever prevail in the case of the Confederate soldier. We can provide only for those who need the help.

The time is rapidly approaching when pensions will no longer be needed for either Federal or Confederate soldiers of the civil war. It will be but a few years until the last one shall have crossed the unseen boundary line which separates time from eternity. I trust that there are few animosities now. On that other shore there will be none. We can well afford to be generous to each other here, and remember that, with the lights before us, we all did what we thought was right. Whatever may be the judgment of future generations as to the rightfulness or wrongfulness of our great conflict, based upon the researches of impartial historians, all will know that the armies of the North and of the South, in four years of fearful conflict, wrote the brightest pages in the martial annals of the world. We fought, some under the Southern Cross, some under the Stars and Stripes, but we were all American soldiers and all contributed to the glory of American arms. Now comes the remnant of the armies of the South and asks, as a matter of simple justice, that the soldiers of the North and their descendants who are in Congress meet us upon the broad plane of comradeship and fair dealing and give us back our own. I believe you will do it; and may the spirit of our heroic dead and of Him who came to bring "peace on earth, good will to men" guide us in our determination. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CRUMPACKER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21260, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, pending that I move that the House do now take a recess until 11.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify Members.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully raise the point of order that the gentleman's suggestion at this time is dilatory.

Mr. PAYNE. On that point of order I want to say this, to explain it to the gentleman from Mississippi (the rest of the House understands), that the point is not dilatory, but facilitates business, because it enables the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring in the Members of the House on this roll call, and we probably will get a quorum. Otherwise——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Regular order!

Mr. PAYNE. I am addressing myself to the point of order. Otherwise we might have a roll call, and at the end of it find we were two or three short of a quorum, and then we would have to call the roll again. I hope I have made it so clear that even the gentleman from Mississippi may have a glimmering idea of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I desire to be heard. I make the point of order that the gentleman is dilatory, because he has no reason to know, nor has he any reason even to expect, that the point of no quorum would be raised by anybody except himself. The House can recess without a quorum, provided the point of order that a quorum is not present is not made.

Mr. PAYNE. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the House could take a recess without a quorum?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Provided the point of order is not made.

Mr. PAYNE. Provided the point of order is not made. Mr. Speaker, I hope that a copy of the rules will be furnished the gentleman from Mississippi and that he will devote some time to a careful and prayerful study of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not yield to the gentleman from New York. I am discussing the point of order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, of course we can not look to the minority all the time to furnish a quorum for the House. We furnish our share of it and a little bit more, as the RECORD will show.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is not speaking to the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In my service in the House, many and many a time a thing has been passed without a quorum when the point of no quorum was not made. I respectfully submit without further argument of the question as to whether or not the suggestion of the gentleman from New York is not fully as dilatory as the suggestion of mine the other day that there was no quorum, after the Members had passed through the tellers and disclosed the fact that there was no quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. I would test the gentleman's good faith if it could be done, but, as the Speaker knows and as every other gentleman except the gentleman from Mississippi knows, if the roll call discloses the fact that no quorum is present, that of itself stops the proceedings of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Chair announces the fact.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The Chair was endeavoring to get the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to state to him that having demanded the yeas and nays, if it should turn out after the roll call that no quorum was present, the Speaker must officially take notice of it, and a point of order is not necessary to be made. The Chair thinks the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the Chair can interpose and take notice of it, and I express my gratification that there is a justification of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair not only can take notice of it, but he must take notice of it. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members, and as many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from New York will, when their names are called, answer "aye," as many as are opposed will answer "no," those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 113, nays 75, answered "present" 14, not voting 185, as follows:

PROTECTION OF SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I wish to submit a report (No. 574) from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Sometime ago the Senate passed a resolution directing the Committee on the District of Columbia to inquire into the condition of the public and private schools in reference to protection against fire, with direction to report by bill or otherwise what action should be taken for the protection of the children of the District in school buildings.

The committee has given the matter consideration and directed inquiries to the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District, the chief of the fire department, and the superintendent of schools, and received replies from them. The committee finds that the chief of the fire department, under the direction of the District authorities, is now making very complete and detailed investigations of every school building in the District. He has investigated so far about half of the buildings and has made reports on them. In accordance with that report, the District Commissioners and the school board made certain recommendations to the Committee on Appropriations during its consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The Committee on the District of Columbia finds that the Committee on Appropriations has considered their recommendations favorably and has reported an item of $261,000 for the specific purpose, as the proposed amendment states, of improving exits, replacing wooden stairways, fireproofing stairways, walls, and floors, replacing old fire ladders with improved fire escapes. Therefore the Committee on the District of Columbia reports this resolution back, together with some letters and documents that have been received from the District authorities, and asks that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that this report might be printed as a Senate document. This is a matter of great importance, and I think it ought to be printed so that we may know what the Committee on the District of Columbia has seen fit to do with reference to this important inquiry. I make that suggestion to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKETT. In accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, who introduced the resolution originally, I will ask that the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia be printed as a document and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RELIEF OF STORM SUFFERERS.

Mr. BACON. There is a joint resolution which has come over from the House, and possibly the Senate might be willing to take it up at this time. It will take but a moment. It is an emergency matter in reference to some relief to the people who have been rendered homeless by the recent cyclone in the South.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have some morning business that I should like to transact.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reports of committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred certain bills granting pensions and increase of pensions, submitted a report (No. 572) accompanied by a bill (S. 6845) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war, and to certain helpless and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was read twice by its title, the bill being a substitute for the following Senate bills heretofore referred to that committee:

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6788) to amend sections 2586 and 2587 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the acts of April 25, 1882, and August 28, 1890, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, which was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5997) for the relief of Paul Butler, reported it without amendment.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3808) to refund certain excess duties paid upon importations of absinthe and kirschwasser from Switzerland between June 1, 1898, and December 5, 1898, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4263) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act amending the act entitled 'An act to authorize the receipt of United States gold coin in exchange for gold bars,'" reported it with an amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5905) for the relief of the executors of the estate of Harold Brown, deceased, reported it without amendment.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 575) thereon.

ASSISTANT TREASURER AT SEATTLE, WASH.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 2932) providing for the appointment of an assistant treasurer of the United States at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington.

Mr. PILES. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 11, after the word "services," to strike out the following words: "And a sufficient amount to pay said salary until the —— day of ——, 19—, is hereby appropriated;" in section 2, page 2, line 16, to strike out the following words: "And a sum sufficient to pay said salaries until the —— day of ——, 19—, is hereby appropriated;" in section 3, line 25, before the words "dollars," to insert "ten thousand," and, in the same line, after the word "annum," to strike out the following words: "And a sufficient sum to pay the rental therefor until the —— day of ——, 19—, is hereby appropriated."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be appointed an assistant treasurer of the United States to be located at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, who shall be appointed in like manner, for like time, and be subject to all the provisions of law to which other assistant treasurers of the United States are subject. Said assistant treasurer shall receive a salary of $4,500 per annum, to be paid quarterly at the Treasury of the United States, which salary shall be in full for all his services.

SEC. 2. That said assistant treasurer, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may appoint, in accordance with existing law, one cashier, who shall also act as vault clerk, at a salary of $2,500 per annum; one paying clerk, at a salary of $2,000 per annum; one receiving teller, at a salary of $1,800 per annum; one clerk, at a salary of $1,600 per annum; one clerk, at a salary of $1,400 per annum; two clerks, at a salary of $1,200 each per annum; one clerk, at a salary of $1,000 per annum; one clerk and stenographer, at a salary of $1,000 per annum; three watchmen, at a salary of $840 each per annum; and one janitor, at a salary of $720 per annum.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall procure at said city of Seattle suitable and convenient rooms, furniture, and fixtures for the use of the assistant treasurer herein authorized, and sufficient and secure fireproof vaults and safes for the keeping of the public moneys collected and deposited with him, at a rental not exceeding $10,000 per annum. The said assistant treasurer shall have the custody and care of said rooms, vaults, and safes, respectively, and all of the public moneys deposited therein, and shall perform all the duties required to be performed by United States assistant treasurers in reference to the receipt, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursements of such moneys.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATES OF REESE B. BRABSON AND WILLIAM CRUTCHFIELD.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Claims reported the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 5658) for the relief of the heirs or the legal representatives of the estate of Reese B. Brabson, deceased, and the bill (S. 5659) for the relief of the estate of William Crutchfield, now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

EXTENSION OF STREET RAILWAY TRACKS TO UNION STATION.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 902) "An act authorizing certain extensions to be made in the lines of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Capital Traction Company, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LANDS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. ANKENY. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby requested to inform the Senate at the earliest date practicable what steps he has taken, or proposes to take, to settle the adverse claims of the State of Washington and the Puyallup tribe of Indians to certain tide lands situated below the meander line established by the public-land surveys along the shores of Commencement Bay, in the State of Washington; and further the nature of a certain contract between the trustees of the Puyallup Indians and Charles Bedford, of Tacoma, Wash., for conducting litigation in behalf of the Puyallup Indians to recover certain lands disposed of by the State of Washington as tide lands, but alleged to belong to said Indians.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. KEAN. I move to strike out "requested" and insert "directed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

SUPPRESSION OF TRUSTS, ETC.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and the same is hereby, discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 100) to suppress pools, trusts, and combinations in trade and to provide penalties for violations of its provisions, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire that the resolution may lie on the table, and I give notice that on Friday, after the morning business, I shall address the Senate on the subject embraced in the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

LANDS OF THE CHOCTAWS AND CHICKASAWS.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read and lie on the table subject to call.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas several thousand persons of Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood and descent have been unlawfully denied allotments of land out of the common lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, situated in the State of Oklahoma, by the Secretary of the Interior and other administrative officers; and

Whereas many of said persons so unlawfully denied their property rights are women and children who have been rendered homeless and destitute thereby; and

Whereas there are now remaining and unallotted approximately 2,982,000 acres of the common lands of said Choctaws and Chickasaws; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior has without authority of law arbitrarily withdrawn from allotment approximately 1,373,000 acres of said unallotted land, and has arbitrarily and in violation of law refused to permit any Choctaw or Chickasaw by blood to select any of said land as his or her allotment; and

Whereas said land was arbitrarily withdrawn from allotment for the purpose of including it in a forest reserve or game preserve, as shown by Senate Report No. 5013, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session; and

Whereas said land belongs exclusively to said Choctaws and Chickasaws, and neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the Government of the United States owns or claims to own said land; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior has requested the Congress of the United States to include in a bill now pending in the Senate a provision authorizing him or other persons to enter into negotiations with representatives of the State of Oklahoma looking to the sale of said 1,373,000 acres of said Choctaw and Chickasaw lands to the State of Oklahoma for inclusion in a State forest reserve or game preserve; and

Whereas should said scheme be consummated it would result in the denial of thousands of persons of Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood of allotments of land and thereby render them homeless and destitute; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior is charged by law with the duty of guarding and protecting the rights of said Choctaws and Chickasaws and has no lawful authority to refuse them allotments of land out of any of the unalloted common lands of said Indians and has no lawful authority to take their lands and include them in forest reserves or game preserves, and thereby render said Indians homeless and destitute: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate without delay:

1. By what authority or pretended authority of law said lands were withdrawn from allotment?

2. Whether said lands have been included in a forest reserve or game preserve; and, if so, by what authority or pretended authority of law?

3. Whether said Secretary or any of his officers, agents, or representatives are endeavoring to sell and dispose of said lands in order that the Indians may be prevented from securing said lands as homes?

4. Whether said lands are owned by said Indians exclusively, or whether the Government of the United States has or claims to have any interest therein?

5. Whether said Secretary intends to continue to prevent said Indians from selecting said lands as their allotments and homes?

6. Whether under existing law said Secretary has authority to sell and dispose of all unallotted common lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws as soon as allotments have been made to all persons entitled to allotment?

7. Whether said Secretary proposes or intends to sell and dispose of all unallotted lands of said Choctaws and Chickasaws as soon as allotments have been made to all persons whose names appear on the rolls of citizens and freedmen of said nations, as approved by him, and to distribute the proceeds derived therefrom among said persons so enrolled to the exclusion of the blood citizens who have been unlawfully denied enrollment?

8. Whether the act approved June 28, 1898, under which said rolls were made, directed said Secretary to enroll as Indians, or citizens of the Choctaw or Chickasaw nations, or tribes, all persons of Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood who were bona fide citizens of said nations on the day said act was approved, regardless of any assertion of right to such enrollment by said persons?

9. Whether the names of all persons of Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood appear on the rolls of said Indians as approved by him, and whether said rolls so approved are being used as a basis for the distribution of all the common property of said Choctaws and Chickasaws?

10. Whether said Secretary proposes or intends to deprive all persons of their distributive share of said common property who are of Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood, and who have been unlawfully denied enrollment as citizens or Indians of said tribe, and thereby denied allotments of land as such through the negligence, mistake, or fraud committed by administrative officers charged by law with the duty of making said rolls?

11. Why said Secretary has not reported the true facts to Congress with reference to the rights of those persons who have been unlawfully denied enrollment as blood citizens of said tribes, in order that Congress might provide for the correct enrollment of said blood citizens?

12. Whether persons who are practically full-blood Indians or who are possessed of Indian blood and as much entitled under the law to allotments of 320 acres of the average allottable lands have been enrolled as freedmen or negroes, and as such are entitled to only 40 acres of the average allottable lands of said tribes; and, whether said Secretary has transmitted to Congress proposed bills and recommended the enactment of same into law, which declare the enrollment records showing the enrollment of said Indians as freedmen or negroes final and conclusive as to their blood, and has thereby attempted to induce Congress to enact legislation designated for the purpose of legalizing said unlawful enrollments, and why he did not inform Congress of the real object sought to be accomplished by said proposed bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the Secretary read the printed document that is also filed with the resolution as a part of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read the accompanying statement, being the concluding paragraphs of the report submitted by Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, January 16, 1907, from the Select Committee to Investigate Matters Connected with Affairs in the Indian Territory, as follows:

WITHDRAWAL OF LANDS FROM ALLOTMENT.

Many earnest and insistent protests have been received against the withdrawal from allotment by the Secretary of the Interior of a large body of land in the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Cherokee nations. The original withdrawal was of about 4,000,000 acres and also suspended further action as to perfecting complete individual title to all allotments already made within the area withdrawn. This was subsequently modified by rescinding the order as to allotments already made and by cutting down the area about one-half.

The committee has carefully considered this matter and is of the opinion that the order of withdrawal was without authority of law. The agreement with the tribes and the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, authorized and directed the allotments to be made as soon as practicable, and that law, the committee believes, can not be set aside, impeded, or modified except by act of Congress repealing or changing the original statute.

The Secretary of the Interior advised your committee that he had made this order of withdrawal upon the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, who contemplated establishing a forest reservation therein if Congress should authorize the purchase by the Government of the land from the Indians for that purpose; but the committee is of opinion that, whatever may have been the purpose or object of the Secretary of the Interior, he had no authority under the law to make the order of withdrawal.

The investigation made by the committee has satisfied it that the general situation in the Indian Territory, so far as concerns the relationship between the Government of the United States and the several Indian tribes and the individual members thereof is such as to demand as speedy action by Congress as may be consistent with the magnitude and multitude of the interests involved.

In view of this fact the committee submits this partial report, and at an early day, if permitted by the Senate, will submit to the Senate its conclusions upon other matters herein referred to, which have been subjects of its inquiries.

Respectfully submitted.

W. A. CLARK.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the resolution may lie on the table subject to his call. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BUILDINGS AND STRUCTURAL MATERIAL AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. PERKINS. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That if not inconsistent with the good of the public service, the Secretary of the Interior be requested to transmit to the Senate for its information a statement of the results of the Department's investigations into the effects of earthquake and fire at San Francisco upon buildings and structural materials.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BACON. I have no objection to its consideration, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from California to the fact that the phraseology of the resolution is not in accord with that which is usually adopted in seeking information from the Departments. The Departments are simply by the Senate directed to furnish such information as the Senate desires.

Mr. PERKINS. I am willing to change the phraseology from the word "requested" to the word "directed."

Mr. BACON. It is not simply the word "requested," but the Senator now predicates the direction upon the contingency that it is not incompatible with the public interest, which is not usual except when a request is addressed to the President.

In the case of the President it is always a request and always predicated upon the contingency that it is not inconsistent with the good of the public service.

Mr. PERKINS. I will accept the suggestion of my friend from Georgia, and strike out the words "not inconsistent with the good of the public service;" also striking out the word "requested" and inserting the word "directed."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

SPECIAL MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The special message from the President of the United States, which the Chair laid before the Senate yesterday evening just prior to the adjournment and which, owing to the lateness of the hour, was not read, will now be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the special message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In my message to the Congress of March 25, 1908, I outlined certain measures which I believe the majority of our countrymen desire to have enacted into law at this time. These measures do not represent by any means all that I would like to see done if I thought it possible, but they do represent what I believe can now be done if an earnest effort toward this end is made.

Since I wrote this message an employers' liability law has been enacted which, it is true, comes short of what ought to have been done, but which does represent a real advance. Apparently there is good ground to hope that there will be further legislation providing for recompensing all employees who suffer injury while engaged in the public service; that there will be a child-labor law enacted for the District of Columbia; that the Waterways Commission will be continued with sufficient financial support to increase the effectiveness of its preparatory work; that steps will be taken to provide for such investigation into tariff conditions, by the appropriate committee of the House of Representatives and by Government experts in the Executive service, as will secure the full information necessary for immediate action in revising the tariff at the hands of the Congress elected next fall; and finally, that financial legislation will be enacted providing for temporary measures for meeting any trouble that may arise in the next year or two, and for a commission of experts who shall thoroughly investigate the whole matter, both here and in the great commercial countries abroad, so as to be able to recommend legislation which will put our financial system on an efficient and permanent basis. It is much to be wished that one feature of the financial legislation of this session should be the establishment of postal savings banks. Ample appropriation should be made to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the very important feature of the Hepburn law which gives to the Commission supervision and control over the accounting systems of the railways. Failure to provide means which will enable the Commission to examine the books of the railways would amount to an attack on the law at its most vital point, and would benefit, as nothing else could benefit, those railways which are corruptly or incompetently managed. Forest reserves should be established throughout the Appalachian Mountain region wherever it can be shown that they will have a direct and real connection with the conservation and improvement of navigable rivers.

There seems, however, much doubt about two of the measures I have recommended; the measure to do away with abuse of the power of injunction and the measure or group of measures to strengthen and render both more efficient and more wise the control by the National Government over the great corporations doing an interstate business.

First, as to the power of injunction and of punishment for contempt. In contempt cases, save where immediate action is imperative, the trial should be before another judge. As regards injunctions, some such legislation as that I have previously recommended should be enacted. They are blind who fail to realize the extreme bitterness caused among large bodies of worthy citizens by the use that has been repeatedly made of the power of injunction in labor disputes. Those in whose judgment we have most right to trust are of the opinion that while much of the complaint against the use of the injunction is unwarranted, yet that it is unquestionably true that in a number of cases this power has been used to the grave injury of the rights of laboring men. I ask that it be limited in some such way as that I have already pointed out in my previous messages, for the very reason that I do not wish to see an embittered effort made to destroy it. It is unwise stubbornly to refuse to provide against a repetition of the abuses which have caused the present unrest. In a democracy like ours it is idle to expect permanently to thwart the determination of the great body of our citizens. It may be and often is the highest duty of a court, a legislature, or an executive, to resist and defy a gust of popular passion; and most certainly no public servant, whatever may be the consequences to himself, should yield to what he thinks wrong. But in a question which is emphatically one of public policy, the policy which the public demands is sure in the end to be adopted; and a persistent refusal to grant to a large portion of our people what is right is only too apt in the end to result in causing such irritation that when the right is obtained it is obtained in the course of a movement so ill considered and violent as to be accompanied by much that is wrong. The process of injunction in labor disputes, as well as where State laws are involved, should be used sparingly, and only when there is the clearest necessity for it; but it is one so necessary to the efficient performance of duty by the court on behalf of the nation that it is in the highest degree to be regretted that it should be liable to reckless use; for this reckless use tends to make honest men desire so to hamper its execution as to destroy its usefulness.

Every farsighted patriot should protest first of all against the growth in this country of that evil thing which is called "class consciousness." The demagogue, the sinister or foolish socialist visionary who strives to arouse this feeling of class consciousness in our working people, does a foul and evil thing; for he is no true American, he is no self-respecting citizen of this Republic, he forfeits his right to stand with manly self-reliance on a footing of entire equality with all other citizens, who bows to envy and greed, who erects the doctrine of class hatred into a shibboleth, who substitutes loyalty to men of a particular status, whether rich or poor, for loyalty to those eternal and immutable principles of righteousness which bid us treat each man on his worth as a man without regard to his wealth or his poverty. But evil though the influence of these demagogues and visionaries is, it is no worse in its consequences than the influence exercised by the man of great wealth or the man of power and position in the industrial world, who by his lack of sympathy with, and lack of understanding of, still more by any exhibition of uncompromising hostility to, the millions of our working people, tends to unite them against their fellow-Americans who are better off in this world's goods. It is a bad thing to teach our working people that men of means, that men who have the largest proportion of the substantial comforts of life, are necessarily greedy, grasping, and cold-hearted, and that they unjustly demand and appropriate more than their share of the substance of the many. Stern condemnation should be visited upon demagogue and visionary who teach this untruth, and even sterner upon those capitalists who are in truth grasping and greedy and brutally disregardful of the rights of others, and who by their actions teach the dreadful lesson far more effectively than any mere preacher of unrest. A "class grievance" left too long without remedy breeds "class consciousness" and therefore class resentment.

The strengthening of the antitrust law is demanded upon both moral and economic grounds. Our purpose in strengthening it is to secure more effective control by the National Government over the business use of the vast masses of individual, and especially of corporate, wealth, which at the present time monopolize most of the interstate business of the country; and we believe the control can best be exercised by preventing the growth of abuses, rather than merely by trying to destroy them when they have already grown. In the highest sense of the word this movement for thorough control of the business use of this great wealth is conservative. We are trying to steer a safe middle course, which alone can save us from a plutocratic class government on the one hand, or a socialistic class government on the other, either of which would be fraught with disaster to our free institutions, State and National. We are trying to avoid alike the evils which would flow from Government ownership of the public utilities by which interstate commerce is chiefly carried on, and the evils which flow from the riot and chaos of unrestricted individualism. There is grave danger to our free institutions in the corrupting influence exercised by great wealth suddenly concentrated in the hands of the few. We should in sane manner try to remedy this danger, in spite of the sullen opposition of these few very powerful men, and with the full purpose to protect them in all their rights at the very time that we require them to deal rightfully with others.

When with steam and electricity modern business conditions went through the astounding revolution which in this country began over half a century ago, there was at first much hesitation as to what particular governmental agency should be used to grapple with the new conditions. At almost the same time, about twenty years since, the effort was made to control combinations by regulating them through the Interstate Commerce Commission and to abolish them by means of the antitrust act, the two remedies therefore being in part mutually incompatible. The interstate-commerce law has produced admirable results, especially since it was strengthened by the Hepburn law two years ago. The antitrust law, though it worked some good, because anything is better than anarchy and complete absence of regulation, nevertheless has proved in many respects not merely inadequate but mischievous. Twenty years ago the misuse of corporate power had produced almost every conceivable form of abuse and had worked the gravest injury to business morality and the public conscience. For a long time Federal regulation of interstate commerce had been purely negative, the National judiciary merely acting in isolated cases to restrain the State from exercising a power which it was clearly unconstitutional as well as unwise for them to exercise, but which nevertheless the National Government itself failed to exercise. Thus the corporations monopolizing commerce made the law for themselves, State power and common law being inadequate to accomplish any effective regulation, and the national power not yet having been put forth. The result was mischievous in the extreme, and only shortsighted and utter failure to appreciate the grossness of the evils to which the lack of regulation gave rise, can excuse the well-meaning persons who now desire to abolish the antitrust law outright or to amend it by simply condemning "unreasonable" combinations.

Power should unquestionably be lodged somewhere in the Executive branch of the Government to permit combinations which will further the public interest; but it must always be remembered that, as regards the great and wealthy combinations through which most of the interstate business of to-day is done, the burden of proof should be on them to show that they have a right to exist. No judicial tribunal has the knowledge or the experience to determine in the first place whether a given combination is advisable or necessary in the interest of the public. Some body, whether a commission, or a bureau under the Department of Commerce and Labor, should be given this power. My personal belief is that ultimately we shall have to adopt a National incorporation law, though I am well aware that this may be impossible at present. Over the actions of the Executive body in which the power is placed the courts should possess merely a power of review analogous to that obtaining in connection with the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission at present. To confer this power would not be a leap in the dark; it would merely be to carry still further the theory of effective Governmental control of corporations which was responsible for the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and for the enlargement of its powers, and for the creation of the Bureau of Corporations. The interstate commerce legislation has worked admirably. It has benefited the public; it has benefited honestly managed and wisely conducted railroads; and in spite of the fact that the business of the country has enormously increased, the value of this Federal legislation has been shown by the way in which it has enabled the Federal Government to correct the most pronounced of the great and varied abuses which existed in the business world twenty years ago—while the many abuses that still remain emphasize the need of further and more thoroughgoing legislation. Similarly, the Bureau of Corporations has amply justified its creation. In other words, it is clear that the principles employed to remedy the great evils in the business world have worked well, and they can now be employed to correct the evils that further commercial growth has brought more prominently to the surface. The powers and scope of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and of any similar body, such as the Bureau of Corporations, which has to deal with the matter in hand, should be greatly enlarged so as to meet the requirements of the present day.

The decisions of the Supreme Court in the Minnesota and North Carolina cases illustrate how impossible is a dual control of National commerce. The States can not control it. All they can do is to control intrastate commerce, and this now forms but a small fraction of the commerce carried by the railroads through each State. Actual experience has shown that the effort at State control is sure to be nullified in one way or another sooner or later. The Nation alone can act with effectiveness and wisdom; it should have the control both of the business and of the agent by which the business is done, for any attempt to separate this control must result in grotesque absurdity. This means that we must rely upon National legislation to prevent the commercial abuses that now exist and the others that are sure to arise unless some efficient Governmental body has adequate power of control over them. At present the failure of the Congress to utilize and exercise the great powers conferred upon it as regards interstate commerce leaves this commerce to be regulated, not by the State nor yet by the Congress, but by the occasional and necessarily inadequate and one-sided action of the Federal judiciary. However upright and able a court is, it can not act constructively; it can only act negatively or destructively, as an agency of government; and this means that the courts are and must always be unable to deal effectively with a problem like the present, which requires constructive action. A court can decide what is faulty, but it has no power to make better what it thus finds to be faulty. There should be an efficient Executive body created with power enough to correct abuses and scope enough to work out the complex problems that this great country has developed. It is not sufficient objection to say that such a body may be guilty of unwisdom or of abuses. Any Governmental body, whether a court or a commission, whether executive, legislative or judicial, if given power enough to enable it to do effective work for good, must also inevitably receive enough power to make it possibly effective for evil.

Therefore, it is clear that (unless a National incorporation law can be forthwith enacted) some body or bodies in the Executive service should be given power to pass upon any combination or agreement in relation to interstate commerce, and every such combination or agreement not thus approved should be treated as in violation of law and prosecuted accordingly. The issuance of the securities of any combination doing interstate business should be under the supervision of the National Government.

A strong effort has been made to have labor organizations completely exempted from any of the operations of this law, whether or not their acts are in restraint of trade. Such exception would in all probability make the bill unconstitutional, and the Legislature has no more right to pass a bill without regard to whether it is constitutional than the courts have lightly to declare unconstitutional a law which the Legislature has solemnly enacted. The responsibility is as great on the one side as on the other, and an abuse of power by the Legislature in one direction is equally to be condemned with an abuse of power by the courts in the other direction. It is not possible wholly to except labor organizations from the workings of this law, and they who insist upon totally excepting them are merely providing that their status shall be kept wholly unchanged, and that they shall continue to be exposed to the action which they now dread. Obviously, an organization not formed for profit should not be required to furnish statistics in any way as complete as those furnished by organizations for profit. Moreover, so far as labor is engaged in production only, its claims to be exempted from the antitrust law are sound. This would substantially cover the right of laborers to combine, to strike peaceably, and to enter into trade agreements with the employers. But when labor undertakes in a wrongful manner to prevent the distribution and sale of the products of labor, as by certain forms of the boycott, it has left the field of production, and its action may plainly be in restraint of interstate trade, and must necessarily be subject to inquiry, exactly as in the case of any other combination for the same purpose, so as to determine whether such action is contrary to sound public policy. The heartiest encouragement should be given to the wageworkers to form labor unions and to enter into agreements with their employers; and their right to strike, so long as they act peaceably, must be preserved. But we should sanction neither a boycott nor a blacklist which would be illegal at common law.

The measures I advocate are in the interest both of decent corporations and of law-abiding labor unions. They are, moreover, preeminently in the interest of the public, for in my judgment the American people have definitely made up their minds that the days of the reign of the great law-defying and law-evading corporations are over, and that from this time on the mighty organizations of capital necessary for the transaction of business under modern conditions, while encouraged so long as they act honestly and in the interest of the general public, are to be subjected to careful supervision and regulation of a kind so effective as to insure their acting in the interest of the people as a whole.

Allegations are often made to the effect that there is no real need for these laws looking to the more effective control of the great corporations, upon the ground that they will do their work well without such control. I call your attention to the accompanying copy of a report just submitted by Mr. Nathan Matthews, chairman of the finance commission, to the mayor and city council of Boston, relating to certain evil practices of various corporations which have been bidders for furnishing to the city iron and steel. This report shows that there have been extensive combinations formed among the various corporations which have business with the city of Boston, including, for instance, a carefully planned combination embracing practically all the firms and corporations engaged in structural steel work in New England. This combination included substantially all the local concerns, and many of the largest corporations in the United States, engaged in manufacturing or furnishing structural steel for use in any part of New England; it affected the States, the cities and towns, the railroads and street railways, and generally all persons having occasion to use iron or steel for any purpose in that section of the country. As regards the city of Boston, the combination resulted in parceling out the work by collusive bids, plainly dishonest, and supported by false affirmations. In its conclusion, the commission recommends as follows:

Comment on the moral meaning of these methods and transactions would seem superfluous, but as they were defended at the public hearings of the Commission and asserted to be common and entirely proper incidents of business life, and as these practices have been freely resorted to by some of the largest industrial corporations that the world has ever known, the Commission deems it proper to record its own opinion.

The Commission dislikes to believe that these practices are, as alleged, established by the general custom of the business community; and this defense itself, if unchallenged, amounts to a grave accusation against the honesty of present business methods.

To answer an invitation for public or private work by sending in what purports to be genuine bids, but what in reality are collusive figures purposely made higher than the bid which is known will be submitted by one of the supposed competitors, is an act of plain dishonesty.

To support these misrepresentations by false affirmations in writing that the bids are submitted in good faith and without fraud, collusion, or connection with any other bidder is a positive and deliberate fraud; the successful bidder in the competition is guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses, and the others have made themselves parties to a conspiracy clearly unlawful at the common law.

Where, as in the case of the "Boston Agreement," a number of the most important manufacturers and dealers in structural steel in this country, including the American Bridge Company, one of the constituent members of the United States Steel Corporation, have combined together for the purpose of raising prices by means of collusive bids and false representations, their conduct is not only repugnant to common honesty, but is plainly obnoxious to the Federal statute known as the Sherman or antitrust law.

The Commission believes that an example should be made of these men, and that the members of the "Boston Agreement," or at least all those who in October and November, 1905, entered in the fraudulent competitions for the Cove street draw span and the Brookline street bridge should be brought before a Federal grand jury for violation of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890. The three years' limitation for participation in these transactions has not yet elapsed, and the evidence obtained by the Commission is so complete that there should be no difficulty in the Government's securing a conviction in this case.

I have submitted this report to the Department of Justice for thorough investigation and for action if action shall prove practicable.

Surely such a state of affairs as that above set forth emphasizes the need of further Federal legislation, not merely because of the material benefits such legislation will secure, but above all because this Federal action should be part, and a large part, of the campaign to waken our people as a whole to a lively and effective condemnation of the low standard of morality implied in such conduct on the part of great business concerns. The first duty of every man is to provide a livelihood for himself and for those dependent upon him; it is from every standpoint desirable that each of our citizens should endeavor by hard work and honorable methods to secure for him and his such a competence as will carry with it the opportunity to enjoy in reasonable fashion the comforts and refinements of life; and, furthermore, the man of great business ability who obtains a fortune in upright fashion inevitably in so doing confers a benefit upon the community as a whole and is entitled to reward, to respect, and to admiration. But among the many kinds of evil, social, industrial, and political, which it is our duty as a nation sternly to combat, there is none at the same time more base and more dangerous than the greed which treats the plain and simple rules of honesty with cynical contempt if they interfere with making a profit; and as a nation we can not be held guiltless if we condone such action. The man who preaches hatred of wealth honestly acquired, who inculcates envy and jealousy and slanderous ill will toward those of his fellows who by thrift, energy, and industry have become men of means, is a menace to the community. But his counterpart in evil is to be found in that particular kind of multimillionaire who is almost the least enviable, and is certainly one of the least admirable, of all our citizens; a man of whom it has been well said that his face has grown hard and cruel while his body has grown soft; whose son is a fool and his daughter a foreign princess; whose nominal pleasures are at best those of a tasteless and extravagant luxury, and whose real delight, whose real life work, is the accumulation and use of power in its most sordid and least elevating form. In the chaos of an absolutely unrestricted commercial individualism under modern conditions, this is a type that becomes prominent as inevitably as the marauder baron became prominent in the physical chaos of the dark ages. We are striving for legislation to minimize the abuses which give this type its flourishing prominence, partly for the sake of what can be accomplished by the legislation itself, and partly because the legislation marks our participation in a great and stern moral movement to bring our ideals and our conduct into measurable accord.

APPENDIX.

Communication to the mayor and city council relating to the practice of certain bidders for furnishing structural iron and steel and for iron and steel work upon boilers, bridges, and buildings.

BOSTON, April 17, 1908.

To the Honorable the Mayor and City Council.

GENTLEMEN: The finance commission has already called attention to certain administrative practices under which, by connivance between favored contractors and the city authorities, the advantages of competition were lost, contracts were given out by political favor instead of to the lowest bidder, and the city sustained serious financial loss.

Contracts of this sort, relating to coal, clay goods, and various forms of concrete construction, were referred to in the report of November 21, 1907; for North River flagging in the report of December 6, 1907; for sewer construction in the report of January 23, 1908; for crushing stone in the report of March 2, 1908; for cement in the report of March 4, 1908; for oil, drainpipe, and paving blocks in the report of March 9, 1908, and for the cleaning of catch-basins in the report of March 28, 1908. Similar practices in the purchase of coal were disclosed at the public hearings held by the Commission in September and October, 1907.

In its report of January 28, 1908, the Commission noted the apparent existence of a combination between the manufacturers of the rubber tires used by the Fire Department.

The Commission now desires to direct attention to instances of collusion between ostensible competitors for iron and steel work, by means of which, and by false representations, the city has been induced to award contracts at excessive prices.

The methods discussed in this report will be considered under three heads, namely, combinations among boiler makers, combinations among contractors for fireproofing, and combinations between corporations and firms engaged in the manufacture or supply of structural steel.

(1) COMBINATIONS IN BOILER REPAIR WORK.

The boilers in the various city schools are examined yearly by an inspection and insurance company to ascertain their condition, and upon reports of this company arrangements are made for the renewal or repair of the boilers as required.

For some years it has been the practice of the Schoolhouse Commission to invite bids from selected firms and corporations for this class of work. The department has been in the habit of confining the selection of contractors to those doing business in this city, and the concerns receiving such invitations during the past few years have been the Atlantic Works, the James Russell Boiler Works Company, the Cunningham Iron Company, and the Hodge Boiler Works.

The subsequent proceedings were generally as follows:

Some one familiar with the operations of the Schoolhouse Department would furnish each person invited to bid the names of the other persons to whom invitations had been extended. The concerns selected would then arrange between themselves as to who should do the work, as to the price to be fixed, and as to the division of the profits. Bids, ostensibly independent and competitive, were then submitted; and the department, being misled by this appearance of genuine competition, awarded the contract to the concern which the bidders had agreed should get the work. Upon completion of the work the excessive profit rendered possible by this collusive competition would be divided among the parties to the fraud.

In the summer of 1904 contracts were made with the James Russell Boiler Works Company for the repair of boilers in the Albert Palmer, Roxbury High, Winchell, Mary Hemmenway, and Aberdeen schools. Besides this concern, the Hodge Company, the Cunningham Company and the Atlantic Works had been invited to submit bids. The aggregate amount paid by the city on these contracts was about $2,600, and of this the treasurer of the company stated that about $1,400 was profit. Out of this sum the company paid $300 to the Hodge Boiler Works, $200 to the Cunningham Iron Company, and $300 to the Atlantic Works for having submitted to the city prearranged bids higher than those submitted by the James Russell Boiler Works Company.

The $800 appears on the books of the James Russell Boiler Works Company, and is offset by a false entry of "merchandise" to balance the account. The $300 paid the Atlantic Works was not entered upon the company's commercial books. The $300 paid the Hodge Boiler Works was entered on its books, according to the treasurer's statement, as "cash received," but the Commission could not find the entry. The $200 paid the Cunningham Iron Company was entered "account schoolhouses."

In August, 1906, a contract was awarded to the James Russell Boiler Works Company for repairing boilers in the Agassiz, Harry Vane, Blackinton, Hyde, Lawrence, Myles Standish, Norcross, Roger Clap, Robert G. Shaw, West Roxbury High, and Wyman schools. The price was $1,904. The other concerns who had been invited to bid by the Schoolhouse Commission were the Cunningham Company and the Hodge Company. The gross profits on this job were about $740, and the James Russell Boiler Works Company paid the Hodge Company and the Cunningham Company $150 apiece for having submitted higher bids, according to agreement.

The treasurer of the Atlantic Works testified before the Commission that he bid on the 1904 jobs for the purpose "of helping out our competitors by bidding above them," and that the bids were talked over beforehand and the amounts of the same arranged between the bidders. He justified this and similar transactions as a part of the company's regular business methods, and said that in his opinion it was "an entirely proper transaction." The superintendent of the Atlantic Works testified that his company often put in bids not intended to secure the work.

The treasurer of the James Russell Boiler Works Company testified that his concern had done much business with the city, that on several occasions he had paid money to competitors for putting in apparently genuine bids which, by preconcerted agreement, were higher than his, and that his company had paid out a part of its profits for this accommodation. He admitted, also, that he had destroyed the books of the company which would disclose these transactions.

The treasurer of the Hodge Boiler Works testified that he knew who the other bidders were to be, having probably found out from some one in the schoolhouse department.

The manager of the Cunningham Iron Company admitted that the $200 received in 1904 was for "bidding up" on the work at the request of the James Russell Boiler Works Company.

(2) COMBINATIONS OF FIRE PROOFING CONCERNS.

The two concerns whose transactions with the city have been investigated are the Eastern Expanded Metal Company and the Roebling Construction Company, corporations doing an extensive business in this city.

These companies combined for the purpose of parceling out the work. Contract for contract was generally conceded, although in some cases money was paid as the price of abstaining from competition. This resulted in high prices to the customer, and exactions were thus obtained from all sorts and conditions of men and corporations. Even charities secured no exemption, and the prices obtained from a hospital, a home for crippled children, and the city of Boston were united in one check, which represented the price of collusion on these jobs. The two companies arranged to parcel out the work on many schoolhouses, the Roebling Company taking some, while the Eastern Expanded Metal Company secured the rest. Both concerns, however, by keeping up the appearance of an active and real competition with the attendant circumstances of figuring and bidding, gave the city officials to understand that there was no collusion.

The methods adopted are illustrated by the case of the Emerson School in East Boston, for the erection of which bids were invited in January, 1903. The fire-proofing was figured by the Eastern Expanded Metal Company at $5,375. To this sum $500 was added for the Roebling Company, and a bid submitted to the city of $5,875. The Roebling Company agreed to bid $5,986, and did so. The work was then awarded by the general contractor to the concern which was apparently the lowest bidder, the Eastern Expanded Metal Company, for $5,875; this sum was paid by the city to the general contractor and by him to the Eastern Expanded Metal Company, and at the conclusion of the work this company paid the Roebling Construction Company the $500 agreed on.

(3) COMBINATIONS IN THE STRUCTURAL STEEL TRADE.

About the year 1900 a carefully planned combination was created embracing practically all the firms and corporations engaged in structural steel work in New England. These concerns had previously been linked together in an association called the "New England Iron League," ostensibly maintained for the purpose of mutual protection against labor troubles, hostile legislation, and "unscrupulous contractors." Members of the league who entered into the combination in regard to contracts and bids, hereinafter referred to, called it the "Boston Agreement," or the "Reporting Agreement;" but the testimony of certain persons and certain letters indicates that the "League" and the "Agreement" were interchangeable designations.

The purposes and methods of this combination were as follows:

A central office was established and placed in charge of an officer called the commissioner, to whom the members of the combination reported as to work which they intended to figure on or desired to secure. The commissioner kept a record of these reports and notified each concern so reporting what other members of the agreement were figuring on the job. Meetings of the members interested in this particular work were then arranged, at which it would be determined whether an arrangement for collusive bidding should be entered into. If this was decided on, an agreement was made as to who should get the job, as to the price at which it should be taken, and as to the consideration which was to be received by the others.

In order to preserve the appearance of competition and to insure the success of the scheme, the parties to the agreement would arrange the bids to be submitted in a progressive scale above the prearranged bid of the concern to which the work had been allotted. The consideration to be paid by the selected bidder to the other parties to the combination was sometimes a cash payment, but more frequently an understanding that the service rendered by these "complimentary" bids should be returned when other work was to be figured.

In further maintenance of the appearance of competition, and that no suspicion of collusion should arise in the mind of the party asking for bids, the members of the agreement did not hesitate to fortify their bids by false statements in writing that they were made in good faith, without fraud, collusion, or connection with any other bidder.

The machinery of the Boston agreement was carried out in considerable detail. Cards were printed on which the members reported to the commissioner, and the commissioner then recorded on them the persons figuring each piece of work. Stamps were used to mark as "Important" those matters in which any member was particularly interested. A code was established to conceal the identity of the members of the combination, who were designated at one time by the names of various countries and at other times by numbers. The scheme was complete in every particular except that of perpetuating evidence of the meetings at which particular combinations respecting individual work were entered into.

Beyond establishing the existence and general purposes of this combination, the inquiry of the Commission was limited to the particular transactions directly or indirectly affecting the pecuniary interest of the city of Boston. It was shown, however, that the combination was of the most widespread character, that it included substantially all the local concerns and many of the largest corporations in the United States engaged in manufacturing or furnishing structural steel for use in any part of New England, and that it affected the Commonwealth, the cities and towns, the railroads and street railways, the owners of first-class buildings, and generally all persons having occasion to use iron or steel for any purpose in this section of the country.

The ostensible purpose of the Boston Agreement, as stated by the secretary of the New England Structural Company and the president of the Boston Bridge Works, two of its members, was to collect and distribute mutual information respecting the work the members were bidding on; but, as admitted by the witnesses, its real and ultimate objects were to regulate competition and to raise prices. Most of the members of the agreement were engaged in interstate commerce, and many of the particular combinations effected were clearly within the narrowest definition of commerce between the States as that phrase is used in the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890.

The meetings of the prospective bidders brought about through the machinery of the Boston Agreement were not always successful. As explained by the president of the Boston Bridge Works, the effort to get together and to secure for one of the members a "concession" of the work in question sometimes failed; but "in many cases" an agreement was reached whereby work was "conceded" to one of them, the others agreeing to bid over him. He added that such an agreement was "always made if possible."

It would be impossible to estimate the cost to the city and other users of structural steel through the operations of the Boston Agreement, because the consideration generally paid for an award of a contract by the bidders to one of their number was the return of the same favor on other occasions. No passage of money was necessary, as the complimentary bidders were in due course to have their turn for doing work on their own terms. Some indication, however, of the loss to the consumer may be deduced from some of the transactions with the city of Boston noted below.

So far as the city is concerned, it apeared that the operations of the Boston Agreement included the tidewater and railroad bridges built by the city itself, the bridges built by the various railroads in this city for the abolition of grade crossings, the work of the Transit Commission, the work of the Charles River Basin Commission, and the structures of the Boston Elevated Railway Company, in the cost of which the city has, under Statute 1897, chapter 500, section 10, a pecuniary interest.

The following instances, showing the detail methods of the combination known as the Boston Agreement, are confined to work done directly for the city of Boston.

The Bennington Street Bridge.—In the case of this bridge, advertised in November, 1901, the Boston Bridge Works paid various sums aggregating $900 to five possible competitors in return for an agreement on their part either to submit higher bids or to abstain from bidding.

The Broadway Bridge.—In September, 1902, bids were invited for the construction of this bridge. The two leading competitors were the Boston Bridge Works and the New England Structural Company. The contract was awarded to the former as the lowest bidder, for $112,874. An arrangement, however, had been made between these two bidders for putting in a bid on behalf of the New England Structural Company at the higher figure of $116,450, in return for which this company was to receive $5,000. This arrangement was carried out, and in due course $5,000 was remitted by the Boston Bridge Works to the New England Structural Company as the price of this concession.

The Cove Street or Atlantic Avenue Bridge.—Bids for the superstructure of this bridge were advertised for by the city in June, 1903. For various reasons it was at this time very difficult to estimate on this work, and the bids were all rejected. In October, 1904, the work was again advertised, and awarded to the Pennsylvania Steel Company, the lowest bidder. This was apparently a case of straight competition. In October, 1905, the city engineer advertised the draw span of this bridge, and the Pennsylvania Steel Company, representing to its competitors that it had lost money on its contract for the superstructure, persuaded the members of the combination to let it have this contract to enable it to recoup the loss sustained under the other contract. Concerted bids, so arranged as to make the $56,600 bid by the Pennsylvania Steel Company the lowest bid, and all containing the false statement that there was no fraud, collusion, or connection with any other person bidding for the work, were submitted to the city. According to the testimony of one of the bidders, the corporations making these collusive bids and false representations were the Boston Bridge Works, the King Bridge Company, the New Jersey Bridge Company, the Eastern Bridge and Structural Company, the Canton Bridge Company, the American Bridge Company, the Groton Bridge Company, and the Pennsylvania Steel Company. Those bids were all rejected as excessive, and the draw span was again advertised in January, 1906. Discouraged by the former failure, everyone seems to have bid this time in real competition, the lowest bid being that of the New Jersey Bridge Company, which was awarded the contract for $37,788. The president of the Boston Bridge Works, one of the bidders, admitted that there was no change in the steel market between October, 1905, and January, 1906.

In this instance, therefore, the result of the combination was to raise the bid for the contract by $18,812, or about 50 per cent of the final contract price.

The Brookline Street Bridge.—Bids were invited for the construction of this bridge in November, 1905. The members of the combination believed that they had perfected an arrangement by which the work should go to the New England Structural Company, but through some oversight or misunderstanding the firm of H. P. Converse & Co. made a lower bid. As a result this concern was the lowest bidder and obtained the contract for $15,400, about 5 per cent less than the bid of the New England Structural Company.

There was evidence from two members of the combination that all the bids except that of H. P. Converse were prearranged and collusive. Yet these eleven other bidders, namely, the New England Structural Company, the Pennsylvania Steel Company, the Boston Bridge Works, Frederick W. Sage, for the Belmont Iron Works, the Eastern Bridge and Structural Company, the Berlin Construction Company, the American Bridge Company, the Canton Bridge Company, the New Jersey Bridge Company, the Groton Bridge Company, and the Owego Bridge Company, not only submitted bids as if they were independent and competing bidders, but signed statements that their bids were made in good faith, without fraud, collusion, or competition with any other persons bidding for the same work.

In this instance the failure of the combination to arrange matters with all the bidders saved the city about 5 per cent of what would otherwise have been the cost of the work.

The membership of the Boston Agreement included the following firms and corporations:

American Bridge Company.
The Phœnix Bridge Company.
Brown-Ketcham Iron Works.
Berlin Construction Company.
The Boston Bridge Works (Incorporated).
Chelmsford Foundry Company.
The Canton Bridge Company.
G. W. & F. Smith Iron Company.
New England Structural Company.
Boston Steel and Iron Company.
Eastern Bridge and Structural Company.
Maguier & Jones Company.
United Construction Company.
Springfield Construction Company.
New England Bolt and Nut Company.
J. T. Croft & Co.
Smith & Lovett Company.
L. M. Ham & Co.
Fletcher & Crowell Company.
H. P. Converse & Co.
Milliken Brothers.
Levering & Garrigues Company.
James H. Tower.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS.

Comment on the moral meaning of these methods and transactions would seem superfluous; but as they were defended at the public hearings of the Commission and asserted to be common and entirely proper incidents of business life, and as these practices have been freely resorted to by some of the largest industrial corporations that the world has ever known, the Commission deems it proper to record its own opinion.

The Commission dislikes to believe that these practices are as alleged, established by the general custom of the business community; and this defense itself, if unchallenged, amounts to a grave accusation against the honesty of present business methods.

To answer an invitation for public or private work by sending in what purports to be genuine bids, but what in reality are collusive figures purposes made higher than the bid which it is known will be submitted by one of the supposed competitors is an act of plain dishonesty.

To support these misrepresentations by false affirmations in writing that the bids are submitted in good faith, and without fraud, collusion, or connection with any other bidder, is a positive and deliberate fraud; the successful bidder in the competition is guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses; and the others have made themselves parties to a conspiracy clearly unlawful at the common law.

Where, as in the case of the "Boston Agreement," a number of the most important manufacturers and dealers in structural steel in this country, including the American Bridge Company, one of the constituent members of the United States Steel Corporation, have combined together for the purpose of raising prices by means of collusive bids and false representations, their conduct is not only repugnant to common honesty, but is plainly obnoxious to the Federal statute known as the Sherman or antitrust law.

The commission believes that an example should be made of these men, and that the members of the "Boston Agreement," or at least all those who in October and November, 1905, entered in the fraudulent competitions for the Cove-street draw span and the Brookline street bridge, should be brought before a Federal grand jury for violation of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890. The three years' limitation for participation in these transactions has not yet elapsed, and the evidence obtained by the Commission is so complete that there should be no difficulty in the Government's securing a conviction in this case.

This recommendation applies to the officers and directors of the following corporations, as well as to the corporations themselves, viz:

American Bridge Company of New York.
The Pennsylvania Steel Company.
New Jersey Bridge Company.
New England Structural Company.
The Boston Bridge Works (Incorporated).
Eastern Bridge and Structural Company.
Berlin Construction Company.
The Canton Bridge Company.
The Groton Bridge Company.
Owego Bridge Company.
The King Bridge Company.
Frederick W. Sage, for Belmont Iron Works.

So far as the pecuniary interests of the city of Boston are concerned, the Commission recommends that an action be brought in the State courts to recover the money out of which the city was defrauded in the boiler repair contracts of 1904 and 1906, in the fireproofing contracts, and in the Broadway Bridge transaction of 1902; and that suits be brought in the United States Circuit Court for the District of Massachusetts against all the members of the "Boston Agreement" who competed for city work, to recover the triple damages allowed in such cases by the provisions of the Sherman Act.

For the future, the Commission recommends that before any contract is let, whether by public advertisement or by private invitation, for work exceeding $1,000 in amount, the contractor be required to furnish a statement under oath that his bid was made in good faith, without fraud, collusion, or connection of any kind with any other bidder for the same work, or with any city official, that the bidder is competing in his own interest and in his own behalf without connection or obligation to any undisclosed person, and that no other person has any interest in the profits of the contract; and that a similar affidavit be required from all persons submitting to any department figures for subcontracts where the work is let to a general contractor.

Also that the Legislature be requested to pass an act making it a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, to submit such an affidavit which contains a false statement; making it a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, for two or more persons invited publicly or privately to compete for public work to enter into any combination affecting the bid of either; making any contract entered into by the city with a person or corporation who has been a party to such a combination void, at the option of the city, as to the part uncompleted at the date when the fraud is discovered; and giving the city the right to recover any money previously paid in excess of the reasonable value of the completed part.

The Commission also recommends that the practice of city departments to restrict their invitations to local concerns be discontinued. The city is entitled in its contract work to the largest field of competition.

Respectfully submitted.

THE FINANCE COMMISSION,
By NATHAN MATTHEWS, Chairman.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message will lie on the table and be printed.

SUSPENSION OF COMMODITY CLAUSE, INTERSTATE COMMERCE LAW.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law. It will take but a few moments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the failure of any railroad company, prior to May 1, 1910, to comply with that provision of section 1 of the act approved June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," which reads as follows: "From and after May 1, 1908, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company to transport from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, any article or commodity, other than timber and the manufactured products thereof, manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its authority, or which it may own in whole or in part, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, except such articles or commodities as may be necessary and intended for its use in the conduct of its business as a common carrier," shall not be held or deemed to subject the railroad company so violating said provision prior to January 1, 1910, to the penalties, fines, or forfeitures now provided by law for violations of said act to regulate commerce, or any act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto: Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed to prevent the bringing of any civil suit or proceeding for the enforcement of said provision or the prevention of violations thereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not want to consent to that until the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] has been heard from. The Senator from Missouri gave notice that he wanted to speak on the Brownsville matter yesterday. He then was asked to give way, and he did give way very graciously. He has been sitting here all morning, and the morning business has continued far beyond what it usually does. This is a matter that can not be disposed of in a moment. I think the Senator from West Virginia has an amendment he wants to offer, which has not yet been offered, and I have an amendment which I want to offer after he has perfected his resolution. I suggest, therefore, that the Senator offer the amendment he proposes to offer, as I understand him, to perfect the joint resolution; then I will offer mine; then let both be printed, and let us take them up to-morrow.

Mr. ELKINS. I will suggest to the Senator from Ohio that I spoke to the Senator from Missouri and asked if I could bring this matter up, and I had his consent to do so.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Missouri tells me he consented upon the theory that the joint resolution would take only a few moments, but we can not discuss a matter of this kind in a few moments. It is a matter of the gravest importance, and some of us have views as to what ought to be done different from those entertained by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ELKINS. I will ask the Senator——

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER. I gladly yielded to the Senator from West Virginia, thinking, of course, the joint resolution would not take any great time. I do not wish to stand in the way of any legislation that is desired, but I am anxious to get through with the remarks I wish to submit as early as possible.

Mr. FORAKER. I should be glad to have the Senator from Missouri proceed with his remarks. I am anxious about that, but I recognize the importance of this resolution, and I recognize that it must be acted upon within a few days, because it is the purpose of this resolution, as I understand, to modify the commodity clause of the Hepburn rate law, which goes into effect on the 1st day of May; and, if it is to be modified before the 1st day of May, we must act soon. But I do not like the resolution that the Senator has offered, for reasons that I can not give expression to in a moment or in a few moments. I desire no great length of time—perhaps not more than thirty minutes—to discuss this matter, but we all know, when a man has in mind to make a speech of thirty minutes, he is liable to interruptions and on other accounts to make it an hour, or maybe even longer.

Mr. ELKINS. May I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. ELKINS. The Senator suggests he wishes to have his substitute printed.

Mr. FORAKER. My substitute has been printed, and is on the desk before me, but what I wanted was that the Senator's amendment, which has not been printed——

Mr. ELKINS. The Senator means the amendment suggested by the Attorney-General?

Mr. FORAKER. By the Attorney-General. That might be offered now and be printed. We could have it before us to-morrow, and I could have a copy of it and look at it as well as the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I would state, for the information of the Senator from Ohio and for the Senate, that this joint resolution has the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to whom it was referred for report. The Attorney-General also states in a letter that his attention had been drawn to the resolution, and he suggests an amendment, to which the Senator from Ohio has referred, and which I will read, so that it may go into the RECORD and be printed, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator can offer it and have it printed without stopping to read it.

Mr. ELKINS. Yes. I will offer the amendment to strike out the proviso on page 2, lines 17, 18, 19, and 20, and insert in lieu thereof the proviso suggested by the Attorney-General in his letter of April 8, 1908, which I will read, so that it will go into the RECORD. The Attorney-General says:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 8, 1908.

HON. STEPHEN B. ELKINS, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My attention has been called to S. R. 74, introduced by you on the 31st ultimo. In view of the fact that some difference of opinion seems to exist as to whether any appropriate civil remedy exists to enforce the provisions of the "commodities clause" of the Hepburn Act, as the law now stands, I venture to suggest that the above-mentioned resolution be amended by adding to it the words following:

This is the proviso that, as I have stated, I will move to substitute for the proviso on page 2, lines 17, 18, 19, and 20:

"Provided, That nothing in this resolution shall be construed to prevent the bringing of any civil suit or proceeding for the enforcement of said provision or the prevention of violations thereof; and the Attorney-General is hereby authorized to institute, or cause to be instituted, in the name of the United States and against any persons or corporations failing to comply with said provision such civil suit, whether by application for mandamus, bill in equity for injunction, or other effective remedy in the premises, in any circuit court of the United States having jurisdiction in the premises, to secure the enforcement and observance of said provision; and the respective parties to any such suit herein authorized to be commenced shall enjoy the right of appeal, as in suits of like character when instituted by the request of the Interstate Commerce Commission to compel the observance of the interstate-commerce law."

Yours, very truly, CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

That is the amendment I offer. I would ask, in this connection, that the substitute of the Senator from Ohio be read and put in the RECORD, so that Senators will have both the amendment and substitute of the Senator before them, if the Senator will have it read, or allow me to read it, or read it himself.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand the Senator has offered that amendment.

Mr. ELKINS. Yes; I have offered this amendment to strike out and insert. Now, I want your substitute——

Mr. FORAKER. When that amendment is disposed of, I shall offer mine—that is to say, if the Senator from West Virginia has perfected his joint resolution, I will then offer this as a substitute.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that my amendment be adopted, then, as offered now.

Mr. KEAN. I should like——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? That is the question.

Mr. CULBERSON. I rise to inquire what is the proposition before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is whether there is objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution just reported?

Mr. CULBERSON. I object to its present consideration.

Mr. ELKINS. The amendment——

Mr. CULBERSON. I object to its present consideration.

Mr. ELKINS. If that be the case, I ask that the substitute of the Senator be read. I want to read it for the information of the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to offer it as soon as it is in order to do so. I desire to offer my amendment as a substitute for the joint resolution of the Senator from West Virginia when he has it perfected. I see no objection, if the Senator from Texas will allow me to make that suggestion, to allowing the Senator from West Virginia to perfect his joint resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not object to that.

Mr. FORAKER. No. Then I should think, without objection, that amendment might be considered as adopted, but open to amendment.

Mr. ELKINS. I hope the Senator from Texas——

Mr. CULBERSON. My understanding when I came into the Chamber was that the joint resolution would not at this time be offered for consideration by the Senate.

Mr. ELKINS. Let me state to the Senator the situation. I have only moved to strike out the provision in the original joint resolution and to substitute instead one that the Attorney-General has recommended, which I was willing to have adopted and taken as a part of the joint resolution. That is all.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think the Senator from West Virginia can do that without a motion. He can perfect his own joint resolution without the action of the Senate.

Mr. ELKINS. I ask that that be done.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that if the joint resolution was a personal resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia he could modify it at his option; but if it is a committee measure, a joint resolution reported by the committee——

Mr. CULBERSON. I think the Chair is right in this respect. If the proposition is for the Senate to consider the joint resolution now, I object.

Mr. ELKINS. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to perfect the joint resolution as suggested.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution can not be perfected by amendment unless it is before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. If I can, I consent to its consideration to that extent.

Mr. ELKINS. That is all I desire.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia proposes an amendment——

Mr. CLAY. I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that if we take up the joint resolution now and adopt this amendment Senators would not know what the amendment contains. I suggest to him to have the resolution and the amendment printed, printing the amendment in italics, and then when the joint resolution comes up to-morrow we can consider the amendment. In all probability Senators may not desire to vote for this amendment. If this amendment is adopted to-day we are bound by it, and before it is considered, at least, it ought to be printed. It is the usual course. Amendments are offered to a measure of this kind, and both the measure and the amendments are printed. If the Senator can have the joint resolution and the amendment he offers and the substitute offered by the Senator from Ohio all printed, the amendment and substitute in italics, the whole matter can be considered together to-morrow. Simply to take up the joint resolution and adopt one amendment——

Mr. ELKINS. It is to modify the joint resolution as offered.

Mr. CLAY. Has the joint resolution been considered by the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes; and reported favorably.

Mr. CLAY. Unanimously reported?

Mr. ELKINS. Unanimously reported.

Mr. FORAKER. I was absent when the joint resolution was considered in committee or I should have offered the amendment there that I propose to offer now. I see no objection to the Senator from West Virginia being allowed to perfect the joint resolution. Then I can offer the substitute.

Mr. CLAY. I should like to ask the Senator a question. The joint resolution is one which has been introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and acted upon by the committee, and is now in the Senate?

Mr. ELKINS. And reported favorably.

Mr. CLAY. The joint resolution can not be amended or changed except by the vote of the Senate. If it was a simple resolution introduced by the Senator from West Virginia, he surely could perfect it, but it will take a vote of the Senate to change the joint resolution and adopt a proviso or amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Undoubtedly; and that is what the Senator from West Virginia asks—that he may be allowed, by unanimous consent, to perfect the joint resolution.

Mr. ELKINS. Then it will be before the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. I care nothing about it, except I wish to offer my substitute.

Mr. CLAY. It strikes me the best way is to have the joint resolution and the amendments printed, and that all be passed upon at the same time. I hope the Senator will consent to that. I do not want to object to the Senator perfecting the joint resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia if the amendment now proposed by him is recommended by the committee and whether it is intended in that way by the committee to perfect its own joint resolution, or is it an individual proposition of the Senator?

Mr. ELKINS. I will state for the information of the Senator—he was not present—that I read the amendment suggested by the Attorney-General of the United States in a letter to me, which I was willing to accept instead of the provisions of the committee. It enlarges the proviso inserted by the committee when it reported the joint resolution. That is all the amendment does. It enlarges it; it does not change the sense of the joint resolution, but makes it more definite.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is not an amendment proposed by the committee?

Mr. ELKINS. No. It is suggested——

Mr. KEAN. Has it ever been considered by the committee?

Mr. CULBERSON. Therefore it will be necessary for the Senate itself to act before it can be perfected to that extent.

Mr. President, while I have the floor I wish to call the public attention of the Senator from West Virginia, who is chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce—and he is not unadvised about my position personally on the matter—to the fact that the joint resolution is intended for the relief of the railroads, and it has been promptly reported from the committee, whereas there are several bills pending before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and have been for three or four months, asking some relief as against the railroads for the people and the shippers of the country, and we can not get a report upon either one of those bills from the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

So far as I am concerned, I am not disposed to give unanimous consent for the consideration of bills for the relief of the railroads when the committee does not bring in bills for the relief of the shippers of the country, which have been pending there for four or five months. Let us have a report either one way or the other, either adversely or favorably, and not drag it out, and not have millions of dollars lost to the shippers of the country because the railroads refuse to give them adequate relief.

Mr. ELKINS. To what bill does the Senator refer?

Mr. CULBERSON. I refer specially to the bill introduced by me the last session and reintroduced at the beginning of this session, requiring the railroads to furnish cars to shippers when they are demanded and when the commerce is there ready to be delivered to the carrier. The Senator is advised of the bill, I think.

Mr. ELKINS. Has the Senator concluded?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes; for the present.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not see why this joint resolution should have provoked this complaint from the Senator from Texas. The bill he introduced has had more consideration than any other bill before the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is the trouble about it. It has had nothing but consideration. That is what we object to.

Mr. ELKINS. It is the best we can do. Why do you not vote to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill, if you do not like the way the committee is proceeding?

Mr. CULBERSON. There is time enough.

Mr. ELKINS. Let me explain. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator wants an emphatic statement about it, he can be assured that a motion of that kind will be made if the committee delays very much longer.

Mr. ELKINS. All right. I will be ready to answer that or the committee will, when the motion is made.

I want to answer the Senator from Texas. The bill he introduced has been considered more, and more hearings have been had on it, than any other bill before that committee. No longer ago than two weeks, I think on Good Friday, Judge Cowan, of Texas, the special advocate of the bill, appeared before the committee and had a hearing, and every time the friends of the bill have asked for a hearing they have had it. The bill is in the hands of a subcommittee, as I understand. Those opposed to the bill have had no opportunity to be heard. I do not know whether the Senator wants the committee discharged from the further consideration of the bill or to force a report when only one side has been heard and the other has not.

I do not see that that has anything to do with this joint resolution. If the Senator wants to object to the consideration of the pending joint resolution, let him do so openly and not drag in something about the failure of the committee to report another bill which he introduced.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from West Virginia, I take it, does not desire to create a misapprehension upon the part of the Senate in the statement which he has made that the opposition to the bill I introduced has not been heard. The fact is, as I understand it, that both sides have been heard with reference to this measure.

So far as concerns the last statement of the Senator from West Virginia, he will bear witness that I have already openly objected to the consideration of the joint resolution, and I intend to continue to object to its consideration unless some relief for the shippers is granted either by an adverse report or by an affirmative report in reference to the same, so that the Senate can consider the measure.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let us have the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. ELKINS. I can not control the action of the Senator from Texas. Whatever he wants to do is for him to judge. I should like to get the proviso suggested by the Attorney-General printed, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia, if I may, if the Senator from Texas will allow that much to be done. I find I was mistaken in saying the opposition to the bill had not been heard. It appears that two attorneys opposed to the bill appeared and were heard. I was not present.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have not objected to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts has demanded the regular order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to the printing. I simply object to the present consideration of the joint resolution with a view to its passage.

Mr. ELKINS. I accepted that fact long ago, and now only desire the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia carried out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that all this debate is out of order, the Senator from Massachusetts having demanded the regular order.

Mr. LODGE. It is obvious that this measure will involve a great deal of debate. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] has been waiting for some time to go on with his speech. I thought it was only fair to him, as this seemed to give rise to great debate, that we should have the regular order.

Mr. FRYE. I appeal to the courtesy of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] to call up a very important bill, which will not lead to any discussion, and I should like to do it now. It ought to pass the Senate, so as to reach the House in season.

Mr. LODGE. I make no request for the regular order as against the Senator from Maine.

Mr. ELKINS. I should like to have the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia carried out, and then I shall have no objection to the request. I have nothing to say against the request of the Senator from Maine.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded and the Chair has recognized the Senator from Maine.

REGULATION OF SEAGOING BARGES.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6487) to govern seagoing barges. There are 400 seagoing barges, and they are the most dangerous of sea craft. Within two years 60 have gone to the bottom, and 25 per cent of the sailors have gone with them, the largest percentage of loss ever had on the ocean. They are absolutely without regulation. They are usually from 20 to 30 years of age. Many of them are old ships and barks which have been cut down after they were practically unserviceable, thus weakening their structural strength, and every once in a while one goes down in the ocean and takes with it its crew.

Then, again, it is easier for tugs to tow these barges with very long hawsers, making a range of barges three or four or five thousand feet long, swayed hither and thither by the wind and tide and current, and they constitute a worse danger to sailing ships and steamships than do derelicts. This bill simply provides that they shall be regulated, inspected, and controlled as other seagoing vessels are. I should like to have the bill read, and then I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Senator from Maine a question?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. Does this regulate the length of the tows?

Mr. FRYE. It does not. It simply allows the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to make rules and regulations in relation to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the local inspectors of steamboats shall at least once in every year inspect the hull and equipment of every seagoing barge of 100 gross tons or over, and shall satisfy themselves that such barge is of a structure suitable for the service in which she is to be employed, has suitable accommodations for the crew, and is in a condition to warrant the belief that she may be used in navigation with safety to life. It further provides for a certificate of inspection such as is prescribed in sections 4421 and 4423 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF STORM SUFFERERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 171) providing for assistance to the people of the storm-swept States of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas on the 25th day of April, 1908, there occurred in the States of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana a disastrous cyclone or tornado, causing the loss of hundreds of lives and the destruction of much property and rendering many persons homeless and temporarily without means of support: Therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to use such means as he has at hand, or that may be furnished to him, in the way of tents, provisions, and supplies, to relieve the distress occasioned by such storm or cyclone, and that he take such steps as he may deem proper for the relief of such distress and need among the people who have suffered from the results of said storm or cyclone.

Resolved, That the Congress has heard with much regret and profound sorrow of the terrible loss of life and destruction of property attendant upon the disastrous storm or cyclone which visited the States of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana on the 25th day of April, 1908, and hereby extends its sympathy to the sufferers.

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution, with the indulgence of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WARNER. Certainly.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate bill 6206, which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6206) for the relief of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of the United States Infantry.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, when last discussing this question I was taking up for consideration the witnesses who claimed that they saw the raiders and recognized them as colored soldiers. The witnesses of whom I have spoken were Mr. and Mrs. Rendall, Mr. Sanborn, and Jose Martinez, Mrs. Rendall failing to recognize the men as soldiers, but seeing the forms of the men moving around in the direction in which her husband had located them.

This brings us to the testimony of Mrs. Leahy, who was one, as I said in my former remarks, of the very few at Brownsville who displayed courage and self-possession while the raiders were "shooting up" the town. She, at the risk of her life, crossed the street to take to her home the terrified Cowen family, and, what is most strange, protected two of the valiant policemen of Brownsville by shutting them up in a bathroom of her hotel until the danger had passed. Mrs. Leahy testified, and I think those who saw her will believe her statement, that she does not know what fear is. It is also clear from the evidence that she had no prejudice against the coming of the negro troops, nor did she have any sympathy with those who threatened to get rid of them.

On being asked:

You never had any trouble with the colored troops?

she replied:

No, sir; none whatever.

Q. Did you have any objection to the colored troops coming there?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. Nor any prejudice or objection against a soldier, whether white or black?—A. None whatever, sir. (P. 2894.)

* * * * * * *

Mrs. Leahy testified positively to seeing the flash of shots from the gallery (porch) of B Company barracks; this she saw when at the window in the vacant room on the second floor of her hotel. What she saw of the raiders is best told in her own words:

Q. Now, did you see the parties near your place when they came down there near your house?—A. Yes, sir; after that—some time after that.

Q. Well, what did you see there?—A. I heard them still shooting up the alley. They stopped at the mudhole, turned around, and shot into the Cowen house. They walked around the mudhole, and then shot into the Cowen house.

Q. The Cowen house is just across Fourteenth street from your house?—A. Yes, sir. They stopped in the middle of the street. When they stopped in the middle of the street one man touched the other on the shoulder and looked up at the window where I was and said something that I could not understand. The other man looked up and said: "No; keep straight ahead and shoot to the front," and a volley was shot down the alley toward the Miller Hotel.

Q. You heard those voices. Did you see the faces of the party?—A. Distinctly—of those two men only.

Q. Of those two men. What were they—colored men or white men?—A. They were negroes. One was a black man, the other was a yellow-faced negro, with spots on his face and distinctly negro features.

Q. How were they dressed—in citizens' clothes or soldiers' uniforms?—A. No, sir; they had soldier clothes on—khaki suits on—and one had a blue shirt.

Q. They were in plain view of you at that point?—A. Clearly; yes, sir.

Q. Where were they when you saw them?—A. Right in the middle of the street, sir.

By Senator LODGE:

Q. In the middle of Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. Well, then, which way did the shooting continue?—A. Up the alley, sir; up towards the Miller Hotel.

Q. Up towards the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Miller Hotel was on Thirteenth street?—A. Thirteenth street.

Q. Did you see any more of the parties there?—A. Yes, sir; there was 14 other men with them.

Q. How did you know there were 14?—A. I counted them, and I am sure there were 14 others; I may have made a mistake in the counting, but I doubt it.

Q. Did you notice how those others were dressed?—A. They were in khaki uniform.

Q. Were they colored soldiers?—A. I think so. I did not see them clearly or distinctly.

Q. You did not see their faces?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. But they were dressed in the soldiers' uniforms?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are quite clear about that, Mrs. Leahy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why was it that you saw those two, you say, so distinctly?—A. Because they were looking up at the window when the men shot around them. They were looking straight at me, and I saw them.

By Senator SCOTT:

Q. Which way were those men facing?—A. Looking straight at me, and I was looking at them, as they said, "Keep straight ahead and shoot to the front." I could not help but see them. (Pp. 2896 and 2897.)

Mr. Herbert Elkins, who occupied a room on the second floor of the Leahy Hotel, testified that he was awakened from sleep by the shooting; that in looking out of the window in his room he saw men in khaki uniforms which he recognized as the uniform worn by soldiers. The shooting he heard sounded to him as though it were down in the Cowen alley in the direction of the post—as he locates it—about the post wall. He was then asked:

Q. Just proceed in your own way and tell what you saw and heard from that point.—A. As soon as I heard those shots I raised up and sat in the window. I thought it meant that there was a fire. Then I heard more shots down there, and then I saw two men—after a little I saw two men—running up toward the corner of the alley, toward Fourteenth street.

Q. Proceed.—A. I saw two men running up towards Fourteenth street, and when they got to about 6, 8, or 10 feet from the mouth of the alley, the one in the lead ran into a soft, muddy place and he got out on the sidewalk—there was no sidewalk there, but a hard place, gravel—and he called to the other to not run ahead, or he would get in the mudhole. They stepped out there and fired about two or three shots each into the Cowen house. Then they reloaded and fired, emptied their guns, I suppose. Anyway, they fired about five times apiece—four or five times apiece—and then they reloaded again, and as they were reloading one man had trouble with his gun, and he stepped over towards the other one and both of them together fixed it. They did not fire any more, but ran on up the alley across Fourteenth street, back of the hotel.

Q. Could you see those men from where you were in your window so as to recognize how they were dressed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How were they dressed?—A. Well, they had on the khaki leggings and pants, and one of them had on a blue shirt and a belt. Whether he had on a cap I do not know; I do not remember. Then the other man was dressed the same way, except he might have had on a coat. I do not remember.

Q. After these men had fired into the Cowen house, state whether any others came up, and then proceed from there.—A. After these men had passed across Fourteenth street into the alley back of the hotel I saw a bunch of soldiers—negro soldiers—come running up the alley. They turned around the corner, and directly in front of the Cowen house—— (P. 2313.)

* * * * * * *

Q. When the bunch of men came into Fourteenth street in front of Mrs. Cowen's house were they or not nearly in front of your window?—A. They were. Yes, sir; right directly between my window and the Cowen gate; about the middle of the street.

Q. About how far were they from your window at that time, could you tell?—A. They were about the middle of the street, and I do not know for sure, but I think the street is about 50 or 40 feet wide.

Q. What street was that, please?—A. That is Fourteenth street.

Q. Now, when the call that you heard back of the hotel was made, did the men who were in front of your window on Fourteenth street turn their faces toward you or toward the corner of the alley and Fourteenth street?—A. Toward the alley, which was mighty near toward me, too.

Q. Could you at that distance and at that time see the faces of any of the men so as to know whether they were white or black men?—A. I could see that part of them were black negroes, and that part of them were lighter colored.

Q. Could you recognize that they were negroes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You could tell that?—A. Yes, sir. (Pp. 2314 and 2315.)

Judge Parks, an ex-district judge, who, as I have stated, occupied the adjoining room to Mr. Elkins, on the day after the shooting (August 15, 1906), being in Brownsville attending legal business, his home being at San Antonio, Tex. On the 15th day of August, 1906, the day following the shooting, Judge Parks (who has since died) wrote to his wife the account of the shooting as he saw and heard it. That letter is as follows:

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., August 15, 1906.

DEAR MAMA: I did not write you yesterday, because there was no time to do so. The entire city was up in arms. I suppose you have seen in the papers what the negro soldiers did. Night before last between 11 p. m. and 12 the negroes came out of the garrison in great force and began a bombardment of the town. It was a terrible affair. They fired several hundred shots along the streets near the garrison line, into the houses and everywhere else, utterly regardless of the families in the houses; then they came on up the alley between Mrs. Louis Cowen's house and the Yturria place where we lived; between these two houses they halted and shot about a dozen or more shots through Louis Cowen's house, shattering the large mirror in her wardrobe, and also shot a chiffonier all to pieces in another room, and still in another room shot another wardrobe or piece of furniture to pieces, and even shot the lamp chimney off the lamp and put the lamp out; and many other shots were fired through the house. It was a miracle that the children and Mrs. Cowen were not killed; but while they were shooting near the garrison and coming up the alley, Mrs. Cowen hid the children under the beds, having them lay flat down, and she also crouched flat down on the floor; this is all that saved them.

I was in my room at the Leahy Hotel—the first room on the left as you go up the stairway—and from the window saw the whole thing, but could not tell they were shooting in the house, and I had no arms whatever to do anything with, and if I had done anything they would have stormed the hotel and killed everyone in it. They then marched on up the alley, shooting at everything in sight, until they got to the Miller Hotel, which they proceeded to bombard in great shape, shooting at every window where a light was visible. But I forgot to say that before they left the corner of Mrs. Cowen's place, they fired a couple of shots into the Leahy Hotel, but they did not go through the brick walls. At the bombardment of the Miller Hotel, the police attempted to attack them, but the brave and valiant (?) Brownsville police were put to flight in a very few seconds, and the lieutenant of police, Joseph Dominguez, the same man who was shot by Baker, the soldier I defended and cleared a couple of years ago, had his horse killed under him and his right hand shot all to pieces, and which necessitated amputation of the hand and part of the arm; then they went on up the alley, and in the old Jagou place, where a saloon is kept, they fired in from the alley and killed the barkeeper, a very good young man named Frank Natus; they proceeded around on Elizabeth street, and shot up all the houses; in another part of the town, around near old lady Sauder's store, in one of her neat cottages, where Fred. Starck lived, they fired eight shots through the bedrooms, but Mrs. Starck had had all of the children to lie down on the floor, and were thus saved. Many other residences were shot into, among them old man Rendall's, one shot passing just over him as he laid in bed. It was a fearful night, no one expecting such a thing, and no one being prepared to meet the occasion. When they got tired, they returned to the garrison. Yesterday we had a mass meeting of the people and some steps were taken to investigate the matter and arrange some sort of defense, but practically nothing was done.

I am of opinion that there is great danger of another and far worse outbreak. The negroes were mad because they were not allowed to drink at saloons beside the white people, several of them had been knocked over the head with pistols by some of the valiant (?) people for very trivial cause.

If another outbreak is made the results will be very serious indeed. Well, dear, there is nothing to write. So with much love and kisses for you and the children, I am,

Lovingly, PAPA.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think the present condition of the Chamber justifies me in suggesting that a quorum is not present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich	Carter	Frye	Perkins
Ankeny	Clay	Fulton	Piles
Bacon	Cullom	Gallinger	Richardson
Bankhead	Dick	Gamble	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Dillingham	Gary	Smoot
Brandegee	Dixon	Kean	Stephenson
Briggs	du Pont	Long	Stewart
Brown	Elkins	McCreary	Taliaferro
Bulkeley	Flint	Milton	Teller
Burkett	Foraker	Nelson	Warner
Burnham	Foster	Nixon	Warren
Burrows	Frazier	Overman	Wetmore

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20063) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Understanding that the Senator from Missouri desires to address the Senate, he having given notice to that effect, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have some understanding, if we may, as to when this bill will be taken up to-day. Some of us may want to discuss some of its provisions.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Rhode Island, I am sure, need not have any assurance on my part. I will urge the consideration of the bill as speedily as possible. I want to get it off my hands more than the Senator from Rhode Island wants to have it disposed of. I think there will be no difficulty, after the Senator from Missouri has spoken an hour or so, in proceeding with the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, while it can not be said from the evidence that the police of Brownsville exhibited any excess of courage during the time the raiders were shooting up the town, yet the old veteran, Lieutenant of Police M. Ygnacio Dominguez, exhibited a high order of courage. He was the hero of the night. When attracted by the firing at or near the fort while in the police headquarters, he immediately mounted his horse, riding down Washington street to the corner of Washington and Fourteenth, where he met policeman Padron; from Fourteenth street he returned to Thirteenth, going on Thirteenth street toward Elizabeth street. As he crossed Cowen alley in front of the Miller Hotel he saw two squads of soldiers. He testified:

Q. And what was their location; right at the mouth of the alley?—A. No, sir; they were coming by the gate, just about 25 feet away, you know. From the gate to the corner of Thirteenth street is about 25 feet.

Q. Where were you then?—A. I was crossing the alley when I heard the words "Give them hell" and at the same time I saw one file on the Miller Hotel side and one on the Bolack side.

Q. And how far would they be from you, then, when you heard them say "Give them hell?"—A. How far would they be from me when I heard them say, "Give them hell?"

Q. Yes.—A. They were about 25 feet, more or less, from the gate to the corner of Thirteenth street, from the gate, and crossing the alley.

Q. Could you see distinctly that they were soldiers?—A. Yes, sir; they were soldiers; I could see them.

Q. They were colored soldiers?—A. Yes, sir; they had uniforms. I saw plainly that they were soldiers. It was a clear, light night—starlight.

Q. After the words there that you heard, "Give him hell," or "Give them hell," whatever it was that was said, was there a volley then fired, or shooting?—A. After the words were said, you know, they fired a volley.

Q. Now, go on and state just where you went then.—A. I crossed and went on on Thirteenth street toward Elizabeth street, hollering to the people at the Miller Hotel to escape themselves, and to put out their lights, because the colored soldiers were shooting the people.

Q. You went down the street giving that alarm?—A. That alarm, yes, sir; because I thought that was the best judgment I could use, because I could not stand against fifteen or twenty men.

Q. To alarm them?—A. To alarm the hotel, because that was a large hotel, and there were people coming from all over the United States stopping there with their families, and there were women and children, and I thought that was the best judgment I could use, not to stop and try to arrest them, but to go on and make an alarm, so that they could escape themselves.

Q. Well, go on.—A. I proceeded on Thirteenth street, and immediately after that they came out, and one fired at the Miller Hotel on Thirteenth street.

Q. Pardon me a moment. Where did you go then, when you left up there at Thirteenth street and the alley, at the corner of the Miller House? You went down toward Elizabeth street, you say?—A. I went on Thirteenth street toward Elizabeth street; yes, sir. (P. 2113.)

* * * * * * *

Q. Those men who came out of the alley you say were colored soldiers? How many were there that came out?—A. There were about fifteen or twenty, I believe; more or less.

Q. Could you see whether or not they were armed—carrying guns? They had guns, had they?—A. Yes, sir; they had guns. I could see their guns.

Q. And you saw their uniforms and knew they were soldiers?—A. Yes, sir; I saw their uniforms and knew they were soldiers.

Q. And you say they shot you?—A. They shot me and shot the horse. That was on the corner of Elizabeth street and Thirteenth street.

Q. Did the horse fall there?—A. He stumbled. After they shot me and shot the horse he stumbled, and at the corner I turned my back and I got hold with this hand of the reins and shot him across the street, and he fell right across over there [indicating]. (P. 2115.)

* * * * * * *

Mr. Hale Odin, his wife, and five children, the oldest being but eleven, occupied, on the night of the shooting, a large corner room on the second floor of the Miller Hotel. Mr. Odin's home was in San Antonio, he being a native of Michigan and a graduate of the university of that State. This I do not regard as important, as a mar's truthfulness does not depend on the place of his birth or the section of the Republic in which he lives.

Mr. Odin was a land and immigrant agent, having occupied that position for over thirty-one years. His business called him to various parts of the United States. When the shooting commenced he was sitting at the window opening on the alley, there being in the room two other windows opening on Thirteenth street.

Mr. Odin in his sworn statement before Messrs. Purdy and Blocksom gave a clear statement of what he saw and heard on that night, and his statement bears on its face the evidence of its truthfulness.

Of it I give the following questions and answers:

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, will you proceed to state, in your own words, just what you know about the shooting which occurred on that night in the city of Brownsville?—A. At 11.55 p. m. on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, I was sitting in the alley window of our room in the Miller Hotel, on the second floor, when I heard shots in the direction of the alley toward the fort. I noted the time; it was 5 minutes of 12, and I counted about 60 shots before they arrived at our windows. During this time I called my wife, and immediately after she and my little boy came to the window we heard persons upon the run coming toward us in the alley from the direction of Fort Brown, and when they passed our windows I counted 6 negro soldiers, 3 abreast in two columns, with one soldier running alongside, who stopped, crossed the alley opposite our windows, and one large negro soldier gave the order "Halt!" and said, "There he goes; shoot!" and they fired a volley. Immediately one other negro soldier joined them from the same direction from which the other 7 had come. Then there were 4 more negro soldiers followed and joined the other 8, these 4 coming also from the direction of Fort Brown through the alley. Before the first soldiers arrived I noticed a large black dog running through the alley ahead of the soldiers, and supposed that it was a mad dog that they were chasing and shooting at. Then a second order was given to fire and they fired again to the left or toward the river. Then one large negro soldier stepped back to the center of the alley, slightly in the rear of the other 11, and raised his gun, and at this time another volley was fired. Immediately following this report the large negro with freckled face fired point-blank at us—Mrs. Odin and my son Lee and myself in the window. The ball from his rifle passed through the lower window sash and up into the ceiling in our room and the jacket of the bullet fell back on the floor. I picked it up the next morning and later forwarded it to the Secretary of War. We had a lamp in the room burning but turned partly down. From the flashes of their guns we could see the soldiers distinctly and I discerned their uniforms and dress and the color of their faces and could hear the voices as the command to fire and other remarks were made. Seven of these soldiers had on their usual dark brown uniforms; four were without jackets and one without a hat—was bareheaded. They all carried rifles and one carried a revolver—possibly two. The one that gave the order carried a revolver. When the two volleys were fired the large negro soldier, who gave the order said, "We got that white —— of a ——," and immediately after the shot that was fired into our window the other negro, who fired the shot at us, said, "We got another white bastard." This was immediately following this shot directed at us when our little son fell back upon the floor as if shot, and we picked him up.

Q. What did you do then, Mr. Odin?—A. We heard a heavy fall, as of a horse or some animal, and a groan, which sounded like the groan of a dying horse. Then we heard a scream from a man and immediately following this we heard somebody running northward up the street that faces the Miller Hotel, which is Elizabeth street. Then an order was given to "shoot this way," and a volley was fired to the right on Thirteenth street. Then they crossed Thirteenth street, nearly to the opposite side, and fired a volley into the Miller Hotel from Thirteenth street.

Q. Where were you and your wife standing at that time?—A. I was standing at the window looking out on Thirteenth street.

Q. You had left the window facing on the alley?—A. Yes, sir; had just stepped across the room.

Q. Who, if anyone, was with you at the window?—A. Mrs. Odin.

Q. And where did you see these men at that time—where were they standing?—A. They were nearly to the alley on Thirteenth street—on the north side of Thirteenth street.

Q. About how many men did you see there?—A. Twelve men.

Q. Did you at that time stop to count them or was your estimation just made from the general appearance?—A. I saw them all pass over and I counted them and said to my wife, "There are just twelve of them."

Q. Now, you may go on and state what happened then.—A. After firing at the Miller Hotel they passed northward up the alley—a part of them at least.

Q. Did you see any go east on Thirteenth street?—A. No, sir; but of course some may have gone east on Thirteenth street without my having seen them.

Q. Where did you hear firing then?—A. In about two minutes after they passed northward up the alley I counted five more shots, and in about two minutes thereafter 12 negroes—negro soldiers—appeared again going toward Fort Brown, and crossed Thirteenth street and entered the alley at the rear of the Miller Hotel.

Q. Going in what direction?—A. Going toward Fort Brown on double-quick and passed out of sight.

Q. Did you hear any more shooting after that?—A. I did not.

Q. So the last shooting you heard was up the alley, on the north side of Thirteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, when these soldiers were in Thirteenth street at the mouth of the alley, at the time they were doing the shooting into the Miller Hotel, could you see how they were dressed?—A. Yes, sir; they were dressed in brown uniforms and a broad-brimmed soft hat, such as the soldiers wear.

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, at the time they were in Thirteenth street there, could you distinguish the kind of dress that they had on at any time other than when they were firing?—A. I could when they were in Thirteenth street, but I could not when they got into the alley.

Q. Then when they were in the alley, either to the north or to the south of Thirteenth street, you could not distinguish the way in which they were dressed, except by the flashes of their guns?—A. We could tell them when they were at the rear of the Miller Hotel when they were not firing.

Q. But when they were across the street, to the north of Thirteenth street, you could not tell them except for the flashes of their guns, or how they were dressed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you describe as nearly as you can the light, if any, that seemed to be upon these men during the firing that night in Thirteenth street, out of the alley?—A. The lights from the street lamps from Elizabeth and Washington streets gave us plenty of light to distinguish them plainly, and their dress, and to tell distinctly that they were negroes.

Q. Did you have any difficulty at the time, Mr. Odin, in seeing the faces of these men?—A. No, sir; for they were at times looking up directly toward the window.

Q. And you state positively that they were negroes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And dressed in the uniform of United States soldiers such as were stationed at Fort Brown at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, will you state as to the character of the voices of these men who spoke during the shooting?—A. They spoke in the manner and vernacular of the negroes. If I had not seen them by the flashes from their guns I would have known by their voices that they were negroes by the manner of their speech and accent.

Q. Now, you state that you were sitting in one of the windows facing on the alley in the rear of the Miller Hotel, on the second floor, when you first heard shots that night.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what direction were those first shots that you heard?—A. Down the alley, toward Fort Brown.

Q. And from the time you heard those first shots until the time you heard the last shots to the north of Thirteenth street, in the alley, about how many minutes elapsed?—A. About twelve minutes.

Q. Did you, Mr. Odin, see the lieutenant of police, Dominguez, on that night?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear a horse going by on Thirteenth street in the direction of Elizabeth street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long was that before you heard firing or saw them firing in the alley at the rear of the Miller Hotel?—A. About a half minute.

Q. Did you see any person on Thirteenth street during the time of this firing other than these colored soldiers?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Tillman has stated that he passed along Thirteenth street, going toward Washington street from Elizabeth, a short time before the firing occurred in the vicinity of the Miller Hotel. Did you see or hear him?—A. I heard some one person pass up Thirteenth street.

Q. But you did not see him?—A. No, sir.

Q. That was before the firing had approached the alley toward the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Odin, whether you know where Mr. Starck's house is located that was fired into that night?—A. No, sir.

Q. I will show you this plat (Exhibit A) and point out to you the location of Mr. Starck's house (which is No. 6 on this plat) on Washington street between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets, and ask you whether you heard any firing in that direction on that night?—A. I did not.

Q. After these men passed across Thirteenth street, going north in the alley, you heard some firing in the direction in which they had gone, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many shots?—A. Five.

Q. Where were you at that time?—A. I was standing at my window facing on Thirteenth street.

Q. Did you remain at your windows during all this time or did you at times go back into the room with your wife and children and then return to the window again?—A. I only left the window once during the time the shooting was going on, and that was during the time they were shooting north of us up the alley and while the soldiers were out of my sight.

Q. When your little boy fell back into the room, what did you do then?—A. My wife said, "They have shot Lee," and I said, "I reckon not; see if there is any blood on him;" and he said, "Mamma, I am not shot, but they came pretty near me." I was standing at the north window at the time.

Q. Where were your other children during this time, Mr. Odin?—A. They were in bed, except our little girl, who was standing by our side.

Q. Was she with you while the firing was going on in the alley at the rear of the hotel?—A. Yes; standing behind us.

Q. How old is she?—A. Three years old.

Q. Your other children were in bed, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether they were asleep or not?—A. They were all awake, except the older one.

Q. How old is he?—A. Eleven years.

Q. He did not awaken during all the firing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Odin, as you sat at the window on the night of the 13th of August about 12 o'clock and heard the shooting down in the vicinity of Fort Brown and further down the alley in the direction of the fort, did you anticipate at that time that there was any trouble or that the soldiers were shooting into the houses in the city of Brownsville?—A. No, sir.

Q. After the soldiers reached the rear of the Miller Hotel, did you anticipate that there was any trouble of any kind?—A. No, sir; not until they shot at the policeman.

Q. And then, for the first time, you appreciated the fact that there was serious trouble?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after that was it that the shot was fired into your room facing on the alley?—A. Immediately after that.

Q. From the time when you heard the first shots until you heard the last ones that night, was there anyone in your room other than the members of your family?—A. Yes, Mr. Davis, the hotel clerk.

Q. About what time did he come into your room during that shooting?—A. He came into our room during the time that the soldiers were up the alley at the rear of Tillman's saloon.

Q. Was he the only one in your room during the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So during the time that the soldiers disappeared up the alley going north nobody had been in your room except the members of your family?—A. No, sir.

Q. And during that whole shooting did you or Mrs. Odin or any of your children leave your room?—A. No, sir.

Q. What light was there in your room that night when the shooting commenced?—A. A small oil lamp, turned partly down.

Q. Was the light turned down before any shooting commenced at all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. During the progress of the shooting was the light interfered with in any way by either you or your wife?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was left in the same condition as when the shooting began?—A. When they left the alley going north my wife blew out the light.

Q. Mr. Odin, from the time that the men appeared there at the rear of the alley until they disappeared in the alley across the street, and during the whole of that shooting, both into your room and at the officer going down the street, and the different volleys that you have spoken about, about how long a period of time elapsed, in your judgment?—A. About one and one-half minutes, more or less, I should judge.

Q. I will ask you, from the direction of that shot which entered your room, where it must have been fired from?—A. From about the center of the alley at the rear of the Miller Hotel.

Q. Did you go into the room on the third floor immediately over your room that next morning?—A. No, sir.

Q. You don't know then what became of that shot that went into the ceiling of your room?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long after this occurred, on the night of the 13th of August, was it before you and your wife and family left Brownsville?—A. We left on the following morning, the 14th of August.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. To Corpus Christi and San Antonio.

Q. Have you been back to Brownsville since that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you describe more particularly the condition of the window sash, the window out of which you were looking at the time the shot was fired on that night apparently at you and your wife?—A. The lower sash of the window was raised to the height of our heads, and we were looking out with the top of our heads underneath the sash, and there was a wire screen in the lower half of the window. I was at the left side of the window, Mrs. Odin next to me on the right with her head close to mine, and our little boy at her side, with his face against the window screen. The ball entered the screen, then went through the sash, passed through it diagonally, and then went into the ceiling at about 4 feet from the rear of the room. Just before this shot was fired, the little boy raised up and said, "Mamma, what is going on?" I said, "They are shooting the mad dog," and then the shot was fired into our window.

Q. At the time this was fired into your window, will you state more particularly what you saw and heard in the alley?—A. Immediately before this shot was fired in our window, the other soldiers fired a volley apparently down Thirteenth street to the left, and almost instantly the man who fired at us raised his gun and shot into our window and the flash from the other soldiers' guns revealed his face plainly, looking up and shooting at us, and he exclaimed, "We got another white bastard."

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, I will ask you about the distance from your window to the man who fired the shot at you?—A. I should say from the end of his gun to our faces it was about 12 feet.

Q. Do you recall anything else that happened there that night, concerning which I have not interrogated you, and about which you care to make a further statement?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you before the grand jury or the citizens' committee that investigated this affair?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you made any written or sworn statement to anyone other than the statement you make here to-day?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Now, Mr. Odin, you have testified as to what you saw and heard there that night; I will ask you whether there has ever been any doubt in your mind as to whether those men were negro soldiers?—A. Not the least.

Q. You stated in the former part of your testimony that there were 12 negro soldiers in the rear of the Miller Hotel, and that you saw them and counted them. Will you explain how you happened to count them there that night?—A. Because the first six came up three abreast in two columns, with another negro at their side, making seven. They stopped at the mouth of the alley and then one by himself followed behind on the run as the other ones ahead, and directly four more came up two abreast on double quick or on the run; that made twelve.

Q. So, Mr. Odin, from the arrangement in which these men came up the alley you were at once enabled to make a calculation as to how many men there were there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were not all huddled together in a bunch or crowd?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now you have stated that when the men came back after the firing had ceased up in the rear of Tillman's saloon that there were 12 of them, and that you saw them out of your window which opens out onto Thirteenth street. I will ask you how you made that estimate as to the number?—A. Because they came three abreast in three columns and two abreast following behind, and one nearly at the front at the side. The three in front stopped about 10 or 12 feet from the mouth of the alley or in the street, by an order to halt. The next three were close behind them, also the next three, and also the remaining two, and the single one was nearly at the front of the first row of three. Then the second row filed up in line with the first, and the remaining six separated about 10 feet from them to the west, and they stopped in the same order, and they came down the alley. Then some order was given (I could not hear that distinctly), and they formed a line of six about 10 feet apart, and remained about six or eight seconds, apparently looking up and down Thirteenth street. Then they formed in columns of three again, and an order of march was given, and they passed toward the fort, across the street and down the alley on the opposite side from our window, and disappeared.

Q. How were they marching—running or walking?—A. They were on the double-quick; they started on the double-quick. But about the time they entered the alley they were running very fast.

Q. Could you tell whether or not at that time they broke their formation?—A. Yes; I could see them as they passed along; they were in file as they passed out of sight.

Q. But at that time you state that they were running?—A. Yes, sir; and I heard them running after that.

Q. Did you see them enter the alley at the rear of the Miller Hotel?—A. Yes, sir. I went over from the Thirteenth-street window to the rear-alley window and saw them as they passed out of sight.

Q. And how far down the alley were they, about, when you lost sight of them?—A. About 15 or 20 feet down the alley from my window, I should judge.

Q. And that is the last you saw of them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Odin, I will ask you whether you saw any empty shells in the streets of the city of Brownsville the next morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State under what circumstances.—A. I went into the alley about 5 o'clock the next morning and picked up a handful of empty shells. I found these shells all the way from the middle of Thirteenth street and in the mouth of the alley and down the alley at the rear of the hotel and some of them near the mouth of the alley north of the hotel, and soon after this I met a policeman who had several shells in his hands and I gave him part of those I had, and presently (I don't know how long) the mayor and several other citizens assembled, who also picked up a number of shells in the vicinity of the hotel.

Q. What did you do with the shells that you picked up?—A. I gave them to the policeman and to the mayor. I brought 5 home with me and I gave them to different people. I don't remember to whom I gave them. I gave them all away.

Q. I will show you these empty shells and ball cartridges which were given into my possession by the mayor and sheriff of Cameron County, and ask you whether the ones which you picked up on the morning of the 14th of August in the streets of Brownsville in the vicinity of the Miller Hotel were similar to those?—A. Yes, sir; they appear to me to be the same.

Q. Were you at home at the time that your wife made this statement to Mr. Stevens and the clerk here at San Antonio a few weeks ago?—A. No, sir; I was in Nevada, Mo.

Q. Do you think of anything else with reference to which you care to make a statement?—A. I would like to explain that the reason I was so certain about the shooting and the identity of the persons who did it, and about the number of shots fired, is because I have all my life been in a country where there has been a great many town "shootups" (that is what they call them), and been accustomed to hearing shooting in the frontier towns, and on several occasions I have been in towns where there was a good deal of shooting done, that it became almost a habit that I kept pretty correct account of what happened. I was not alarmed or scared. In fact, I did not believe that there was anything serious happening until we heard the policeman's horse fall and immediately saw the negro raise his gun to shoot into our window. Then for the first time I realized it was a town "shootup." (P. 2929.)

Mrs. Odin fully corroborates the statements of her husband. I here quote from her affidavit given before Messrs. Purdy and Blocksom:

Q. Now, Mrs. Odin, I will ask you to go on and state, in your own words, just what you saw and heard there on that night.—A. About 12 o'clock that night, the 13th of August, I was lying in bed, with our little baby just a year old, and he was sick. I was giving him some medicine at the time, when Mr. Odin was standing in the window facing the alley. The shooting commenced down toward the fort, and Mr. Odin called to me to come to the window, and when I went I heard the negroes coming up the alley in our direction. So we stood and looked out and watched them come up, and they commenced firing, and one negro said, "There he goes." First, though, they said, "Halt," then, "There he goes, shoot," and they commenced shooting, and they shot several shots, and directly I heard a horse go down the street toward the river and heard the horse fall, and the man cry out. I could not understand what he said, but directly heard him running up the street, the street in front of the Miller Hotel. They were firing all this time, and one of them exclaimed, "We've got that —— of a ——." Just then our little boy, sleeping in a bed right by the window, raised up and said, "Mamma, what's going on?" I told him to keep still, and just then one of the soldiers looked up and blazed away at me. Our little boy dropped, as though he was shot, down onto the floor. My little boy was standing on the foot of the bed, which made him almost as high as I was. I was standing at the foot on the floor. I picked him up and laid him back in another bed; went and turned the light down, which was partly down; in fact, I guess I blew it out; yes, I blew it out; then went back to the other window facing on the alley. By the flash of their guns I could see all their faces plain, and the color of their clothes, which were soldiers' uniforms. Some of them did not have on their coats. There were four of them that did not have on their coats—just in their shirts, and I think there were two that had revolvers. I know there was one, and when he shot at me he said, "We have another white bastard." Then they started out into the middle of the street, and I walked across to the window on Thirteenth street and stood just far enough back where I could see out of window, and they turned around and shot up in the direction of the hotel. I do not know whether they shot at the hotel or not, but they shot in the direction of it. Then they started up the alley toward Tillman's saloon, and I watched them until they got out of sight. All this time I could see that they were negro soldiers, and were in the uniform of the soldiers; and directly I heard five shots in the direction of the saloon. Then they came running back toward the fort.

Q. Mrs. Odin, I will ask you whether you saw them when they came back toward the fort?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You may go on and describe just how you happened to see them and about how many there were and what they were doing, and where you saw them.—A. When they were on Thirteenth street, the side of the hotel, they were standing still there when they were shooting, and I counted twelve of them, Mr. Odin and myself, and when they came back in the direction of the barracks they were almost on a run. Of course, I did not count them then, but we could see all the time. There was a dim light shining from both lamps at each corner there, so we could see the color of them and their dress. I just saw them when they passed back by there, and that was the last of them; they were not shooting then.

Q. The last shooting that you heard on that night was up in the vicinity of Tillman's saloon, by the alley?—A. Yes, sir; the five shots that were fired last, when the Mexican boy was killed.

Q. Now, will you describe the size of the room which you and your husband occupied that night, and the location of the windows?—A. It was a large room, almost square. It had four beds in it, and four windows, two facing the alley, and two on Thirteenth street. The door to the room was open, with just a screen closed at the time of the shooting, and there was a dim light shining from the hall as well as from our room, and I suppose they could see that light, and they could see figures through the window.

Q. Will you describe more particularly the window in which you and your little boy were standing at the time the man fired at you?—A. The sill was about 3 feet above the floor, and my little boy was standing to the right of the window on the foot of his bed, and the end of the bed stood just about a foot along the side under the window, and I stood to the right of Mr. Odin, and Mr. Odin stood at the left of me on the floor, and I had my head leaning against the sash. The window was up and there was a screen in the window when this negro looked up and shot. He was a speckled-face negro.

Q. How could you tell that this negro that fired at you was a speckled-face negro, as you describe him?—A. Because he held his gun right up this way [pointing], and the flash of his gun was like a fire. You could see the spots on his face. I had never seen him before or since.

Q. About how far were you away from him at the time he fired at you?—A. About 12 feet from the muzzle of the gun he was pointing at me, I should judge, and he shot right through the screen and through the window sash and through the shade and curtain—a dark-green curtain—and the bullet just passed through my hair, and my face smarted a little bit. I did not light any lamp that night, but looked at myself in the glass the next morning, and my face was powder burned and I used vaseline on it for about a week afterwards. I stood just in the middle of the window and it passed right through the edge of my hair.

Q. Did you see that night or the next morning any marks of that bullet which you said went through your hair?—A. About daylight I got up and went to the window and looked out and saw the hole in the window, through the screen and shade, and looked up at the ceiling and saw a piece of plastering was torn off, just directly over the dresser. The jacket fell back into the room, and I picked up the jacket and gave it to my husband, and I understand he sent it to the Secretary of War.

Q. Did you hear any of these men talking in the alley at the time they were doing this shooting?—A. Yes, sir; they kept saying "There he goes, shoot," and we supposed at the time he was shooting at a dog.

Q. That was about the first conversation you heard?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After that, what other conversation did you hear?—A. Nothing, except when they spoke about—when they said "We've got that —— of a ——," and immediately after that, "We've got another white bastard."

Q. Could you tell from that talk whether they were colored people or white people who did the shooting in the alley?—A. Yes, sir; they had the accent of the negro.

Q. At what place were these men standing when you had the best view of them?—A. Right at the mouth of the alley.

Q. On which side of Thirteenth street?—A. The side toward the Miller Hotel.

Q. Was there anybody in your room other than the members of your family on that night?—A. No, sir; there was no one in the room, except after it was all over Mr. Davis, the night clerk, came up and asked us if they had shot into our room, and he was the only one that was in our room during that night.

Q. Did you or your husband, or any member of your family, leave your room that night?—A. No, sir; except once when I stepped out into the court and went to Mrs. Moore's room and knocked on the door and asked how Mrs. Moore was. Mr. Moore said she was very sick in bed from the shock, and I returned to my room.

Q. I presume that you were awake the greater part of the night?—A. We never closed our eyes again until morning. We were afraid they would come back. Our little girl could not sleep for two weeks afterwards. It made her nearly have nervous prostration, and we left the next morning on the first train.

Q. Have you ever been back to Brownsville since that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you state how these men were dressed and the color of their clothing?—A. They were dressed in the uniform that the soldiers wear—brown, and soft brown hats, and looked just as they always did when marching up the street, except four of them, who were in their shirts. The shirts that these men had on seemed to be a little lighter than their uniform.

Q. Where was your husband standing in the room, as nearly as you can remember, during the time this shooting was going on?—A. First he was standing in the alley window furthest away from Thirteenth street, and he remained there until they had gone out on Thirteenth street and until that window was shot into, and then he stepped to the other window facing on the alley nearest Thirteenth street, and remained there until they went by the alley. Then after they came back he stepped to the window facing the alley and stood there and saw them go back in the direction of the fort.

A Mr. Preciado, the editor of a Spanish paper published in Brownsville, and a Mexican by birth, testified that he was in the Tillman saloon when Frank Natus, who was killed, started for the back door to close it, and that before he reached the door, four or five men crowded in through the gate into the yard of the saloon, which was brilliantly lighted, and that he recognized the intruders as colored soldiers. This yard, in the rear of the saloon, was used rather as a summer garden and the door into it was from the alley. This witness testified that the shooting proceeded up into the town from the Fort. Mr. Preciado described the Tillman saloon and the courtyard as follows:

A. The saloon is divided into two rooms, which open into Elizabeth street. One was a fruit store, the other was the saloon. This room had a division in the center. On the right, next to the street, white people were served, and there was a sign pointing in the other direction, this sign consisting of a hand and had a sign below it saying "Negroes." In the rear there was a square courtyard used as a summer garden, in which there were three or four lighted lamps.

He further testified that during the early part of the shooting he and the party with him went onto the pavement or sidewalk, where they heard many shots, and that while standing there Joseph Crixell, the owner of the saloon across the street from the Tillman saloon, cried out: "Close up, for here comes the negroes." That at that time Frank Natus closed the front door, at the same time remarking—

The door of the alley is open; I am going to close it.

What took place at that time is described as follows by the witness:

He (Natus) took a pistol from below the bar, or counter, and went in the direction of the door of the alley. I followed after him six or eight paces behind. He was approaching the cistern when Nicolas Sanchez Alanis was in the back part. He had gone to the toilet and he shouted to Frank Natus, "Don't go out; a noise is heard in the alley." Then Frank Natus turned as if to go in the direction of the saloon. At this moment a group of five or six armed men appeared and fired. One of the shots entered Frank Natus here [indicating].

Q. That is, in the side?—A. Yes, sir; as he turned to go in the direction of the saloon.

Q. As he turned to go in the direction of the saloon?—A. Frank Natus, in view of the voice that he had heard, Nicholas Sanchez Alanis telling him to return because there was a noise in the alley. At the moment he wished to return appeared a group of men at the door, and they began to fire.

Q. Was that the door or gate of this courtyard?—A. The gate or door of the court which opens upon the alley. Frank Natus received a shot and fell upon his back, saying, "Oh, God." (P. 2301.)

This witness further testified that one of the shots pierced his vest and also that he received a slight flesh wound on the hand. He further testified:

Q. The next day did you notice, or have you since, where the bullets struck there anywhere at the Tillman saloon?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many marks of bullets have you seen there?—A. Four.

Q. Did you see by the light that was there in the courtyard whether or not it was soldiers who did the shooting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How do you know they were soldiers?—A. Because by day the soldiers could be seen dressed in their habitual clothing. Their color and clothing was well known there, because very different from that of others.

Q. Was the uniform that these men were wearing the soldiers' uniform?—A. Of the soldiers; yes, sir.

Q. Also, could you, by the light in the courtyard, tell that they were colored men—negroes?—A. It was possible to distinguish.

Q. Did you distinguish?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many were there who came to the gate, or just inside the gate, whatever it was?—A. There were five or six, but I did not have an opportunity to count. They were moving.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. Were they black men or white men? You said you could distinguish?—A. Colored men.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. Did they come inside the gate?—A. Within the gate, three or four paces. (P. 2303.)

The evidence of this witness is shaken by the fact that he signed an affidavit before the grand jury in which he said: "I could not see anybody in the alley, as it was dark out there and I was in the light." Yet, as this witness testified, his examination before the grand jury was by questions and answers and he does not understand English. His affidavit is written out in narrative form, not containing questions and answers, and that it was true that he could not see in the alley because it was dark, but that he never had testified that he could not see the parties who did the shooting, who were inside of the entrance from the alley to the court. And certain it is, if credence is to be given to the statement of this witness, he was in a position giving him full opportunity for observation, and he could necessarily distinguish citizens from soldiers and white men from colored men. It is also true that there is no evidence that, up to the time that Frank Natus was killed, there was no one upon the streets of Brownsville armed and firing upon the citizens save the raiding party that had started from Garrison road in the rear of B Company barracks, marching along Cowen alley and shooting into houses on their march of destruction.

Doctor Combe, the mayor of Brownsville, and a practicing physician for yearly twenty years, having seen five years' service in the Army and being chief surgeon prior to his muster out, testified that his military service was in Cuba and the Philippines, and that he was familiar with the character of wound made by a high-power gun, and that within a few minutes after the killing of Natus he learned of his death and went to the Tillman saloon and made an examination of the body, and he gave it as his opinion that it was a bullet from a high-power gun which killed Natus.

Of this expert testimony there is not a word in contradiction, and I am authorized in saying that Mayor Combe seemed to have been the one man in Brownsville who had the respect and confidence of both the soldiers and the citizens. All who testified of him as a man or officer spoke of him in the highest terms. His testimony as to Natus being killed by a bullet from a high power gun is strongly corroborative of the evidence of Preciado.

A Mr. Littlefield, a ranchman and former deputy sheriff of Cameron County, in which Brownsville is situated, testified that on the night of the affray he was in Brownsville, stopping at the Rio Grande Hotel, of which his father was the proprietor. This hotel is located on Jefferson street, between Eleventh and Twelfth streets. He testified that at the time of the shooting he was asleep, and that upon being awakened by the shots he got out of bed and went into the town, not having time to dress fully. He went down Eleventh street to the alley between Washington and Elizabeth streets—that is, the Cowen alley; at that point he turned down the alley toward the fort until he got to Thirteenth street. From there he went to Tate's house on Washington street.

As to what he saw and heard from that point he testified as follows:

Q. And Mr. Tate's house is next to the Starck house, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Tate's house is about where that figure "6" is.

Q. And when you got up here to the corner of Thirteenth and Washington streets you turned to the left instead of the right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And went to Mr. Tate's house?—A. That is the direction I went; yes, sir.

Q. But what I want now is for you to go back and tell us what you saw that night, if anything, of the shooting, and the parties who did the shooting.—A. When I had got about middle way of Eleventh and Twelfth streets, in the alley, you understand, between Washington and Elizabeth streets, I seen a shot fired in front of me. That shot seemed to be about the middle of the block between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets. I seen this one shot, and I heard a number of others, probably four or five; I could not recognize just how many, and I stopped there and stood still for probably half a minute; I can not tell exactly the length of time I stood there. When that shot was fired I could see a bunch of people—a crowd of people—in the alley; that was in front of me.

Q. Up towards Thirteenth street?—A. Down towards Thirteenth street, about a block from me. I was in the middle of one block and they were in the center of another. As I told you, I stood there for a little while, and these people came up the alley towards me, probably 20 or 30 steps, until they got within about 20 feet of the mouth of the alley going into Twelfth street, and they turned back there and went towards Thirteenth street again. When I seen they were going that way I followed them on down, and I seen them as they went around the corner of the alley into Thirteenth street, and after they got out of my sight going around the corner from the alley into Thirteenth street I went on down. We were both running against the wall on the right-hand side.

Q. You mean by "running against the wall" that you were close to the wall?—A. Yes, sir; on this side of the alley [indicating], the right-hand side of the alley going towards Thirteenth street. When they got out into Thirteenth street they turned the corner, and they were out of my sight there, and I did not see them any more, and I had probably run 20 steps when I heard some firing on Washington street, over in the direction of Mr. Tate's house or of Mr. Starck's house, in that direction, and I stopped and stood still again for a while.

Q. You were then near the mouth of the alley at Thirteenth street?—A. Yes, sir; I had passed the Ruby Saloon. I was probably 20 feet past the door of the Ruby Saloon. I don't just remember. Then I stood there until the firing stopped, and then went on to the corner of the alley and Thirteenth street. I didn't run right out into the street. First, I put my head around the corner to see what was going on in the street, and I seen a bunch of people running diagonally across Washington and Thirteenth streets, in the direction of the corner of Lon Hill's office, diagonally across, you understand [indicating]. I believe that Mr. Porter lives over there.

Q. Well, go on.—A. Well, I seen those people running across there, and as they were passing they passed within about 20 feet, I suppose, of the street lamp, and I seen them. I recognized them.

Q. What did you recognize?—A. I recognized them as United States soldiers, or people in the United States uniforms.

Q. They were how far from the street lamp, then?—A. Probably, when I first seen them, they were 20 feet.

Q. And where were you at that time, Mr. Littlefield?—A. I was in the mouth of the alley, between Washington and Elizabeth streets, at the corner, you know, of Thirteenth, where the alley runs into Thirteenth street.

Q. You recognized them as United States soldiers, you say?—A. They had on United States uniforms; yes, sir.

Q. Could you at that time recognize as to whether they were dark colored men or not?—A. There was one of them that I distinctly recognized as being a colored soldier; yes, sir.

Q. What enabled you to distinctly recognize one of them as being a colored soldier?—A. Well, as I was standing there and looking at them, this one turned his head and looked back the way they had come, back toward me, and he was looking toward me, and when he looked back that turned his face directly toward me.

Q. So that the light——A. The light was shining directly in his face; yes, sir. He had then run past the light and the light was rather between him and me.

Q. And you there recognized him as a colored soldier?—A. A. Yes, sir,

Q. At that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just state again where you were standing when you recognized him as a colored soldier.—A. I was standing in the mouth of the alley between Washington and Elizabeth streets, where the alley runs into Thirteenth street.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. And this man was under the light at the corner of Washington and Thirteenth streets?—A. Yes, sir.

By Senator WARNER:

Q. About how many were there in this party in which you distinguished this man?—A. I could not tell you exactly; I never counted them; there were probably from five to seven; something like that.

Q. You waited there a time?—A. I can not tell you just exactly how long I stayed there; until they got out of sight. There are some trees over on Mr. Porter's corner, and they ran under those trees and got out of sight, and I stood where I was at until they got out of my sight. (P. 2454.)

* * * * * *

Q. You had no doubt in your mind about those being negro soldiers that you saw?—A. No, sir.

Q. In the uniforms?—A. No, sir.

Q. And this one man especially you recognized?—A. Yes, sir; one man I recognized distinctly as being a negro soldier.

Q. About how many shots, altogether, did you hear?—A. Altogether, during the night?

Q. Yes; approximately.—A. I should judge something over 100.

Q. And I think you have stated that those shots, you thought, were from high-power guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Army guns?—A. Yes, sir.

Macedonia Ramirez, a policeman who had been on the force some three years, was on duty at the time of the shooting at the corner of the Alamo, and immediately started toward Washington street. In crossing Thirteenth street he met the lieutenant of police and a fellow-policeman, Genaro Padron, and upon asking of them what had happened received the reply that "the soldiers had left the barracks and were shooting up the city." About the time he met the lieutenant of police he heard a shot in the direction of the Miller Hotel. The lieutenant turned on Washington street, going in the direction of the hotel; that he followed on Thirteenth street, and that Padron, the other policeman, was separated from him by a short distance, and before reaching the Miller Hotel alley he heard a noise as of the loading and unloading of a gun. He stopped at this point. The following questions and answers give what, in part, he saw and heard from that point (p. 2226):

Q. One question there. You heard a noise as though they were loading a gun. Who do you mean was loading a gun?—A. I heard the noise that is produced by manipulating a gun.

Q. Where was this noise?—A. It was coming along the alley of the hotel.

Q. That is the alley between Elizabeth and Washington streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, go on from where you said you went over to the Bolack store.—A. The lieutenant went on, crossing the alley. He crossed over the alley and I remained at a distance of some 30 feet from him; that is, 30 feet from the point where I was to the mouth of the alley. As he crossed the alley I heard a voice within the alley which said, as follows: "There goes one. Is he a soldier? If not, give him hell."

Q. That was in English? That was spoken in English, was it?—A. Yes, sir. The voices which I heard were in English.

Q. Could you understand what was said?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is a fact, is it not, that many of the Mexicans can understand English who do not speak it?—A. Yes; and I am one of those who speak it some and understand it some, but not sufficiently to sustain an interrogatory such as this.

By Senator OVERMAN:

Q. I will ask the interpreter to tell him to repeat in English what I now say: "There he goes. If he is not a soldier, give him hell."—A. (The witness speaking in English.) "There it goes. If it is not a soldier, give it hell."

By Senator WARNER:

Q. You were there at this point, about 30 feet from the mouth of the alley, and the lieutenant had passed by, and you heard this voice. What did you see and hear next?—A. I remained there. The lieutenant had passed the alley a short distance when a group of soldiers came out, with carbines, and fired at him.

Q. How do you know that they were soldiers?—A. The light which shows through the window of the closet of the hotel, together with the light on the corner of Washington street, gave sufficient light for me to recognize them as soldiers.

Q. And you were then about 30 feet from the mouth of the alley, up towards Washington street?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State how those soldiers were dressed, if you know—that is, what uniform they had.—A. I can not define the color; it was yellow, the color which is used during the hot weather. We, vulgarly speaking, call it "burnt yellow."

Q. Did you recognize it as being in color the same as that of the uniforms of the soldiers stationed there?—A. Yes, sir. And I had not the least doubt that they were soldiers.

Q. State whether you saw the faces of any or all of those soldiers.—A. At this moment I saw them, but not very well; not as well as I did afterwards.

Q. Go on. After this shooting of the lieutenant, where did you go and what occurred then?—A. When they fired at the lieutenant I saw that his horse trembled, as it were [indicating], and the horse ran. After they shot they said, "Here are two more," and when they said "Here are two more," I immediately left the point where I was and retreated rapidly, at which time they fired at us.

Q. Which way did you go when you retreated rapidly?—A. Towards Washington street.

Q. Go on.—A. I do not know which direction Genaro Padron took, but I followed along Washington street as rapidly as possible. I crossed Washington street in order to reach the other alley, taking the direction towards Adams street.

Q. On Thirteenth street?—A. Yes, sir. A little after crossing Washington street I felt a blow on my hat, and my hat fell, and I kept on running. I reached the corner of the alley.

Q. What alley?—A. The alley which runs midway between Washington street and Adams street.

Q. All right, go ahead.—A. I promptly arrived at the corner of the stable of Luis Champion, which has a wall of brick. I stopped. I hid myself a moment, and stuck out my head, when I saw a group of soldiers arrive in front of the lamp of Bolack.

Q. Right there, just a moment. When you stopped and put out your head, where was it you stopped?—A. I hid myself in the alley just around the corner of this brick wall.

Q. That is, the alley between Washington and Adams streets?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you put your head out there and looked, just state to us what you saw.—A. I saw a group of ten or twelve soldiers, a little more or less, who came with their carbines in hand, in the attitude of being prepared to fire. They were not in a formed group, but separated somewhat from one another. They came, but not slowly; at a pace rather rapidly than slowly. They came to Washington street.

Q. From where?—A. They turned on Washington street in the direction of Twelfth street, and immediately I heard a discharge.

Q. About how many shots did you hear there?—A. I can not say with any degree of positiveness. There were a number; twelve, more or less. I did not count them. It was impossible to have the judgment to count them.

Q. Did you know that this group of men that you saw there at the corner of Thirteenth and Washington streets and on Thirteenth street, turned down Washington street, were soldiers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What light was there at the corner?—A. Where I saw them?

Q. Yes.—A. The light of Mr. Bolack, and in the very corner of the stable of Luis Champion is a window. This window has slatted shutters, and the man who takes charge there sleeps inside, and he had a lamp, and this lamp also gave light to the center of the street, and these two lamps gave me sufficient light to enable me to see.

Q. How far is the alley from Washington street?—A. I don't know the depth of the lots in Brownsville, whether they are 100 feet or 120 feet. I do not know positively, but it is just the distance of the length or depth of a lot.

Q. When you saw this group of soldiers at the corner of Thirteenth and Washington streets, just tell us what there was that enabled you to tell whether they were soldiers, and whether they were white soldiers or colored soldiers.—A. White soldiers it was impossible for them to be, because there were no white soldiers there.

Q. Did you recognize whether they were colored soldiers or not; and if so, how?—A. Yes, sir; colored soldiers.

Q. How did you recognize them as colored soldiers?—A. Because I saw them with my eyes.

Q. About how many were there there?—A. As I said before, there were ten or twelve, but I can not speak positively, because at that moment I was not counting them.

Q. Go on, now, and state what you saw after that, and heard, if anything.—A. When I left this alley and they turned on Washington street, taking the direction of Twelfth street, where I heard this discharge, then I took the direction of Adams street and went along Adams street in the direction of Twelfth street.

Q. That is, in going to Adams street, then, you went up Thirteenth street from the alley?—A. Yes, sir; along Thirteenth street; not along the center of the street, because there is a vacant lot there, and I, as we say, cut across the lot.

Q. Not along the center of the street, but across the lot to Adams street?—A. Yes, sir.

This witness also testified that a bullet went through the crown of his hat when he was retreating.

The other policeman, Genaro Padron, who had been a member of the police force for four or five years, when the shooting began was on duty on Elizabeth street, his beat extending from Garrison road to the corner of Thirteenth and Washington streets. When he was there the raiders were firing at the lieutenant; he discharged his pistol at them, and the raiders fired at him. He retreated some distance, and upon reaching the corner of Twelfth and Washington streets the raiders again fired repeatedly at him. He recognized the parties doing the shooting as being soldiers. He testified:

Q. When you speak of seeing soldiers, how do you know that they were soldiers?—A. Because they wore the uniform of soldiers—yellow.

Q. Were you near enough to tell whether they were white men or colored men?—A. I could not tell, in view of my surprise, as they were firing at me.

Q. Are you sure that they had the soldiers' uniform and were soldiers?—A. The uniform was the uniform of soldiers. More than that I can not say, whether they were soldiers or not.

Q. Were they armed with guns?—A. They were armed with guns. It was possible to see that.

Q. At what point was it that you say those soldiers come out?—A. They went out of the alley to the corner known as the hotel of Mrs. Leahy.

By Senator FRAZIER:

Q. Is that the corner of Fourteenth street?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. When these men appeared, coming out of the alley between Elizabeth street and Washington street at Fourteenth, did you then recognize them as being soldiers?—A. Yes, sir; because by the light which resulted from their firing I saw all of their uniforms.
Q. In what direction were they firing?—A. Who?
Q. The soldiers?—A. They were not shooting at me.
Q. In what direction, if you know, were they shooting or were they pointing their guns when they fired?—A. They were shooting, but I do not know in what direction they were shooting.
Q. I suppose you were considerably excited, were you?—A. I was astonished, in view of what had passed. (P. 2140.)

* * * * * * *

That is the substance of Policeman Padron's testimony as to the identity of the parties doing the shooting. Of this witness it can be said that he was not a fleet witness; on the contrary, he was careful and conservative in statement.

In addition to the evidence of these eyewitnesses, Doctor Thorn, a practicing dentist in Brownsville for some thirty years—his house and office combined fronting on Elizabeth street between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets and extending back to Cowan alley—testified that on the night of the shooting he had retired, but had not gone to sleep; that he heard the firing in the direction of the alley, as he believes, at the end of the alley and Garrison road (that would be in rear of B Company barracks); that the shooting was from high-power guns, and when the raiders were in the alley, just outside his kitchen door, he heard the remarks: "There they go," or "There he goes;" he does not remember which, but it was one or the other of these expressions, and he heard the expression "Give 'em hell," another of the raiders adding, "God d—— him;" immediately there were a good many shots fired. In answer to the question—

Did you then, at that time, form an opinion in your own mind as to whether they were white men or colored men?

he replied:

Oh, I was satisfied, perfectly satisfied, that they were negroes from their voices, and to the further question—

You entertained no doubt of that?

he said:

No doubt whatever.

This witness did not leave his house during the night, on account of his mother, who lived with him, and who, as might be expected, was much excited by the shooting.

Mr. Charles E. Hammond, a former citizen of Illinois, and engaged in land development in Texas—that is, in the buying of lands, putting in pumping plants and canals, developing them for actual settlers—testified that on the night of the shooting he was stopping at the Miller Hotel in Brownsville; but when the shooting commenced he was at the King Building, just across Thirteenth street from the hotel, and as the shooting came up the alley he went to the hotel. After testifying to first hearing the shooting in the direction of Cowen alley and Garrison road and coming on toward the Miller Hotel, on arriving at the Miller Hotel he went into the sample room and stood near a window opening out on Thirteenth street. At that time the shooting seemed to be all around the hotel; that while standing there he heard a horse go by and he heard a negro say:

There goes the —— of a ——; let him have it.

This witness testified positively that the voice he heard was the voice of a negro. He further testified that he had had considerable experience in the handling of firearms, using both black and white powder, and he was confident that the guns used the night of the shooting were what are called high-power guns—that is, such as the Krag or Springfield rifles. Mr. Hammond also testified that he had no prejudice whatever against the negroes, stating that he had a negro in his employ bossing fifty or sixty Mexicans. The horse that Mr. Hammond heard pass the Miller Hotel was evidently that ridden by the lieutenant of police, and it is beyond question that it was regarding the lieutenant that the remarks to which he testified were made.

Mr. Charles B. Chase, a native of Massachusetts, a locomotive engineer for nearly twenty-eight years, on the night of the shooting occupied a room on the third floor of the Miller Hotel. His run on the railroad brought him to Brownsville on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday of each week; and he went to bed on Monday night—the night of the affray—about 9.30 o'clock, and was awakened by volley firing from in the direction of the barracks; that he got out of bed, going to the window, when he saw the lieutenant of police on horseback turn from Washington street into Thirteenth street and that he watched the lieutenant until he had passed under his window; and that just after he (the lieutenant) passed he saw two men come out of the alley back of the Miller Hotel, and when they got on the opposite side of the street they stopped and fired several shots, and as the bullets came whizzing around his window he "ducked his head" to get out of the way; and in a few seconds after there was another volley of shooting on Thirteenth street under his window. After the shooting was over he looked out and saw the horse of the lieutenant lying in the street. On being asked regarding the two men that he saw come out of the alley at the time of the shooting, he testified as follows:

Q. How many of these men was it you saw?—A. I saw two men.
Q. Two men; and they came out of the alley?—A. (Continuing.) Who I took to be soldiers, as they had soldiers' dress on—clothes.
Q. What did you mean by having soldiers' clothes on?—A. Well, they were dressed like soldiers, the same uniforms, leggings, and both dressed alike; wide rim hats.
Q. Did you have any doubt at that time of their being soldiers?—A. Well, I didn't pay much attention to them, but just like I always did, when I met a man on the street, if he had soldiers' clothes on I passed him as a soldier, and if he was dressed as a civilian I knew that he was a citizen, if he had citizens' clothes on; just the same as when I meet anyone down the street, I tell the difference between a woman and the man by the dress.

This witness further testified that the shooting commenced at or near the barracks and continued up Cowen alley past the Miller Hotel; that after the shooting Mr. Hammond, the last witness to whom I have referred, came into his room, and in answer to the question, "Who was doing the shooting?" Mr. Hammond replied, "The negro soldiers."

Mrs. Moore, the wife of the proprietor of the Miller Hotel, testified that on the night of the shooting she occupied the room next to the alley, one window of which opened on the alley and another in the direction of the post. Mrs. Moore is accustomed to the handling of firearms, from accompanying her husband on hunting excursions. She was therefore, as she testified, familiar with the sound of sporting rifles, but that the report of the guns that she heard that night was different from any which she had ever heard. The first shooting Mrs. Moore heard was in the direction of the fort, and it came up Cowen alley past her hotel. As the raiding parties were under her window she heard some one say:

Shoot him, the —— of a ——; there he goes, get him.

This remark was made just as the raiders passed out of the alley and turned into Thirteenth street. At this point, she says, the squad doing the shooting divided into two bodies, a number going down Thirteenth street and a part of them went right straight down the alley. Mrs. Moore was asked:

Q. But did you hear the guns when they were shooting—as though they were loading and unloading the guns?—A. It seemed like they were pulling it back, like a pump gun.
Q. Like a pump gun?—A. Yes, sir; we can pull a pump gun back, and this was the same, only louder.
Q. Like this [working bolt of Springfield rifle]?—A. Yes, sir; that is it. That is the crack.
Q. That is, a noise like pulling the magazine?—A. Yes, sir; that is it exactly. I never saw an army gun and don't know anything about the workings of them at all, but that is the way it sounded.

These answers were given by the witness upon hearing the peculiar sound made, an experiment being given of ejecting the shell of a cartridge from a Springfield rifle, in the committee room.

Anyone familiar with high-power guns and the peculiar noise made in the ejecting of the shells will give especial weight to the testimony of Mrs. Moore.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WARNER. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. The Senator from Missouri has been speaking now about an hour and a half. I notice that his voice is getting hoarse. I ask consent that he may cease now and continue after the routine business to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri may be permitted to resume his remarks immediately after the close of the routine morning business to-morrow morning. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WARNER. I thank the Senate and the Senator from Kentucky. I may say it is something unusual for me to be afflicted with such a cold as I have at the present time. It is with the greatest difficulty that I can talk at all.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 20063) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that it be read for amendments, and that the committee amendments be first considered, those in the bill and those which may be presented at the time of reading on behalf of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for the consideration of committee amendments, and that the committee amendments in the bill and those to be offered by the committee in the progress of the reading be first considered. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "General expenses," on page 2, line 5, after the word "dollars," to strike out "additional compensation for two assistants to the Engineer Commissioner, detailed from the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, under act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, two, at $500 each, and said assistants shall also act jointly as superintendent of the municipal building;" in line 11, after the word "secretary," to insert "who shall act as superintendent of the District building;" in line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and sixty" and insert "five hundred;" and in line 14, after the word "each," to strike out "two clerks, at $1,500 each" and insert "clerk, $1,600; clerk, $1,500," so as to make the clause read:

For executive office: For two Commissioners, at $5,000 each; Engineer Commissioner, $780 (to make salary $5,000); secretary, who shall act as superintendent of the District building, $2,500; two assistant secretaries to Commissioners, at $1,200 each; clerk, $1,600; clerk, $1,500; three clerks, at $1,200 each; clerk, $720; clerk, $600; messenger, $600; two messengers, at $480 each; stenographer and typewriter, $720; two drivers, at $600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 11, before the word "clerk," to insert "deputy property," so as to read:

Property division: Property clerk, $2,500; deputy property clerk, $1,600; deputy property clerk, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for property division, on page 4, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert "each;" and in line 3, after the word "dollars," to strike out "laborer, $600," and insert "two laborers, at $600 each," so as to read:

Two messengers, at $600 each; driver, $480; inspector, $900; inspector, $780; two laborers, at $600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand seven hundred and fifty" and insert "three thousand;" in line 9, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" and in line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred" and insert "one thousand," so as to make the clause read:

Building inspection division: Inspector of buildings, $3,000; principal assistant inspector of buildings, $1,800; ten assistant inspectors of buildings, at $1,200 each; one fire-escape inspector, $1,400; temporary employment of additional assistant inspectors for such time as their services may be necessary, $2,400; two civil engineers or computers, at $1,500 each; draftsman, $1,400; clerk, $1,000; clerk, $900; clerk, who shall be a stenographer and typewriter, $1,000; messenger, $480; superintendent of construction, $1,500; assistant inspector, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 23, after the word "dollars," to insert "principal inspector of plumbing, $1,400;" in line 24, before the word "assistant," to strike out "seven" and insert "six;" on page 5, line 1, before the word "at," to strike out "six" and insert "five;" in line 4, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "eight;" and in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "three hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

Plumbing inspection division: Inspector of plumbing, $2,000; principal inspector of plumbing, $1,400; six assistant inspectors of plumbing, one at $1,200 and five at $1,000 each; temporary employment of additional assistant inspectors of plumbing and laborers for such time as their services may be necessary, $1,800; draftsman, $1,350; sewer tapper, $1,000; three members of the plumbing board, at $300 each.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that be modified by the insertion of the word "assistant" after the word "principal," in line 23, page 4; in line 24, page 4, by striking out "seven" and inserting "five;" on page 5, line 1, by substituting "four" for the word "five," and after the word "each," in that line, by inserting "clerk, $1,200."

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 8, to increase the total appropriation for general expenses of the Executive office, from $100,764 to $102,504.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 9, page 5, before the word "hundred" I move to strike out "five" and insert "seven."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 12, before the word "dollars," to insert "five hundred;" in line 14, after the word "dollars," to insert "three dynamo tenders, at $875 each;" in line 17, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" in line 20, after the word "each" to insert "two lavatory attendants (male), at $660 each; two lavatory attendants (female), at $600 each;" in line 23, after the word "cleaners," to strike out "who shall also have charge of the lavatories;" in line 24, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "three hundred and fifty;" on page 6, line 3, before the word "watchmen," to strike out "five" and insert "six," and in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-one thousand two hundred and forty" and insert "thirty-seven thousand four hundred and eighty-five," so as to make the clause read:

For care of District building: Assistant superintendent, who shall be a stenographer, $1,500; chief engineer, $1,400; three assistant engineers, at $1,000 each; electrician, $1,200; three dynamo tenders, at $875 each; three firemen, at $720 each; three coal passers, at $600 each; one electrician's helper, $840; eight elevator conductors, at $600 each; two laborers, at $660 each; two lavatory attendants (male), at $660 each; two lavatory attendants (female), at $600 each; two chief cleaners, at $350 each; thirty-six cleaners, at $240 each; chief watchman, $720; assistant chief watchman, $660; six watchmen, at $600 each; in all, $37,485.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 1, strike out the words "seven hundred and twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 4, amend the total so as to read "$37,765."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 7, to increase the appropriation for fuel, lights, repairs, and miscellaneous items from $24,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 6, on that page after the word "lights," I move to insert "electricity, ice."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 8, to increase the appropriation for temporary clerk hire for preparing numerical book, etc., from $2,000 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 22, after the word "dollars," to strike out "assistant cashier, $1,400" and insert "two assistant cashiers, at $1,400 each;" and on page 8, line 6, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twenty-one thousand three" and insert "twenty-two thousand seven," so as to make the clause read:

For collector's office: For collector, $4,000; deputy collector, $1,800; cashier, $1,800; two assistant cashiers, at $1,400 each; bookkeeper, $1,600; two clerks, at $1,400 each; two clerks, at $1,200 each; three coupon clerks, at $900 each; clerk and bank messenger, $1,200; clerk, $1,000; messenger, $600; in all, $22,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three thousand six hundred" and insert "four thousand;" in line 17, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 24, before the word "and," to strike out "thirty-one thousand eight hundred" and insert "thirty-three thousand one hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For auditor's office: For auditor, $4,000; chief clerk, $2,250; bookkeeper, $1,800; two clerks, at $1,600 each; three clerks, at $1,400 each; three clerks, at $1,200 each; three clerks, at $1,000 each; three clerks, at $900 each; clerk, $720; messenger, $600; disbursing officer, $3,000; deputy disbursing officer, $1,500; one clerk, $1,200; one clerk, $900; messenger, $480; in all, $33,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 5, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" in line 7, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "five;" in line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert "law clerk, $1,200," and in line 11, before the word "and," to strike out "thirteen thousand three hundred" and insert "fifteen thousand," so as to make the clause read:

For office of corporation counsel: For corporation counsel, $4,500; first assistant corporation counsel, $2,500; second assistant corporation counsel, $1,800; third assistant corporation counsel, $1,600; fourth assistant corporation counsel, $1,500; stenographer, $1,200; law clerk, $1,200; clerk, $720; in all, $15,020.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert "hostler and laborer, $365," and in line 21, before the word "dollars," to insert "three hundred and sixty-five," so as to make the clause read:

For coroner's office: For coroner, $1,800; morgue master, $720; assistant morgue master and janitor, $480; hostler and laborer, $365; in all, $3,365.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 8, after the word "purposes," to insert "and the Wholesale Market Square," so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 12, to strike out "For sodding and planting with trees the Wholesale Market Square between Tenth and Twelfth streets on B street NW. near Pennsylvania avenue, $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the provision for engineer's office, record division, on page 11, line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "eight;" in line 23, before the word "dollars," to insert "two hundred," and on page 12, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert "each," so as to read:

Assistant inspector of asphalts and cements, $1,500; superintendent of repairs, $1,500; superintendent of trees and parkings, $1,800; assistant superintendent of trees and parkings, $1,200; assistant engineer, $2,200; assistant engineer, $2,100; four assistant engineers, at $1,800 each; one assistant engineer, $1,600; five assistant engineers, $1,500 each; one assistant engineer, $1,350.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred" and insert "one thousand," and in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "nine hundred," so as to read:

Chief clerk, $1,900; clerk, $1,800; clerk, $1,600; two clerks, at $1,500 each; permit clerk, $1,500; assistant permit clerk, $1,000; index clerk and typewriter, $900; two clerks, at $1,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 9, before the word "dollars," to insert "two hundred;" in line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eight hundred and forty" and insert "one thousand," and in line 14, before the word "dollars," to strike out "eighty-eight thousand eight hundred and eighty-two" and insert "ninety thousand and twenty-two," so as to read:

Inspector of gas and meters, $2,000; assistant inspector of gas and meters, $1,200; assistant inspector of gas and meters, $1,000; messenger, $540; in all, $190,022.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 16, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand seven hundred" and insert "two thousand"; and in line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "nine," so as to make the clause read:

Special assessment office: For special assessment clerk, $2,000; seven clerks, at $1,200 each; two clerks, at $900 each; and one clerk, $750; in all, $12,950.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "seven hundred and fifty"; on page 15, line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "nine hundred," and in line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "and twenty" and insert "four hundred and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

For teachers of the normal, high, and manual training schools promoted for superior work, Group B of class 6, fourteen in all, at a minimum salary of $1,900 each.

For teachers in Group A of class 6, 181 in all, at a minimum salary of $1,000 each.

Mr. BURKETT. Before the amendment is agreed to, I wish to offer an amendment to perfect it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a committee amendment?

Mr. BURKETT. It amends the committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska proposes an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 20, page 47, add the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter teachers shall not be promoted from Group A to Group B of class 6 until the maximum in Class A shall have been reached by such teacher.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is not agreed to. I think it would be a very unfortunate amendment if agreed to. The Senator from Nebraska devoted a great deal of time to the preparation of a school law which is now on the statute books, and which is working very satisfactorily in the main. One of the schemes of that measure was to promote, for superior qualifications, teachers from one class to another, and, as I understand the matter, it has worked very satisfactorily. I have not the schedule of the school law before me. Perhaps the Senator has it. If so, I would thank him to furnish it to me.

Mr. BURKETT. I will send it to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. In Group A the teachers enter at $1,000 and they are automatically promoted to $1,800. In Group B they commence at $1,900 and they are automatically promoted to $2,200.

The school authorities, acting under the provisions of this law, have encouraged teachers in Group A to qualify themselves for promotion into Group B, and the result has been that seven such teachers have been promoted during the last year. This bill makes provision for seven more teachers to be promoted for superior qualifications during the current year.

Mr. President, I understand that fault has been found with the promotion of one teacher from Group A to Group B, and very likely a mistake was made. The way this works is that a teacher receiving $1,500 may so qualify himself or herself by superior scholarship to be promoted into this class commencing at $1,900. I have in mind at the present time the fact that there are some teachers who have been giving their entire summer vacation during the past two years to attending college for the purpose of qualifying themselves for this promotion. Other cities are looking to Washington and taking our best teachers to places where they are given higher salaries and where this same system is operative.

Now, the Senator proposes that if a teacher receiving fifteen or sixteen or seventeen hundred dollars qualifies himself or herself, passing a very rigid examination, which Senators will find incorporated in the hearings before the Senate committee, that teacher, however well he or she may be qualified for promotion, shall not be promoted until the maximum of $1,800 is reached. I think that would work a great injustice to some of the best teachers we have in the city of Washington. Women who give up their vacations in summer time, who go to Harvard, who go to Columbia, as I have some in mind, and prepare themselves may be receiving but $1,600, but they come back and submit themselves to an examination, which is a very severe examination, and it is found that they possess every qualification for promotion into Group B. It will not work, it can not possibly work, very much harm, because in the bill as it is framed now only seven teachers can be promoted out of Group A into Group B during the next year.

I trust the Senator will not insist upon the amendment to the amendment. If there was danger, as was suggested in another place, that 200 teachers might be promoted in this way, there would be a valid reason for it, but as the bill is guarded, I feel sure that no possible harm can come to the schools if it is left as it is, and I conceive that harm would come to a few teachers of the very highest qualifications if the Senator's amendment should be adopted.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I dislike, of course, to disagree with the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia very much; yet as one who was chairman of the subcommittee that drafted the bill I am very anxious that the law shall operate just as it was written and as it was intended to operate. I ask the Senators present to consider just what this provision is, and then if they want the bill to operate as the Senator from New Hampshire has indicated, I am perfectly willing that it shall do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I meant—while I am on my feet—to suggest to the Senator that his amendment affects existing law and is clearly subject to a point of order; but I will reserve it, hoping that the Senator will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that I think it does not change existing law. That is what I am combating for; that it just interprets the existing law as it is, and also, further, that it only makes provision as to salary and makes no change in the provision of law.

When we drew the school bill we made an automatic schedule of salaries. We provided six different classes. We put every grade of teacher in a certain class and made it automatic, so that each year he would go up according to the promotions in that class. We made two groups of class 6—Group A and Group B. Group A begins with a thousand dollars and runs to the maximum of $1,800, with a hundred dollars a year promotion. Group B begins with $1,900 and runs to $2,200, with a hundred dollars a year promotion.

The law provided that the high school teachers should be placed in Group A—that is, that the maximum salary should be a thousand dollars, increasing the next year to $1,100, and the next year to $1,200, and on up to $1,800.

The law provided that the heads of departments should be placed in Group B of that class, beginning with $1,900 and going to a maximum of $2,200.

Now, after that had gone so far this statement was made to the committee, that there were teachers who were exceptionally bright and who would come up to the maximum of $1,800 and could not be retained, and if we stopped with the maximum on specially good teachers we would lose those teachers. So the committee put in this provision: We provided that when teachers get to $1,800 they could be promoted over to Group B, and thus have a maximum of $2,200 instead of $1,800. We put in this provision after we had provided what the salaries should be:

Teachers shall be promoted for superior work from Group A to Group B of class 6 only after oral and written examinations by the board of examiners upon recommendation as follows.

I will say that in making up the bill the committee had in mind that teachers would not be promoted from Group A to Group B until after they had reached the maximum of $1,800 in Group A, and that then they would be permitted to jump into Group B, provided they were specially desirable teachers and could pass the examination.

To show that the committee was careful that they did not want any big jumps in salaries all the way along through the bill the committee put in a provision like this:

That teachers of the normal, high, and manual training schools now receiving less than $800, who have not taught five years or more in graded or high schools, shall receive an annual increase not to exceed $150 until the minimum salary of class 6 is reached.

Over in another place we provide that in no case should a teacher be promoted more than one grade at any time. We thought we had it absolutely provided that there would not be any abnormal increase of salaries by reason of the bill.

Now, this is what occurred the first year the bill went into operation. In construing it the board decided that a teacher in the high school who could pass an examination as prescribed could immediately pass from Group A to Group B. This was the result: One teacher who drew a salary of $1,100, I believe, passed that examination and was at once jumped to $1,900 a year. I think it was from $1,000 to $1,900, an increase of $900 the very first year. She was a good teacher, I will say, one of the very best teachers in the District of Columbia, but one who had been teaching for $1,000 and less theretofore was immediately increased to $1,900 a year.

That so outraged those in the House who had been looking after this legislation that when the bill came up in the House they put in this provision. They intended to cut off that entire provision of the law and prevent teachers from being promoted from Group A to Group B. They put in the following—

No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be paid to teachers in Group B, in class 6, who are not heads of departments in high and manual training schools.

Hereafter no promotions or transfers shall be made from Group A to Group B, in class 6, except the teachers to be the heads of departments in high and manual training schools.

Thus eliminating altogether the possibility of a high school teacher being promoted to Group B.

Now, the committee of the Senate have struck out that measure, and they have provided that teachers can be promoted, but not to exceed seven in number in one year. It seems to me that a better way would be, I will submit to the chairman of this committee, to put in this provision, which will keep the law, as I certainly thought and intended it should be when it was reported in here and passed, that Group B should be distinctly for directors and for such teachers of the high school as had reached the maximum under Class A and were qualified by an examination. It leaves, in short, I will say to the chairman of the committee, the law exactly as the committee intended it in framing the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. The trouble with the Senator's contention, as I see it, is that the teachers in Group B are automatically promoted. It is longevity. A teacher may have reached the $1,800 class through longevity, and yet be a very ordinary teacher. There may be a teacher in that same class at $1,600 who, instead of going to Europe or taking a vacation in the country during the summer months has gone to college and qualified himself or herself so that he or she is a much superior teacher than the teacher drawing $1,800. Now, that teacher submits himself to an examination which is very thorough indeed, passes that examination, and demonstrates that he has superior scholarship, and he gets a promotion over the head of a teacher who does not possess the qualifications that the teacher who had been drawing a somewhat smaller salary possesses.

I think it is a most excellent provision as it stands in the law. I know there are teachers drawing smaller salaries than some others who, because of the fact that they have given their summer vacation to study in the colleges of the country, ought to be drawing superior salaries themselves. The board of education will exercise great discretion in this matter. There may have been one teacher promoted under a mistake; I do not know how that is; but of the seven teachers promoted, certainly six of them have deserved the promotion they have received.

Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withdraw his amendment. If not, as it changes the existing law, I am constrained to make the point of order against it.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator to this, that in making this schedule $1,800 is an unusually high maximum. Most of these teachers were increased in salary by the minimum of $1,000, and we put a minimum of $1,000 and a maximum of $1,800. We put that so high that it only could be reached after they had stayed in school and taken their promotion for a number of years, so as to make it an automatic promotion of $100 a year, until they reached $1,800, expecting that to be a very high salary for those who had served the District at least eight years.

To construe the law as the board of education have construed it, they have taken a teacher who has just come into the system, and they can do so next year. I am not disparaging any of the seven teachers who passed. I know most of them personally; we had them before the committee, and they are certainly very bright and deserving teachers; but with all that they are such teachers as it was contemplated should go along until they had reached the maximum $1,800 and then should be promoted to $1,900.

The Senator will observe that in drafting this amendment I have not sought to set the teachers back who have had this examination and passed into Group B. They are worthy teachers. It was only a misinterpretation and a wrong construction of the law, in my judgment. They took the examination as the law was interpreted, and they are there, and I have not sought to put them back into Group A; but hereafter I think we ought to adhere to the correct interpretation of the law, so that teachers can not go into Group B, with a maximum of $2,200 and a minimum of $1,900, until after they have been in the system long enough to have been promoted up to the maximum of the grade where they have gone in. For example, a student may come here from Yale or any other college. He starts in the high school at $1,000, which is a high salary to start a teacher at in a high school. He passes that examination, and at once jumps the next year to $1,900. That was not the intention of the law.

It was the intention of the law that if that teacher stayed here during the eight years and was deserving and became entitled to some recognition, then by this examination he is required to pass he should pass to the next grade in the group of $2,200 maximum. I always certainly like to yield to the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I do not expect the Senator to yield his judgment to mine.

But I can not give up my opinion in this matter because I know for what purpose that clause was put in, and I know that the interpretation they have given it was one that the committee never had any idea would be given it at that time. I know nothing of any teachers who are now preparing to pass this examination. I am not combating any teachers who want to have this promotion; I do not know who they are and it would not make any difference if I did, because I am certain that it never was intended, and I do not think it is proper that we should permit the law to be so construed as to increase a teacher's salary in one year five or six or seven or nine hundred dollars, as it is possible to do under the construction it is proposed to give to this law. So I want to put this restriction on the construction of the law. I think it ought to be there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment proposes general legislation and is obnoxious to the rule. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURKETT. Then the Chair has decided that my interpretation of what the law meant is not a correct interpretation, because, I will say to the Chair, that, if this is a correct interpretation of that law, the amendment would certainly be germane, for it would not change the law. I wrote the law, and I know what at that time I intended it should be.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the amendment manifestly changes the law. Under existing law, these promotions can be made, and the Senator from Nebraska proposes to change the school law so that the promotions can not be made. I think there can be no question that the amendment proposes to change existing law. I will say to the Senator, as he took so much interest in the school law, that, if there are any imperfections in it, he ought to bring in an independent bill here to amend it, and not undertake to amend it on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that the law provides how promotions shall be made—a step at a time—and that teachers shall go up to $1,800 step by step. That is the law. It provides that they may step from Class A to Class B in a certain way. It has been interpreted in another way; and teachers are now jumping from the bottom of Class A into Class B, instead of stepping from the top of Class A into Class B.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator inserted in his bill—and I think he wisely did it—a provision that teachers shall be promoted for superiority direct from Group A to Group B, class 6, not after they have reached the maximum, but only after oral and written examinations by the board of examiners. Mr. President, that is exactly what is being done; and the Senator from Nebraska proposes to change the law in that particular.

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; but the Senator will notice that on page 3 of the school law it is provided:

> That teachers of the normal, high, and manual training schools now receiving less than $800, who have not taught five years or more in graded or high schools, shall receive an annual increase not to exceed $150 until the minimum salary of class 6 is reached, when they shall thereafter receive the increase provided in said class.

That is all they can get. They can not get any increase in that class of more than $150. We put in that provision in reference to promotions from Class A to Class B, and I insist that in ruling this matter out of order the Chair has ruled that my interpretation of the law is not correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, knowing how much interest the Senator from Nebraska has taken in the school law, I am willing to have his amendment submitted to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire withdraws his point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, Mr. President, on page 47, in the same amendment, I move to strike out the first three words in line 19, those words being "fourteen in all."

I want to say, Mr. President, in support of that amendment, that while I think the other construction is proper and while I think we ought to adhere to it, nevertheless, if we are going to permit them to take this examination and qualify, let us not limit the number to seven, as this bill does. Let us throw it open to them all now, and give them all an equal chance. Let any teacher who wishes to do so take this examination. If you limit it to seven out of 200 or 300 of these teachers, somebody is going to have to pick out the particular seven. I do not think that anybody, as I say, ought to be promoted from $1,000 to $1,900 in one year.

I had in mind a teacher who came here from Chicago to accept a salary of less than a thousand dollars a year. When we put this law into effect we paid her a thousand dollars the first year, and the next year she jumped to nineteen hundred dollars, because she could take the examination. She is one of the most desirable teachers in the District, I will say, but she ought not to have that much promotion. She came here to teach for $1,000 a year. I say, if we are going to give them that promotion when they take this examination, let us throw it open and give an equal chance to every teacher. This bill proposes to limit it to just seven, and somebody has got to select those seven. I submit that if we are going to do that, if we are going to permit them to have these promotions, let us be fair to everybody and give them all an opportunity to take these examinations.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator's amendment should be adopted, it would cut off the seven that have already been promoted for superior scholarship, as well as prevent any further promotions of that kind. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. I submit it would not do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no question but that it will have that effect.

Mr. BURKETT. This is limited. There are seven, as the Senator says, who have passed and have already drawn their salaries. We provided for them last year. The fourteen are subject to that limitation, so that no more than seven are to take the examination. Now, if we cut out "fourteen" and take the limit off, anybody can get the $1,900 who passes the examination. I submit to the Senate that we ought not to say that there can not but seven of those 200 teachers take the examination. One or the other of these positions is wrong. We either ought to say that the first one of those positions is wrong, or we ought to say that anybody who can pass the examination should have this privilege.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 47, line 26, before the word "each," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For teachers in class 5, 143 in all, at a minimum salary of $950 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 2, before the word "each," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For teachers in class 4, 411 in all, at a minimum salary of $800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 5, before the word "each," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For teachers in class 3, 463 in all, at a minimum salary of $650 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 7, before the word "each," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For teachers in class 2, 336 in all, at a minimum salary of $600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 9, before the word "each," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For teachers in class 1, 58 in all, at a minimum salary of $500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 18, after the word "dollars," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

One at a salary of $975.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 21, before the word "each," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

Three at a salary of $950 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 22, after the word "dollars," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

One at a salary of $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 23, to increase the total appropriation for the salaries of teachers of the public schools, from $1,245,925 to $1,269,325.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 4, after the word "dollars," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For librarian in class 4, one at a minimum salary of $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 7, before the word "each," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For librarians and clerks in class 3, eight in all, at a minimum salary of $650 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 9, before the word "each," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For clerks in class 2, four in all, at a minimum salary of $600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 11, before the word "each," to strike out "per annum," so as to make the clause read:

For librarians and clerks in class 1, five in all, at a minimum salary of $500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 17, after the word "schools," to insert "heads of departments;" and on page 50, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "forty-two," so as to make the clause read:

For longevity pay: Longevity pay for director of intermediate instruction, supervising principals, supervisor of manual training, principals of the normal, high, and manual training schools, heads of departments, director and assistant director of primary instruction, directors and assistant directors of drawing, physical culture, music, domestic science, domestic art, and kindergarten teachers, clerks, librarians and clerks, and librarians to be paid in strict conformity with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia," approved June 20, 1906, $142,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in line 20, I move to amend by striking out the word "kindergarten" and inserting "kindergartens" with a comma after it. It is a very important amendment, although it may not appear so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, line 20, before the word "teachers," it is proposed to strike out the word "kindergarten" and insert "kindergartens" and a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 50, line 10, to increase the appropriation for allowance to principals of the public schools, from $31,680 to $32,680.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 5, to strike out:

No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be paid to teachers in Group B of class 6 who are not heads of departments in high and manual training schools. Hereafter no promotions or transfers shall be made from Group A to Group B in class 6 except of teachers to be heads of departments in high and manual training schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 14, before the word "teachers," to insert "all;" and in line 22, before the word "teachers," to insert "all," so as to read:

Hereafter the following rules for division of time and computation of pay for services rendered are hereby established: Compensations of all teachers, and librarians and clerks in the high and manual training schools, shall be divided into ten equal installments, one of which shall be paid for each school month, and in making payments for a fractional part of a month one-thirtieth of one of such installments shall be the daily rate of pay. For the purpose of computing such compensation and for computing time for services rendered during a fractional part of a month in connection with the compensation of all teachers, and librarians and clerks in the high and manual training schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 14, after the word "schools," to strike out "For night schools for pupils (and teachers and janitors of night schools may also be teachers and janitors of day schools), $10,000; for industrial and commercial instruction in night schools, including salaries of teachers, janitors, and equipment, and other necessary expenses, $5,000; for contingent and other necessary expenses of night schools, $800" and insert "For salaries of teachers and janitors of night schools, including teachers of industrial, commercial, and trade instruction, and teachers and janitors of night schools may also be teachers and janitors of day schools, $18,000; for contingent and other necessary expenses of night schools, including equipment and the purchase of all necessary articles and supplies for classes in industrial, commercial, and trade instruction, $3,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 9, to increase the appropriation for kindergarten supplies from $2,500 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 26, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "six," so as to make the clause read:

Of the McKinley Manual Training School, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 3, to increase the appropriation for the salary of one engineer and instructor in steam engineering at the McKinley Manual Training School from $1,200 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 13, to strike out "of the Wallach School, $1,000" and insert "Of the Wallach and Emery school buildings, one sixteen-room building to take the place of the Mott, and one sixteen-room building in the 'first division,' four in all, at $1,000 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 19, after the word "school," to insert "and annex," so as to make the clause read:

Of the Van Buren School and annex, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 22, before the name "Force," to strike out "Emery;" and in line 24, before the word "in," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "fourteen," so as to make the clause read:

Of the Birney and annex, Brookland, Curtis, Dennison, Force, Gales, Garnet, Grant, Henry, Johnson and annex, Peabody, Seaton, Sumner, and Webster school buildings, fourteen in all, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 55, to strike out:

Of the sixteen-room building to take the place of the Mott, and sixteen-room building in the "first division," two in all, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 4, after the name "Lincoln," to insert "Mott, Gage, New Langdon;" and in line 5, before the word "in," to strike out "two" and insert "five," so as to make the clause read:

Of the Lincoln, Mott, Gage, New Langdon, and Miner buildings, five in all, at $800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 8, after the word "the," to strike out "Abbott, Berrett" and insert "Abbot, Berret,' so as to make the clause read:

Of the Abbot, Berret, Sayles J. Bowen, Brightwood, John F. Cook, Cranch, Randall, Syphax, and Tenley buildings, nine in all, at $700 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 13, before the word "Cardozo," to strike out "Carberry" and insert "Carbery;" in line 15, before the word "Garrison," to strike out "Gage;" in line 19, before the word "Phelps," to insert "Petworth;" in line 22, before the word "Wilson," to strike out "Wheatly" and insert "Wheatley;" and in the same line, before the word "buildings," to strike out "Wormly" and insert "Wormley," so as to make the clause read:

Of the Adams, Addison, Ambush, Amidon, Anthony, Bowen, Arthur, Banneker, Bell, Blair, Blake, Blow, Bradley, Brent, Briggs, Bruce, Buchanan, Carbery, Cardozo, Congress Heights, Corcoran, Dent, Douglass, Edmunds, Fillmore, Garrison, Giddings, Eckington, Greenleaf, Harrison, Hayes, Hilton, Hubbard, Hyde, Jackson, Jones, Ketcham, Langston, Lenox, Logan, Lovejoy, Ludlow, Madison, Magruder, Maury, Monroe, Montgomery, Morgan, Morse, Patterson, Payne, Petworth, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, Polk, Ross, Abby S. Simmons, Slater, Smallwood, Takoma, Taylor, Toner, Towers, Twining, Tyler, Webb, Weightman, Wheatley, Wilson, and Wormley buildings, and one eight-room building in present eighth division, seventy-one in all, at $600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 25, before the word "Garfield," to insert "B. B. French;" and on page 56, line 1, before the word "in," to strike out "three" and insert "four," so as to make the clause read:

Of the B. B. French, Garfield, Thomson, and Woodburn buildings, four in all, at $420 each;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 5, after the word "Langdon," to strike out "B. B. French;" in line 6, before the word "Potomac," to strike out "Petworth," and in line 7, before the word "in," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "sixteen," so as to make the clause read:

Of the Benning (white), Benning (colored), Brightwood Park, Chevy Chase, Deanwood, Hamilton, High Street, Kenilworth, Langdon, McCormick, Orr, Potomac, Reno, Reservoir, Stanton, and Threlkeld buildings, sixteen in all, at $300 each;

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we have a very technical auditor, and he makes rulings sometimes in very inconsequential things that affect the school work. On page 56, line 13, after the word "schools," I move to strike out the comma. I do not see any sense in it myself, but it is insisted that it is important.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 56, line 14, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-eight" and insert "seventy-two," and in line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "eight," so as to make the clause read:

For care of smaller buildings and rented rooms, including cooking and manual training schools wherever located, at a rate not to exceed $72 per annum for the care of each schoolroom, $8,000;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 18, to increase the total appropriation for janitors and care of buildings and grounds from $100,600 to $105,820.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 6, to increase the appropriation for rent of school buildings, repair shop, storage and stock rooms, from $20,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 18, to increase the appropriation for repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds and for repairing and renewing heating and ventilating apparatus, from $70,000 to $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 20, to increase the appropriation for necessary repairs to and changes in plumbing in existing school buildings, from $50,000 to $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 4, to increase the appropriation for the purchase and repair of tools, machinery, material, and books and apparatus to be used in connection with instruction in manual training, etc., from $20,000 to $22,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eighty-five" and insert "one hundred;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That no part of this sum so appropriated shall be expended for gas at a greater price than 75 cents per 1,000 cubic feet.

So as to make the clause read:

For fuel, gas, and electric light and power, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 11, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses, including furniture and repairs of same, stationery, printing, ice, purchase and repair of equipments for high school cadets, etc., from $40,000 to $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 4, to insert:

For salaries of teachers and janitors, and for equipment and maintenance of school playgrounds, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 8, before the word "material," to strike out "Utensils," and insert "For utensils," and in line 10, before the word "dollars," to insert "five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For utensils, material, and labor, for establishment and maintenance of school gardens, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 16, to insert:

For purchase of apparatus for the physics department and the installation of electrical equipment in the physical laboratory in those high schools which do not possess the same, namely, the Central, Eastern, Western, and M street high schools, including conduits, switchboards with usual fittings, wires and wiring, terminal boxes, motor generators or dynamotors, transformers, resistance boxes, electrical measuring instruments, and other accessories and extra labor and other necessary items, $6,000.

For purchase of fixtures, apparatus, specimens, and materials for the laboratories of the department of biology and chemistry, and the installation of the same, including extra labor, $6,000.

Any unexpended balances in the "Act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1907 and 1908, and for other purposes, to rent, equip, and care for temporary rooms for classes above the second grade, now on half time, and to provide for the estimated increased enrollment that may be caused by the operation of the compulsory education law," is hereby reappropriated and made immediately available for the purchase, erection, and maintenance of portable schoolhouses for temporary use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 18, to increase the appropriation for complete equipment of the extension of the McKinley Manual Training School, from $60,000 to $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 18, to insert:

For completion of McKinley Manual Training School building as originally planned, to be immediately available, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, line 1, after the word "site," it is proposed to insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary stated the next amendment submitted by Mr. GALLINGER, which was, on page 62, line 14, after the word "ground," to insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary stated the next amendment submitted by Mr. GALLINGER, which was, on page 62, line 23, after the word "ground," to insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 62, line 10, after the words "Johnson School," to insert "or in the immediate vicinity thereof;" in line 12, after the word "addition," to insert "or annex;" and in line 14, before the word "including," to insert "or annex," so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of ground adjacent to the Johnson School, or in the immediate vicinity thereof, approximately 51,000 square feet, and toward the construction thereon of an eight-room addition, or annex, to said school, $50,000; and the total cost of said addition, or annex, including cost of additional ground under a contract which is hereby authorized therefor, shall not exceed $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 11, to insert:

For construction of a normal and model school building on lots 76 to 106 of Parker and Pulsifer subdivision of Columbia Heights, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to come in on page 63, after line 21.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after line 21, it is proposed to insert as a new paragraph the following:

For the purchase of lots adjacent to Phelps School, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 63, after line 21, to insert:

For purchase of lots adjacent to Phillips School, 21,000 square feet, $16,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 24, to insert:

For replacing wooden stairways with those of fireproof construction in the following buildings: Banneker, Logan, Ambush, Giddings, Phelps, Towers, Amidon, Jackson, Madison, Blair, Brightwood, Monroe, Takoma, Tenley, Blake, Carbery, Magruder, Phillips, Wormley, Van Buren, old part of Brookland, old part of Cranch, Potomac, Threlkeld, Hamilton, Woodburn, Benning, Langdon, Reservoir, Chevy Chase, Burrville, Birney Annex, and Reno schools, $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

For additional amount for "Repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds," for the purpose of fireproofing basement ceilings wherever needed, changing doors, furnishing suitable air checks and bolts for same, providing additional exits, installing electrical fire-alarm systems with necessary gongs, purchasing fire extinguishers and chemicals for replenishing them, and making such other repairs and alterations as may be necessary to secure protection from fire, $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available.

For fireproof construction in the following three buildings authorized in section 1 of the act of Congress approved June 27, 1906, providing for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1907, to wit, the sixteen-room building in the vicinity of the Mott School, the sixteen-room building in the first division, and the twelve-room building in the eighth division, $60,000, to be immediately available.

For the removal of old and unsuitable fire ladders and fire escapes and the erection of improved fire escapes in accordance with the recommendations of the chief engineer of the fire department on the following buildings: Thomson, Franklin, Gales, Polk, Henry, Peabody, Garnet, Towers, Central High, Wallach, and Eastern High schools, $11,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that that amendment of the committee, beginning on page 63, line 25, and ending at line 10, on page 65, be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. In place of the amendment just rejected, I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

For additional amount for "Repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds," for the purpose of fireproofing walls and floors around and over heating apparatus, fireproofing corridors, replacing wooden stairs with those of fireproof construction, removal of old and unsuitable fire escapes and the erection of improved fire escapes, and improvement of approaches thereto, improving exits, installing electrical fire-alarm systems with necessary gongs, providing fire extinguishers and chemicals for their use, and for such miscellaneous alteration and repair work as may be necessary to secure protection against fire in existing school buildings owned by the District of Columbia, $261,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and $100,000 of this appropriation shall be immediately available.

For fireproof construction in the following three buildings authorized in section 1 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1907, providing for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1908, to wit, the sixteen-room building in the vicinity of the Mott School, the sixteen-room building in the first division, and the twelve-room building in the eighth division, $60,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill. I made a report on this matter, and it seems to me, as I heard the amendment read, that amount is different from that recommended in the report I made. What is the total amount that is provided for fireproofing?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that the amount now in this bill is not changed by this amendment.

Mr. BURKETT. That is $261,000, and it seems to me the amendment provides for more than that. I reported on the matter this morning to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I will say to the chairman——

Mr. GALLINGER. Two hundred and sixty-one thousand dollars is the amount.

Mr. BURKETT. That is what I reported.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what the amendment embraces.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, line 17, after the word "one," it is proposed to strike out "and under a contract to be entered into with the said Institution by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I also offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, line 25, after the word "five," it is proposed to strike out "and under a contract to be entered into by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "For Metropolitan police" on page 67, line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred" and insert "one thousand," so as to read:

For major and superintendent, $4,000; assistant superintendent, with rank of inspector, $2,500; three inspectors, at $1,800 each; ten captains, at $1,500 each; chief clerk, who shall also be property clerk, $2,000; clerk, $1,500; three clerks, at $1,000 each; four surgeons of the police and fire departments, at $600 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 5, to increase the number of privates of class 1, at $900 each, from 105 to 150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 13, after the word "fourteen," to strike out "laborers" and insert "janitors," and in line 19, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two hundred and forty" and insert "three hundred," so as to read:

Janitor for police headquarters for July, 1908, $60; fourteen janitors, at $600 each; messenger, $700; messenger, $500; major and superintendent, mounted, $240; inspector, mounted, $240; fifty-five captains, lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, $300 dollars each; sixty-four lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, on bicycles, at $50 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 23, to increase the total appropriation for Metropolitan Police, from $915,293.35 to $959,393.35.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, line 25, after the word "cents," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter, in order that the full complement of the Metropolitan police force may at all times be maintained as authorized by law, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized, when vacancies occur in classes 2 and 3 of said Metropolitan police force, which can not be filled by promotion, to appoint privates of class 1, equal in number to the positions vacated in said classes 2 and 3, and the respective salaries specifically provided for such vacant positions may be reduced to pay the salaries of the privates so appointed in class 1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 69, line 5, to increase the appropriation for repairs to police stations, from $4,750 to $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-three" and insert "thirty-seven," so as to read:

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including the purchase of new wagons, rewards for fugitives, modern revolvers, maintenance of card system, stationery, city directories, and periodicals, telegraphing, telephoning, photographs, printing, binding, gas, ice, washing, meals for prisoners, furniture and repairs thereto, beds and bed clothing, insignia of office, purchase and care of horses, horse and vehicle for superintendent, bicycles, police equipments and repairs to the same, harness, forage, repairs to vehicles, van, and patrol wagons, saddles, and expenses incurred in the prevention and detection of crime, repairs to rented buildings, and other necessary expenses, $37,000, of which amount a sum not exceeding $500 may be expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 7, to insert:

For the reconstruction of cell corridors and the making, erecting, and placing therein in the first, fourth, and sixth police precinct station houses eight modern cells in each, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, after line 11, it is proposed to insert the following:

For house furniture and equipment for same, stable and improvements to grounds for station house to be erected in Anacostia, $32,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask a question. I find a provision that is new at the bottom of page 69, as follows:

Provided, That the War Department may furnish the District Commissioners for the use of the police, upon requisition, such unserviceable mounted equipment as may be required.

That is a new provision in the bill, and I have a little curiosity to know what it means.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume it is to save a little money to the District government. I imagine it is for the mounted policemen. The War Department may have some saddles and equipments of that kind that can be turned over. That is the way I understand it. It is a House provision, and I think that is what it means.

I offer an amendment to the amendment on page 70, line 12. It is to change the total.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, lines 12 and 13, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by changing the total so as to make it read "$94,280."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. For expenses of camps, including hire of horses for officers required to be mounted, and such hire not to be deducted from their mounted pay, and the accounting officers are directed to settle the accounts for camps, instruction, and practice marches for the fiscal year 1908 in accordance herewith, instruction, practice marches, and practice cruises.

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 10 on page 101.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 101, line 9, strike out the words "seven hundred and twenty" and insert "one thousand," so as to read:

For clerk, office of the adjutant-general, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, line 11, after the word "troops" to insert the following further proviso:

Provided further, That any of the moneys heretofore or hereafter appropriated for the District of Columbia Militia may be used to supplement specific appropriations or allotments which may be found insufficient for the purposes for which made, and authority is hereby given to supplement the regular ration by purchase of such aditional articles of subsistence as may be deemed necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 19, to insert:

Hereafter the purchase of supplies and the procurement of services for all branches of the District of Columbia Militia service may be made in open market, in the manner common among business men, when the aggregate of the amount required does not exceed $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Water Department," on page 103, line 7, before the word "dollars" to strike out "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand one hundred;" and in line 9, after the word "each" to insert "meter computer, $1,000," so as to make the clause read:

For revenue and inspection branch: For water registrar, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,100; clerk, $1,500; clerk, $1,400; four clerks, at $1,000 each; meter computer, $1,000; chief inspector, $1,000; nine inspectors, at $900 each; ten inspectors, at $800 each; assistant tapper, $825; messenger, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 103, line 17, after the word "dollars," to strike out "two clerks, at $1,000 each" and insert "clerk, $1,200; clerk, $1,000," so as to read:

For distribution branch: For superintendent, $3,000; draftsman, $1,500; foreman, $1,500; clerk, $1,200; clerk, $1,000; timekeeper, $900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, line 22, to increase the total appropriation for distribution branch, water department, from $79,660 to $81,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, line 10, before the word "horses," to insert "two motor trucks," so as to make the clause read:

For fuel, repairs to boilers, etc., and purchase and maintenance of two motor trucks, horses, wagons, carts, and harness necessary for the proper execution of this work, $42,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 18, on page 106.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 106, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy," so as to read:

That the expenditures hereunder shall not exceed $70,000 during the fiscal year 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 109, line 14, after the word "companies," to insert "market master, assistant market master, watchman, and one laborer for the wholesale producers' market," so as to read:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to employ * * * all necessary inspectors, overseers, foremen, sewer tappers, skilled laborers, mechanics, laborers, special policemen stationed at street-railway crossings, one inspector of gas fitting, two janitors for laboratories of the Washington and Georgetown Gas Light companies, market master, assistant market master, watchman, and one laborer for the wholesale producers' market, horses, carts.

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 110, after line 9, to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 8. That until and including June 30, 1909, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance, on the requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary from time to time to meet the general expenses of said District, as authorized by Congress, and to reimburse the Treasury for the portion of said advances payable by the District of Columbia out of the taxes and revenues collected for the support of the government thereof: Provided, That all advances made under this act and under the acts of February 11, 1901, July 1, 1902, March 3, 1903, April 27, 1904, March 3, 1905, and June 27, 1906, and March 2, 1907, not reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States on or before June 30, 1909, shall be reimbursed to said Treasury out of the revenues of the District of Columbia from time to time, within five years, beginning July 1, 1909, together with interest thereon at the rate of 2 per cent per annum on annual balances until so reimbursed: Provided further, That the Auditor for the State and other Departments and the auditor of the District of Columbia shall each annually report the amount of such advances, stating the account for each fiscal year separately, and also the reimbursements made under this section, together with the balances remaining, if any, due to the United States: And provided further, That nothing contained herein shall be so construed as to require the United States to bear any part of the cost of acquisition of land for street extensions, and all advances heretofore or hereafter made for this purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be repaid in full from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 102, line 22, I move to amend the amendment by substituting the word "shall" for the word "may," so as to read "shall be made in open market."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the amendment will be regarded as open to amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted on page 6, after line 5. I will say that if that is not the proper place, if the chairman of the committee will suggest a more appropriate point I will move to insert the amendment somewhere else.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

That the Brightwood Railway Company shall, on and after the 1st day of November, 1908, run its cars, in connection with the Washington Railway and Electric Company, through Ninth street to Center Market, from Takoma Park at intervals of not less than six minutes, the charge for fare to be that common to the street railways of the District of Columbia, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to carry this provision into effect.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is manifestly general legislation and subject to a point of order.

The Senator from Nebraska has heretofore given notice of his intention to propose an amendment of this general character. The amendment was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and by it submitted to the Commissioners for examination and report. I ask the Secretary to read the report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 28, 1908.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit the following on the amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BURKETT on the District appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1909, H. R. 20063, which you referred to them for report touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage:

The amendment proposed to require the Brightwood Railway Company to run its cars through Ninth street to the Center Market, from a point on Brightwood avenue opposite the Walter Reed Army General Hospital, on a six-minute headway.

The Commissioners are not possessed with the necessary data to be able to state in the limited time at their disposal on this matter whether a six-minute headway for cars of the Brightwood Railway from this point on Brightwood avenue, which is about four miles from the city boundary, is a proper headway to give satisfactory service at the hours of greatest traffic. It would certainly be unreasonable to require these cars to run on this headway at all times, as is provided by the proposed amendment, which, it should be noted, makes no allowance whatever for any suspension during any of the night hours. The Commissioners believe that legislation such as this should not be attached to an appropriation act, nor should it ever be enacted without a careful investigation, the means for which are not at present at the disposal of the Commissioners, to determine the amount of traffic concerned and the hours of the day at which the headway should be lessened and at which an entirely satisfactory service could be given with longer intervals between successive cars, all of which could be accomplished by the passage of Senate bill 5430, providing for regulating public-service corporations, which was introduced at the request of the Commissioners, with recommendation for its enactment.

Attention is further invited to the fact that this proposed amendment contains no penalty clause, without which the Commissioners would be possessed of no more authority to secure its enforcement than they now have under their general authority contained in the charter of the road to regulate its schedule, which they have found themselves unable to enforce by reason of this same fact.

The Commissioners recommend unfavorable action upon the proposed amendment.

Very respectfully,

HENRY L. WEST,
Acting President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am constrained to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BURKETT. I will ask the Senator to withhold the point for a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withhold it until the Senator from Nebraska can be heard.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I doubted whether the chairman of the committee would want to take the responsibility of this matter by raising the point of order. I rather thought he would prefer to let the Senate determine it.

The letter which has been read is characteristic of what the people of the District have been receiving in matters of this importance ever since I have been a Member of Congress. If there is any place in the District where people are being outraged, it is out here at Seventh street and Florida avenue, where these street car companies carry the people out and dump them out into the rain and mud and make them take another car to go out to the borders of the District. There are sixty-seven square miles in the District, and yet these street car companies are doing a thing which such companies are not permitted to do, I dare say, in any other town in the United States, within similar territory, and that is to compel the people to get out and transfer; in short, not running their cars through to the end of the line.

The District Commissioners come in with that letter and say they have not had time to consider it. I want to hurl it back at them that they have had opportunities by the score to consider that same thing in the last few years. There have been no less, by the record, than 500 people before the Commissioners, people who live out in that part of the District of Columbia, hammering at their door, trying to get recognition, that they might be heard and their rights given some attention. They have not only done that, but they have come with petitions and visits and personal interviews before the Committee on the District of Columbia and interviewed Senators individually for a year in an effort to compel the street car companies to run their cars out to the District line—and it is only four or five miles out to the District line—and yet all those people in Takoma Park and all up in that section of the country are compelled to change cars out here at Florida avenue.

The amendment may not be exactly in proper form. I will say, however, it was drawn by an attorney in the District who has a large practice and who, I think, stands very well at the bar. It may not be in proper form. However, in conference it can be adjusted. But this shows exactly what trouble the District has. You can not get any legislation through here that controls or touches anything with reference to the street car system that the managers of those companies do not O. K. We are in the ridiculous condition to-day of a town of 350,000 people walking a quarter of a mile to get to the depot because the general managers of the street car companies will not agree as to what particular kind of bill we shall pass.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would ask the Senator from Nebraska either at the present time or to-morrow, if it is convenient to him, to retract the statement he has just made about legislation relating to the street railways.

Mr. BURKETT. If the Senator will point out to me any legislation we have had which they have not consented to, I will retract it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no knowledge of their ever asking for any special legislation.

Mr. BURKETT. I have knowledge of the committee bringing a measure into the Senate, and the general managers interviewing Senators in the corridor one by one, and then the bill being withdrawn.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suppose the general managers had a right to be heard——

Mr. BURKETT. I do not doubt that.

Mr. GALLINGER. As much as individuals have a right to be heard.

Mr. BURKETT. They have a right to be heard in the committee room.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has no right to make a statement which impeaches the Committee on the District of Columbia and impeaches Congress; and I think he will see the propriety of withdrawing his language now or at some future time.

Mr. BURKETT. If the Senator will point out any legislation which has passed here within the last ten years against the consent of the railway managers, I will retract that. I want to know some legislation which has been passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. How much legislation has been passed through here on this subject, I will ask the Senator, during the last five years?

Mr. BURKETT. There has been a great deal asked for.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very little.

Mr. BURKETT. I remember when we had a tax bill with respect to these companies, and it was reported from the committee, and it was withdrawn on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a very unfortunate illustration. If the Senator will make an examination of the case, he will find that the street railway companies of Washington are taxed quite as much as other utility corporations and more than such corporations are in other cities of the country.

Mr. BURKETT. That may be true.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is true.

Mr. BURKETT. But the Committee on the District of Columbia reported that bill out after a good deal of hearing and put it on the Calendar of the Senate. I will say that.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was recommitted to the committee by a very large majority vote of the Senate, and it was not approved of by the committee when the facts were known.

Mr. BURKETT. That does not disprove anything I have said.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, well.

Mr. BURKETT. It proves what I have said, that you can not get any legislation through here without the consent of those people. Without any consideration that bill was voted back into the committee, as the Senator himself says. Ever since I have been in Congress, and I suspect ever since the Senator has been in Congress, these people in the suburbs have been hammering for this service, complaining because they have to transfer at Florida avenue.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I think if he will acquaint himself with the facts he will ascertain that there was a time, not far remote, when those cars were run through, and the citizens there protested against that system, and it was changed.

Mr. BURKETT. Yes; that was worse than this.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly.

Mr. BURKETT. That was worse than this.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have made the point of order, and when the Senator from Nebraska gets through I shall insist upon its being acted upon.

Mr. BURKETT. That is all right. I want to put the responsibility where it belongs. The Senator has not pointed out any legislation that we have been able to get here that touched one of these street railway companies. I undertake to say there are the poorest equipped street railway systems in the District of Columbia of any town of its size in the United States. There is not a Senator who will make an investigation who will not bear out that statement.

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of the statement of the Senator from Nebraska and in the general interest, I will ask what is the status of the legislation with respect to the construction of car lines leading to the Union Station?

Mr. BURKETT. Ask the chairman of the committee. We know that for several weeks the bill has been in conference. This morning the Senate was asked to disagree still further and send it back to conference, after the committee of conference could not agree. That is as much as I know. I do not know that anybody else, outside of the conferees, knows anything more. But that is the condition we are in with reference to legislation.

The other day there was in the city a prominent street car man, a man who owns a large share of a street railway system in another city, a practical business man, a man who would not exaggerate this thing. He spent a couple of weeks here. Speaking of the beauties of the city and of its development, he complimented it highly, except the street car companies. Street car man as he was he said, "There is not another town in the country that would permit the miserable equipment you have here in the District of Columbia." That was from a street car man. He spoke further of the overcrowded condition of the cars, and the fact that the street car system was not what it ought to be.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator where that gentleman lives?

Mr. BURKETT. The Senator knows where he lives. I told him about it. I talked with him privately about this matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suppose they have the overhead trolley system where he lives——

Mr. BURKETT. Yes, sir; they do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Which costs less than one-third to construct as compared with our system.

Mr. BURKETT. The Senator takes the figures that the general manager quotes all the time to us.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon. He has no right to make that statement.

Mr. BURKETT. That is the statement of the general manager.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make it on my own authority, and I have some knowledge with respect to it.

Mr. BURKETT. It does not make any difference about that. I have no hesitancy in saying that probably I would not have seen this gentleman if he had not come from the town in which I live. But I will say he is equally as good a man, I think, as any of the managers of the street railway companies here; perhaps no better and no worse.

But he is a man who knows the street-car business—not an underground system, to be sure, but a man who knows the street car, whether run by an underground trolley or an overhead trolley.

This is not a new thing, Mr. President. This has been before the committee, and we thrashed it over and received petitions for it. Every Senator here, perhaps, knows exactly where this difficulty is out here on Seventh street and U street. The Ninth-street cars take the people out there and dump them in the rain and mud, and where they have got to wait until the cars go to Takoma Park. It is intended to correct that, and that every six minutes the cars shall go out to Takoma Park without a change at U street. I think that is a fair and just proposition, and I think that anybody in these 67 square miles is entitled to a continuous car service to the District border. At most, it could not be over 5 or 6 miles from the heart of the District out to the District line. It is, perhaps, 4½ miles from Ninth street and the Avenue to the District line. It is a reasonable and fair proposition, and it ought to be done.

The Commissioners intimate that they have not had any consideration of it. They have been so hammered by these people out here that they should make some sort of a report and some kind of an investigation until they are getting heartily sick and tired of it. There are four different suburbs out there that have been holding public meetings and drafting resolutions and sending their representatives both here and to the Commissioners for the last three or four years, in order to get a special bill through, and they never have been able to get one through. I undertake to say that it can not be done any better than I propose to do it here as an amendment to the appropriation bill. I understand that it is new legislation subject to a point of order. If the Senator from New Hampshire wants to take that responsibility, well and good, but it seems to me he had better let it go before the Senate and let the Senate take the responsibility of standing between those people out there and the service they ought to have.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I take the responsibility and ask the Chair to rule on the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposes general legislation and is therefore in contravention of the sixteenth rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. I do not know the point where it would more properly come in, but possibly after the eleventh line, on the thirty-third page. If there is any other point in the bill which the committee would prefer after hearing the amendment, of course I am ready to conform to their wish in that matter.

I will state that the amendment which I am about to send to the desk is a copy of a bill which passed the Senate in the Fifty-ninth Congress, with the approval of the District Committee, after having been before that committee, and also with the approval of the District Commissioners, after having been referred to them and having had their report thereon. It was also put upon the District of Columbia appropriation bill in the Fifty-ninth Congress and was defeated in conference. I will ask that the committee agree to its being inserted in this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, after line 11, insert:

That the street in the District of Columbia now known and designated as "Brightwood avenue" shall hereafter be known and designated as "Georgia avenue," and the street now known and designated as "Georgia avenue" shall hereafter be known and designated as "Navy avenue."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. On page 84 of the bill, line 9, I move to amend by inserting after the word "thousand" the words "two hundred."

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is a very proper amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, line 9, where it reads "property clerk, one thousand dollars," insert after "one thousand" the words "two hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. That necessitates a change in the total on page 85 so as to read "$39,976" in lines 20 and 21.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The total will be changed accordingly.

Mr. BURKETT. I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 7, after line 8.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 8, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the board of assessors of the District of Columbia shall deduct from the assessments of taxes levied against such lots bordering on the District line in Takoma Park, from Chestnut street east on Eastern avenue, and on Cedar street near Eastern avenue, as are below the established sewer grade of that part of the District of Columbia, and which can not at present be provided with sewer facilities by the District of Columbia, an amount equal to the sewer tax actually paid by the owners of said lots to the town of Takoma Park, Md., for sewer service, not to exceed $10 for each house per annum. This deduction shall continue each year until such times as the District sewer shall become available. And the collector of the District of Columbia shall be authorized to collect said assessments less said deductions.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like the Senator from Nebraska to make some explanation of the amendment. It is entirely new to the committee, certainly to the chairman.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that this was handed to me and I was spoken to about it by a committee of Takoma Park people. Out in the Park in the edge of the District the land goes down. The District has not sewers built into that particular part of Takoma Park. I think there are ten houses there that can not get sewer connections and they have to go across the line to Takoma Park, Md., and pay for sewer connections. The amendment provides that there shall be deducted from the taxes an amount not to exceed $10 for each house on what they actually pay for connection to Takoma Park, Md.

Mr. GALLINGER. Upon the statement it seems to me to be a very fair proposition. At any rate we will look into it in conference. I am quite willing that it shall go in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. On page 30, line 8, I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty," before the word "thousand," so that if amended it will read:

Northwest. Sixteenth street, grade and improve, $50,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like the Senator from Montana to give some reason for that amendment. This schedule was worked out very carefully by the Engineer Commissioner in trying to do justice to the various sections of the city.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it will be recalled that some years ago—indeed, many years ago—certain property owners on Sixteenth street donated their property to the extent, I am informed, of $1,000,000 in value, with the understanding that Sixteenth street would be opened out to the District line. The Government accepted the donations and then proceeded with the slowest conceivable process of development. Up to this time the street improvement has not passed more than 200 to 300 feet beyond Mount Pleasant avenue. The development called for and understood at the time the donation of property was made, it seems to me, should be in good faith carried out, as far as the District is concerned. Twenty thousand dollars for the extension of this great avenue is equivalent to making no appropriation at all.

I call the attention of Senators to the condition of this great avenue, extending north from the White House. Anyone, I am sure, whose attention is directed to the street and who will take the pains to inspect the development there will perceive a systematic scheme carried out to repress development along the line the Government agreed to develop when it received the donation of the property.

This is the broadest avenue in the District. It is destined in time, whatever repressive forces may at present operate, to be the great avenue of this country. I am told that it is contemplated extending it to the battlefield of Gettysburg. It is 160 feet between the building lines of the street, and yet, sir, a bridge was established across Piney Branch, east of the park, congesting this great avenue down to 30 feet in width. At the same time a bridge was built across what is known as the "extension of Connecticut avenue," at a cost of something in the neighborhood of $1,000,000.

I do not wish to comment at any length upon the peculiar forces that have led to the strange discrimination in favor of real estate in the northwest part of the city of Washington. I fear it would be a line of comment unpleasant to hear as it would be ungracious to make.

I think the bridge across the Piney Branch on Sixteenth street should be the full width of the street instead of 30 feet—a constricted bridge across a very broad highway. I think the improvements on this street should be pressed forward with a degree of persistence, if you please, indicative of good faith at least on the part of the Government.

I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this state of facts: On Massachusetts avenue $25,000 is provided for improvements at a point beyond the limit of public ownership of the highway. Massachusetts avenue has not been developed; the right of way has not been procured by the Government for a portion of Massachusetts avenue beyond the Naval Observatory, and yet we go beyond this private holding of ground into the public commons, where there are no houses, no improvements, no need for street development, and appropriate the sum of $25,000 to continue the development of a street the right of way of which has not been procured from the center of the city to the point of development.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator probably is not aware of the fact that these appropriations for Massachusetts avenue have in view the opening of a highway to the great Methodist university that is being constructed, a highway that of necessity will have to be built in the near future.

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly. That highway is now open, Mr. President. But I am addressing myself to a street owned by the Government, the right of way to which has been donated by the people with the understanding that a development would occur. This is the main highway to the great Rock Creek Park.

I do not propose to urge at this time the amendment here proposed by any extended comment upon the curious conditions that have led to this repression of the Sixteenth street development, which appear grotesque upon examination, and the extraordinary expenditures that have been made to the northwest.

I shall follow this amendment, if it is adopted, by another providing that the bridge on Piney Branch, which proposes to limit this 160-foot highway to 30 feet by a bridge, or a culvert rather, shall be extended to the full width of the street. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am in full sympathy with the Senator so far as the bridge part is concerned. I think the bridge over Piney Branch is a grotesque structure. I suggest to the Senator that if he withdraws the amendment he has just offered and offers an amendment making a sufficient appropriation, whatever that may be, for widening that bridge, I shall not object to it. In fact I think it ought to go in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, perhaps, then, at the end of the line——

Mr. GALLINGER. You withdraw the amendment?

Mr. CARTER. I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana withdraws his proposed amendment.

Mr. CARTER. And I propose to add an amendment at the end of line 9.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, at the end of line 9, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the bridge, or concrete culvert, across Piney Branch on said Sixteenth street shall be constructed the full width of the roadway and sidewalk of said street, and the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. CARTER. I think, instead of saying that, it would be well to make it provide for commencing the execution of such an extension. I do not know that that would be sufficient for the purposes of such extension.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. That bridge has been completed but a short while?

Mr. CARTER. The bridge is not completed.

Mr. CLAY. It is completed, I think. I think the Senator is incorrect. I passed over it last week.

Mr. CARTER. As the Senator will recall, the bridge is, strictly speaking, a concrete culvert over the stream.

Mr. CLAY. The bridge is not as wide as the street. Sixteenth street is a very wide street and the bridge probably is not half as wide as the street. The bridge, though, is almost out in the country, not in the city. It is in the city, too, but it is in the edge of the city, where there are few residences. The Senator will find woods that have never been cleared all around that bridge.

It strikes me that if the pending bill has been before the committee of the House and they carefully considered it, and this item was not inserted, and now it has been before the committee of the Senate and the Senator from New Hampshire, who is a very diligent Senator, was chairman of the subcommittee to consider this measure, if it is proposed to insert an item to rebuild the bridge or to make it wider at a cost of $50,000 at least, a matter of this kind ought to have been considered by some committee. It is a very serious matter to submit to an appropriation bill that comes from the House to a committee, when that committee have gone over every item. We add to the bill a little over $3,000,000, and I submit——

Mr. GALLINGER. A little less than $2,000,000 I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CLAY. I think I am incorrect in regard to the amount.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to correct his view in reference to this matter not having been considered. The substance of this particular amendment was fully considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia in connection with the bill for the widening of Sixteenth street. It was regularly adopted by that committee and passed by the Senate, and a bill for the purpose is now pending in the other branch of Congress.

Mr. CLAY. A bill for the purpose of rebuilding this bridge?

Mr. CARTER. A bill providing for this widening purpose was passed by the Senate at the present session, after full consideration by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLAY. I regard Sixteenth street as one of the most important in the city, and as it grows doubtless the bridge will be widened, but now there are only a few residences near the bridge, and I understand there has been no estimate made by the District Commissioners in regard to this item. It does not involve very much, but certainly for us to take up a measure here now that has been refused by the Committee on Appropriations of the House and refused by the committee of the Senate and to adopt it without any estimate and without any investigation, it being out in the edge of the city, when there are pressing improvements in the city, in my opinion can not be justified.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Senator's statement will be corrected by him upon an investigation as to the facts. The subject has been considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia; it has been approved by the Senate, and it has never been rejected by a committee of the House. So the Senator's observations in that particular are subject to some modification according to the record.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, when the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate—and I presume the same thing occurred in the House—considered this bill, a schedule fixed by the District Commissioners of the improvements desired on streets was furnished to that committee, and the District Commissioners, having charge of the streets, made no estimate in regard to the change of this bridge. To say the least of it, we have not usually gone beyond the recommendations of the District Commissioners. In fact, the bill carries less than the Commissioners estimated, but, if I remember correctly, no recommendations whatever were made by them in regard to this item.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Congress of the United States has something to say about the management of the affairs of the District of Columbia as well as the Army officer for the time being charged with making estimates and determining how this city shall be improved.

I say to the Senator from Georgia the construction of this trifling bridge in the midst of that magnificent highway is an indefensible line of action from any point of view. Any Senator or intelligent person who will take the pains to merely gaze upon this trifling structure in the midst of that great highway will at once concede that some one either made an egregious blunder or there was some sort of job involved in an attempt to prevent the development of the city along the line of this great highway to the northward.

The Senator suggests that it is out in the country. Mr. President, that is the thing of which I complain. One of the great thoroughfares of the city has been throttled in the very edge of the city by some scheme, or policy, I had better say, which ought never to have been tolerated anywhere.

Just to the east of Sixteenth street we find Fourteenth street developed out for miles, but there is no way whatever of getting out on Sixteenth street, because the highway has been blocked at this point; and this trifling culvert has been in course of construction for a long period of time. The estimates have called for the sum of ten or twenty thousand dollars at a time, and thus the process of construction has been protracted on a highway which leads to the great Rock Creek Park, which unquestionably would have been used for residential purposes in the normal development of the city if the highway had been permitted to be opened. But it has been kept closed; and I am complaining of that course of conduct on the part of somebody; I am not prepared to indicate the person.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. CARTER. I am through.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the trouble has arisen from lapses on the part of the people who are more directly interested in Sixteenth street than some of the rest of us are. It is a great highway, and we ought to be liberal in the appropriations for it; but I remember very well when the appropriation was made for the Piney Branch Bridge. The bill was then in charge of the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and I feel sure that no person appeared at that time to argue that a larger appropriation should be made than was made at that time. I have looked at that bridge since it was constructed, and I have been persuaded that it is not a credit to the city. In contrast with the great bridge over Connecticut avenue—which is an ornament, and which, I think, ought to have been constructed just as it is—the bridge on Sixteenth street is an inconsequential structure, and beyond a question at some time it will be enlarged. If anything is to go into this bill on the subject, I will say to the Senator from Montana I doubt whether we ought to provide for widening the bridge to the extent of the street and sidewalk, as his amendment proposes. That, I think, would be much wider.

Mr. FRYE. The Connecticut Avenue Bridge does not do that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think even the Connecticut Avenue Bridge does not do that.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this is more akin to the bridge which crosses Rock Creek on Massachusetts avenue. It is nothing but a culvert; it is not a bridge in any strict sense of the word. It is to be covered over. It is a concrete arch thrown across Piney Branch, and the roadway is built up to the abutments on either side.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish the Secretary would read the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 9, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the bridge or concrete culvert across Piney Branch on said Sixteenth street shall be constructed the full width of the roadway and sidewalks of said street; and for this purpose the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, has the Senator from Montana any information or any estimates which have been made as to how much it would take to construct the culvert or bridge provided for in his amendment? Does the Senator think that $50,000 will complete this bridge and make it as wide as that street? The amendment provides that it shall be made as wide as the street. I will say to the Senator that, if we are going to improve this bridge or enlarge it, estimates ought to be made as to what shall be done and how much it will cost in order that Congress may act intelligently.

The Senator from Montana says that any Senator has the right to propose improvements in Washington. That is true; we all represent this District; but a Senator, in order to ask for improvements of this nature and character, ought to have the engineers under the Commissioners make estimates, which estimates ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia and be critically and carefully examined. We are here in the dark, making a guess as to how much it will cost to make these improvements, without a single plan ever having been drawn or without any estimates having been made by the District Commissioners. How can Senators stand upon this floor and know how much bridges will cost or how much it will cost to improve streets unless we have engineers to critically examine the streets and bridges and make reports to the Senate? Senators have not time to go and see bridges and examine them carefully and critically, and I doubt if any of us are as capacitated as are engineers to make estimates in order to act intelligently. Here we are asked to act in the dark and to appropriate this additional $50,000 without any estimate ever having been made by anybody.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia, if advised, as are members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, would very materially modify his remarks. I do not wish to engage in any controversy with the Senator from Georgia concerning the deliberations of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I have stated to the Senator from Georgia that this matter was fully, freely, and fairly considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and was provided for in a bill reported from the committee and passed by this body.

Now, in order that the Senator's suggestion that we are moving in the dark with reference to the widening of the bridge may be met, I will change the form of this amendment by proposing that we insert, in lieu of "$20,000," in line 8, on page 30, the sum of "$40,000."

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Montana withdraws his proposed amendment?

Mr. CARTER. I will only provide in the amendment for the widening of the street, without providing any appropriation in that particular at all. I do this to the end that the improvements, which are now in progress at that particular point, may henceforth be continued with a view to the widening of this bridge to the full limit of the street. I think this will prove economical; that it will be a guide to the engineers in charge of the construction at that point, and it will provide for an increase of $40,000 in the general expenditure instead of $20,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 8, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, what became of the other amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER]?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will permit me one moment, I propose an amendment at the end of line 9, leaving off reference to the appropriation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 9, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the bridge or concrete culvert across Piney Branch on said Sixteenth street shall be constructed the full width of the roadway and sidewalks of said street.

Mr. CULBERSON. That answers my inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. Let the amendment be voted on by the Senate, Mr. President. I prefer to have a vote on the Senator's amendment, as I desire to vote against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before that vote is taken, I recall some moments ago that the Senator from Montana proposed to strike out "$20,000," in line 8, page 30, and insert "$50,000" instead. Has that question been determined?

Mr. CARTER. That amendment I withdrew and substituted a motion to insert "$40,000" instead of "$20,000."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], on page 30, line 8, to strike out "twenty" and to insert "forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the second amendment offered by the Senator from Montana as a proviso on page 30, line 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would suggest, Mr. President, that the Secretary will, I think, have to change the total in those paragraphs on page 32.

Mr. CARTER. By adding $20,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Secretary can do that at his convenience.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 16268, being the pension appropriation bill. It will take only a few moments.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16268) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, line 2, to increase the appropriation for Army and Navy pensions from $150,000,000 to $162,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for Army and Navy pensions, on page 2, line 7, after the word "separately," to insert the following further proviso:

And provided further, That from and after the passage of this act all pensioners who may be inmates of any Soldiers and Sailors' Home, or other institution maintained by any State for the benefit of dependent or other disabled volunteer soldiers, shall have their respective pensions paid to them directly instead of to the treasurer or other officer of the home or institution at which they may be respectively located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 7, to strike out "For salary of one agent for the payment of pensions, $4,000," and to insert "For the salaries of eighteen agents for the payment of pensions, at $4,000 each, $72,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 12, to strike out:

For clerk hire, and other services in the pension agencies, $335,000: Provided, That the amount of clerk hire, and other services, and the salaries paid shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

And to insert:

For clerk hire, and other services, in the pension agencies, $435,000: Provided, That the amount of clerk hire, and other services, for each agency, shall be apportioned as nearly as practicable in proportion to the number of pensioners paid at each agency and the salaries paid shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 5, to insert:

For rent, New York agency, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 2, to insert:

For examination and inspection of pension agencies, as provided by the final provision of the act of August 8, 1882, amending section 4766, Revised Statutes, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall furnish free to all pensioners franked or penalty envelopes, properly addressed, to be used by said pensioners only for the return of their pension vouchers.

So as to make the clause read:

For stationery and other necessary expenses, $40,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall furnish free to all pensioners franked or penalty envelopes, properly addressed, to be used by said pensioners only for the return of their pension vouchers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RIO GRANDE RIVER BRIDGE, BROWNSVILLE, TEX.

Mr. CULBERSON. As it is a matter of some urgency, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6600) authorizing the St. Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railway Company to construct bridges across the Rio Grande at some point at or near the town of Brownsville, in Cameron County, Tex.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BAYOU D'ARBONNE BRIDGE, LOUISIANA.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FRYE. I will say to the Senator that the House of Representatives is preparing an omnibus bridge bill, and there are four bridge bills on the Senate Calendar that ought to be sent over to the House to-day.

Mr. LODGE. Very well. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6572) to authorize the Ruston, Natchitoches and Northeastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across Bayou D'Arbonne, in Louisiana.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COPPER RIVER BRIDGE, ALASKA.

Mr. KEAN. At the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6540) to authorize the Copper River Railway Company to construct two bridges across the Copper River, in the district of Alaska.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, MONTANA.

Mr. FRYE. There is one other bridge bill on the Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It is the bill (S. 6458) to authorize the Yellowstone Valley Steel Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River in Montana.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. That completes the list.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was ageed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 29, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 28, 1908.

[Continuation of the legislative day of Monday, April 20, 1908.]

The recess having expired, at 11.30 o'clock a. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21260, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-three Members are present; not a quorum. The point of order is sustained. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members, and the question will be taken on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 263, answered "present" 8, not voting 116, as follows:

For the session:

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RIORDAN.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, and the doorkeeper will open the doors. Pending the announcement of the vote, without objection, the Chair lays before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, whatever the regular order may be under the rules and the special rules, I call for it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the regular order.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the message of the President of the United States to Congress be now read in the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has not arrived yet, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The message has not——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to tell the message to the Speaker so we may have it laid before the House. He seems to go to the White House very frequently.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the motion prevails, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] will take the chair.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, when we came to the Sixtieth Congress in December the one uppermost and burning question in all our minds was that of currency reform. Nothing would satisfy us but the immediate appointment of the Committee on Banking and Currency, with the idea that something should be done at once. The committee was appointed, and the only committee appointed before the holiday recess. We were told that some measure was to be pushed through and written on the statute books without delay.

We were just emerging from a panic, confidence had fled, and we were in the midst of a business depression, from which we have not, by any means, yet recovered. It was hoped that some measure would be promptly adopted to reestablish confidence, as would have been the case in any other civilized country in the world. As time went on, however, we fell back into our old-time ways of doing nothing. Members lapsed into a lethargy, with the idea that the immediate danger had passed and that they could safely wait for the premonitions of another crisis.

It is all very well for us to sit here and hang back with the idea that our troubles are over, that business has resumed its full activities, and that prosperity is again in full swing. I tell you, Mr. Chairman, that our troubles are not over, business has not resumed its full activities, and prosperity is still an ignis fatuus.

Financial legislation has always been a dry subject for the average legislator. He has been willing that some one should do his thinking for him, and because those members of the authorized and constituted committee have differed so widely in their views it has left him in a very unsettled frame of mind, and on this account Members of Congress have come to distrust themselves upon the subject of currency legislation.

True it was that some of us foresaw what was likely to happen, and began to prepare for the worst. If we could not reach an agreement upon some affirmative measure, why, then we should have a general commission appointed to take up the subject.

I, myself, introduced a bill "to create a currency commission." It was carefully drawn. It had the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and many Members of the Senate and House. The committee gave me the honor of a hearing upon the bill, which resulted in laying my bill upon the table. I was told that the committee was competent to prepare a currency bill, and would report one to the House that would meet every emergency before the close of the session.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOVERING. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. Did not the committee do that very thing and on the 29th day of February make a report to this House?

Mr. LOVERING. On what?

Mr. FOWLER. On a banking and currency bill.

Mr. LOVERING. I spoke of a commission.

Mr. FOWLER. No, no; you said that they thought they could prepare a bill.

Mr. LOVERING. If the gentleman will wait, he will see that I have referred to that point and that I recognize that fact.

As I said at the hearing, I hoped they would do this, and if they did present such a bill as was satisfactory, I would gladly support it. I did not complain that the bill for a commission was tabled, for I thought it no more than fair that the committee should have every opportunity to perfect their own bill.

And still the time went on and no agreement was reached, and now the chairman of the committee has come round to the idea of a commission, though to my mind too large and too unwieldy to be practicable. If it had been designed to make it abortive and futile, it could not have been better conceived.

Meantime the Senate passed and sent over to the House the Aldrich bill, as a purely emergency measure, recognizing the fact that if a radically new financial system was to be adopted it would take time, and that work should be committed to a commission. As the Aldrich bill finally passed the Senate it was obviously in such shape that it could not pass this House without material amendments. I could not vote for it as it was. I would have been glad to have seen it amended, and would have voted for it, but I understand that the Committee on Banking and Currency has tabled it without any attempt to alter or amend it.

And now comes the Vreeland bill, which retains the best features of the Aldrich bill and extends the basis for currency circulation to commercial credits, in the shape of commercial paper, and I stand ready to support it as an emergency measure, still holding to the necessity of passing a currency commission bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I look at this question from a practical business standpoint; at least, I am trying to. With me it is a live question and a serious matter which concerns my personal business interests. It is no academic question with me. What do I see? More than 20,000 workmen in the employ of concerns in the management of which I and my family are interested working short time and some at reduced wages. It is of vital importance to us all that we should resume work full time at the earliest moment. This can not be until trade improves. Half a business always means a loss to every industry doing a half business in the country. You can not make a profit in running any concern half time, I do not care what it is.

Trade will not revive until confidence is restored. Confidence will not be restored until we have the assurance that no such crisis and panic as we saw last fall shall recur, and we can have no such assurance until we have written on the statute book some such law as the Vreeland or Aldrich bill to stand as a barrier between us and a panic.

It is amusing to hear the charge made that a panic is either a Democratic or a Republican panic. Crises may be the result of party action, and they may not, but panics will come as long as bad men are treacherous, as long as good men are timid, and as long as fools are reckless. A panic is an unreasoning animal instinct. Self-preservation is the first law of nature in man or beast. What so surely can prevent or allay a panic among people escaping from a burning building as the knowledge that there are ample and varied exits for escape? What so surely can allay a currency panic as the knowledge that an adequate supply of currency can be had whenever and wherever needed?

The other escape from the building may never be used, the other supply of currency may never be tapped. What would you say if you were down in a mine and there was but one exit of escape. You yourself, everyone of us, would be subject to panic, but if we knew there were other outlets, although they might not have been in use for years, it would at once set us at rest, it would at once allay the panic.

One word on the size of the commission proposed. Is it reasonable to expect that so large a commission as forty-three, drawn from all over the United States, can be got together and held for five or six months to attend to its appointed duties? If twenty-one men outside of Congress can be found who are big enough and capable enough to serve on such a commission, they would be likely to have such important interests of their own as to make it impossible for them to attend. A report and bill from such a currency commission, to have any weight with Congress, should be a unanimous measure.

I can not help feeling that there is a great deal more apprehension in the public mind on the subject of financial legislation than there need be. I do not believe that there is one, and only one, practicable workable plan that is possible. Indeed, I believe there are many plans that would be successfully operative either one of which might answer equally well every public need.

On the other hand, I do not believe that any financial scheme could be adopted in which some one could not pick flaws, and perhaps, to their own satisfaction, demolish. It all depends upon whether it was for their interest to pervert the use of a system to unlawful purposes.

The world has moved on since the days of Hamilton, and it is doubtful whether if he were with us to-day he could devise a scheme of finance that would close every door to modern cupidity. Conditions with which we have to deal are totally different from those presented to him. Men were not then the lawbreakers that they are to-day. Whether it was that they were better than they are now, or whether it was that they had not learned how to strain and break the laws, as we do, it matters not. This we do know, that no sooner is a law made to-day than the best legal talent in the country is employed to find some way to evade it, or to find a way over, through, or under it. In fact, the best paid lawyers to-day are those who can do what the late Sydney Bartlett said his client wanted him to do. He said:

> You want me to show you how to do an illegal thing in a legal way.

No sooner is a currency bill brought out than every banker takes his pencil and figures out how much extra money his bank is going to make under it. Yes; and if he finds that he is going to make a small amount, and that some other banker in some other section of the country is going to make more than he can make, why, then, that is a sufficient reason why he should condemn it, forgetting that the public needs are to be met, forgetting that his bank will profit by the facilities the public will derive from the increased issue of circulation, even though it be taken out by some other bank.

We have listened to several Members of the House upon finance, but, with the exception of Mr. FOWLER and Mr. WILLIAMS, we have had no affirmative propositions for currency reform.

We have listened in rapt attention to the very able and instructive essay of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] on "Financial crises," but we listened in vain for any plan to guide us out of the wilderness of our perplexities.

We listened to two very able speeches of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], and while they were overflowing with prophecies of dire misfortune if we adopted any of the measures proposed, yet he failed to indicate by a single word what should be done. Not a single constructive proposition did he suggest or advocate. He was forceful in his condemnation of every proposition that had been submitted to this House, with the exception of a commission. I do not propose to criticise these gentleman beyond calling attention to the fact that from men so well informed as they are we had a right to expect some proposition of an affirmative and constructive character.

I do not propose to criticise them, because I myself am disposed to leave the permanent reorganization of our financial system to a commission; but I do feel that some effective emergency measure should be adopted at this session of Congress.

I did not vote for four battle ships, because I do not believe there is any danger of a war; but I do believe there may be a panic, and, at all events, I would have at least one good financial battle ship in the shape of an emergency measure such as is proposed in the Vreeland bill. I shall, therefore, vote for this bill, and earnestly hope it may be adopted by this House. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman from Massachusetts exhaust all of his twenty minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman from New York exhaust a portion of his time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEAKE].

Mr. LEAKE. Mr. Chairman, there is a great discontent abroad in the land. It is not alone the discontent of disappointed men who have failed in their ambitions, but the complaint of our people that success in America is based upon dishonesty, unfairness, and special favoritism.

Have the American ideals of liberty and equality been limited only to religion, education, and political rights? Will the ideals be applied to industrial conditions? These are the questions uppermost in the minds of the American people. At the end of a period of unparalleled wealth we are confronted with extraordinary revelations of dishonesty in corporate management of railroads, banks, and industrial institutions, and with the profligate use of this quickly acquired and ill-gotten gain. Organized favoritism has been manifested in our legislation. Tariffs for protection have become tariffs for speculation. The maintenance of these privileges by enormous contributions to political campaign funds have all added to the distrust and created a hostility to all wealth and all enterprise.

Men generally agree upon the evils, but differ greatly as to the remedies.

The political parties are hopelessly divided. In the Republican party there are those who wish to continue the conditions which they have produced—all except the panic. These reactionaries are the leaders of that party. The boss system of legislation in this House is the product of their minds. They have made it a farce to speak of this body as representative. Notwithstanding this body is filled with right-minded, liberty-loving, and honest men, it is not representative of the people, but of the political party in control. That party to-day is an organized hypocrisy. Legislation is fixed up in the kitchen cabinet of the Committee on Rules. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Occasionally a pot of DALZELL'S soup is brought here with directions from his committee to "add twenty minutes of hot air and serve." [Applause on the Democratic side.] When the cook discovered that there were two independent boarders on the Republican side of the House who desired to join with the Democratic Members and taste some of the Grand Old Party concoctions before feeding them to their constituents, the Committee on Rules adopted the method of canning our legislation. Nothing is visible but the label. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If in a can of public buildings you have managed to grant away valuable property of the Government to a real estate speculator of Washington, it would not surprise me to awaken some morning and discover that in the lack of consideration, the absence of debate, the bringing up of bills without notice, we had disposed of the Washington Monument for macadamizing the streets to the Union Station. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No wonder the Members of the majority are objecting to roll call and being compelled to go upon record on legislation of which they know but little more than the title. The only safe rule for a Member of this House to follow is to vote against everything which has the approval of the Committee on Rules.

You have said several times that the Republican party will accept responsibility for legislation in this House. You know that you have never accepted responsibility. You refuse responsibility even for the present panic, notwithstanding you have been flaying this side of the House for the past fifteen years for similar conditions formerly existing. You know that you have always dodged responsibility and have never yet experienced the delight to the soul which comes from an honest confession. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The other day you brought in a bill which disclosed one of the family skeletons of your party. For the first time during this session the gentleman from Pennsylvania lost his nerve. Confronted with this ghost of the past he evaded the responsibility and imposed upon the gentleman from Wyoming the duty of bringing in the rule in the Oregon and California Railroad bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania is too good a historian to have forgotten the guilty creature of his own State known as the "Credit Mobilier," the scandal of the Vice-President, the Speaker, the whole Republican party, during the term of General Grant, and the gift of millions of acres of the public lands with large subsidies to the Pacific railroads. Is it possible that you have forgotten the inglorious expulsion which your party received from an outraged people? Have you forgotten that the grant of 3,000,000 acres of land to Mr. Harriman's railroad, the Oregon and California, was made at this time of perfidy in the history of your party? You will recall that the land was given to the railroad upon a solemn trust that it should be sold to actual settlers only at $2.50 per acre in tracts of not more than 160 acres to any individual. Any competent employee of the Government charged with the responsibility for drawing the patent deeds would have inserted therein a recital of the restriction, so that all persons who purchased from the railroad company would have notice of the rights of the United States.

I do not believe you will even accept the responsibility for this unusual neglect of your Land Department and its failure to insert any reference to the restriction whatsoever in patents granted by the Government to the railroad company since 1896. It certainly paid the Harriman road to have its proprietor known as "my dear Harriman" in the councils of the Republican party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He now has 2,000,000 acres of the public domain, worth about $16,000,000, and in all probability beyond the reach of the Government. If any chance existed for the Government to get back this public domain, your Speaker was prepared to have you authorize an amendment which would have extinguished altogether the rights of the Government. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.] If you will accept the responsibility for legislation here, I would like to know on what theory only bad amendments may be introduced to pending bills. My people, too, would like to know why a Harriman amendment is given preference to one which their Representative may desire to offer in their interest.

What a political millennium you would enjoy if you could continue this combination of the policies of the reactionaries and the stand-patters and their useful campaign funds, with the popularity of Theodore Roosevelt. What a joy there is in the thought! It will perpetuate the Republican party in power forever. It will necessitate, however, a change in your emblem from an elephant to a dog—that kind of a dog which barks and wags its tail at the same time, so that no one is able to know which end to believe. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

There is a day of reckoning coming for all this deception. The people have long ago made it unpopular to be a reactionary, and they are beginning to undeceive themselves about the President. I was one of the first of his Democratic admirers. His motives are known to be good. There is a power about the man which no one can overlook. His ambition extends to the ends of the earth, and the end of his energy is nowhere in sight. People from all walks of life have turned to him with their grievances. Citizens who have been knocking in vain at the doors of Congress and State legislatures for remedial legislation have turned to him in despair. He occupies to-day a position more similar to that of a monarch than that of an executive. The people are his people, and he is responsible for their domestic and commercial happiness and well-being. He is so firmly convinced that he alone can deliver the suffering hosts that he proposes to perpetuate himself in office by proxy. He has more than enough ability, but he lacks what is most needed in this new land—dignity, poise, and a respect for the few traditions of our land. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The founders of the Government were mistaken in their theories, according to the Roosevelt policy. The Constitution is a broken-down hobbyhorse, and the Supreme Court decisions should be written on White House stationery.

All this distrust, unrest, and discontent become mighty weapons in the hands of the demagogue. The man who uses the dishonesty of individuals, the injustice of industrial conditions to work upon the prejudices of the people, and to array one class against another, whether in a patriotic desire to serve his countrymen or for the purpose of drawing to himself a large following of personal admirers is the most undesirable citizen in the community.

The man who, in a misdirected effort to punish an evildoer, visits the vengeance of the law upon the great mass of innocent victims is the foe of progress. The Roosevelt policies are based upon the inherent dishonesty of mankind. They are absolutely false, and they are applied in a most dangerous and unfortunate manner. They overlook the principal causes of our evils—administrative and legislative inefficiency; and they seek to divert a righteous condemnation of Republican administration by the American people. They are about as useful as the substitution of unbuckling the crupper for the unchecking of a thirsty horse. In the first place the people need a rest, and when they have recovered from this Republican panic they need more home rule and less Roosevelt domination. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.] They need more of the Democratic principle of exact justice to all men and less Republican favoritism. They need the substitution of law for Roosevelt discretion. They need the emancipation of the House of Representatives. Drive the boss system from this House or you will have socialism. Give the people full representation in one branch of your Government or they will certainly lose respect for and they may overthrow all. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time has the gentleman consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed fifteen minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I wish the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] would consume fifteen minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have been a very earnest observer of the proceedings in this House for the last several weeks, and I have reached the conclusion that there is no mistake being made on this side of the Chamber in following the splendid lead of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is a fact that must be recognized by all of us that the time had been reached when a great many people failed to distinguish any difference between the Republican and the Democratic party. But these so-called "filibustering tactics" have served to emphasize the fact that there is an immense difference between the policies advocated by gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber and those upon this side. It has been somewhat amusing to me to observe the attitude of gentlemen upon that side in answering the demands of the country, especially in the demand for the placing upon the free list of wood pulp and print paper. I presume that at least 90 per cent of gentlemen upon that side, if compelled to vote upon that proposition, will vote in the affirmative.

I see by the papers some statement to the effect that there is now almost ready to break out on that side a complete rebellion against the Speaker and the leaders on that side of the Chamber. It is my judgment that the only consistent men on the Republican side of this Congress upon that proposition are the Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. They are standpatters, first, last, and all the time, and as the result of that fact they have the courage of their convictions, and they are determined not to permit this House to vote upon that proposition if it can be prevented. When the Speaker goes back to Vermilion County, Ill., and meets some old farmer after you have taken wood pulp and placed it upon the free list, the Speaker can say to him, "I was opposed to that proposition," when this same farmer will demand of him to know why the House took the tariff off of wood pulp and refused to take it off of agricultural implements.

But how about some of you gentlemen who would vote to take wood pulp and place it upon the free list, and yet do not demand that agricultural implements and other necessities of life be also placed on the free list? When you meet an old farmer and he says, "I see by your vote that you have voted to place wood pulp and print paper upon the free list, and yet I went down to town to-day and purchased a plow which cost me $20, and $4 of that $20 represents the tariff upon that plow. If it were not for this high protective tariff, I could have purchased the same plow for $16." How can you look that old farmer straight in the face and explain your position in taking wood pulp and placing it upon the free list, and yet doing nothing to relieve the burdens placed upon him?

On the other hand, we upon this side, speaking for myself especially, can consistently vote to place wood pulp upon the free list. Why? Because I do it from principle. I believe that all the things that enter into the necessities of life should be placed upon the free list, and the duties materially reduced upon many other things. To be perfectly frank and candid, however, I will say this, that if I could have my way about it, I would only make that law, when it is passed, applicable to Democratic papers and other papers which have consistently advocated tariff reductions all along the line. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I would be in favor of making it even higher upon the papers that have inconsistently, in season and out of season, told the American people that they are only made prosperous and happy by a high protective tariff which taxes everything on earth that they are compelled to use. But inasmuch as that can not be done, I would, of course, move to put wood pulp and print paper upon the free list and let all the papers in the country receive the benefit from it. But I do not know that the position occupied by gentlemen upon that side upon any of these propositions makes a great deal of difference. I think you realize that your lease of power in this nation is very nearly drawing to an end.

I believe that deep down in your hearts every one of you realizes that the next House will be Democratic, and that we will control legislation here. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I believe that many of you feel and realize that the next President of the United States will be a Democrat. Already I see advertised in the papers, some of them, through the current advertisements, where you are proposing now to dispose of the paraphernalia and other things that you have no use for when not in power, and you are preparing to vacate for the Democratic party. I want to read the notice which I received from a newspaper the other day. I do not know by whose authority it was inserted. It occurs under the usual heading:

PUBLIC SALE.

Great closing-out sale of the G. O. P.

Our lease with Uncle Sam having practically expired and having been notified to quit the business and retire to private life, we, the undersigned, will offer for public sale at our residence at the Capitol in Washington, D. C., commencing on November 4, 1908, the following described, property, to wit:

One elephant, branded on side G. O. P., about 45 years old.

One financial panic, old enough to be weaned. Sired by Wall street and damned by everybody.

[Laughter on the Democratic side.]

One Republican platform, as good as new, but never used.

[Laughter.]

One big stick, slightly impaired by overwork.

One Republican machine, the same being somewhat out of repair.

One financial system, well supplied with clearing-house certificates and no cash.

Five million Teddy bears.

Old empty dinner pails, and other articles too numerous to mention.

[Renewed laughter.]

Everybody, regardless of party affiliations or previous political servitude, is invited to attend this sale. It is expected that most of the articles herein mentioned will be bid in by the stand-patters, but every thing will be on the square and all articles will be sold. There will be no by-bidders. Possession of property will be given March 4, 1909. Roast crow will be served on the ground free by the Young Men's Republican Club. The sale will positively take place on the date mentioned, regardless of weather.

G. O. P. MANAGERS.
Colonel ROCKEFELLOW,
Colonel MORGAN,
Colonel HARRIMAN,
Auctioneers.

[Laughter.]

P. S.—If either or all of the auctioneers and the clerk are at the time restrained of their liberty by the court, others equally as good will be supplied on the day of the sale. Parties unable to attend the sale can send bids to either of the auctioneers, in care of the managers. All such bids will be treated strictly in accordance with the conscientious regard the G. O. P. always had for the dear people.—Stolen.

[Laughter and applause.]

So I presume from that that you are making preparations to vacate, and we serve notice now that we are all packed and ready to move in, and that after the 4th day of March, 1909, the people of this country will not have to petition, will not have to appeal in vain for legislation which they demand. We will take charge of the House and the Presidency, and you will find that the Democratic party will move on, the country will prosper, and that the panic will be eventually wiped out under our management. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. OLCOTT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 20471. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 902) authorizing certain extensions to be made of the lines of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, and the Capital Traction Company in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. LONG, and Mr. MARTIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I will not violate the rule that is generally practiced by undertaking to speak upon the appropriation bill. Before going to the particular subject I am going to confine myself to I want to say to my friends on the other side that I have had a great deal of comfort for lo these many weeks over the boasting and happiness that they have been enjoying in respect to the coming election, with the idea they are to be brought into power. I only want to say now that when the next Congress meets I hope to be here to extend my sympathy to them. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I will confine myself to the consideration of certain bills advertised as pension bills. My colleague [Mr. SHERWOOD] has chosen, under the pretense of advocating more liberal pension laws, to assail the Grand Army of the Republic, its commander in chief, Mr. Burton, and the National Tribune, a leading soldier paper published in Washington City and of wide circulation in this country. And he has also, in various ways, attacked the patriotism of this House and of individual Members thereof for not supporting his bills. And he has included in his attacks military Homes and their management. Neither the Grand Army of the Republic, nor its commander in chief, nor the Tribune or its editor, nor this House or its Members, nor these institutions need any defense at my hands against such attacks, but as certain bills, erroneously called "pension bills," are made the excuse for the unwarranted assaults, their true character should be stated. I shall speak plainly of them and of their deceptive and political character.

The attack on the Republican Members of the House for not supporting and passing his bills and the threatened consequences at the coming Presidential election for not doing so will be a sufficient excuse for my speaking of them without reserve and plainly of the methods adopted to secure their apparent approval from veteran soldiers of the civil war, not one of whom would approve either bill after knowing its true character. The procedure of my colleague in relation to his bills is, I believe, without precedent in Congressional history.

It is too late in the history of pension legislation to assail Congress or its Members or any party for lack of liberality in passing pension laws. My colleague's zeal in trying to aid the Democratic party on the verge of a Presidential campaign must have inspired him to introduce and exploit, through the press and by correspondence and by speeches here, to be sent out to the country, his bills as pension bills when they are not. They were evidently only introduced for political purposes and not for enactment into law.

They are without merit and will not have the approval of anybody who understands their real import and purpose. That there may be no mistake as to their character, I will refer to them somewhat in detail. They are not dissimilar. Neither is, nor purports by its title to be, a pension bill. Each undertakes only to create or enact a soldiers' roll. The first bill, H. R. 4038, introduced December 3, 1907, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, is entitled:

A bill to authorize the creation of the volunteer service roll.

The other bill, H. R. 7625, introduced December 12, 1907, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, is entitled:

A bill to authorize the enactment of a veteran volunteer roll.

Neither bill makes any provision for pensioning anybody. Both the bills, though separately, have been proclaimed and advertised by various ways and methods to the old soldiers as though bills to pension "all old veteran soldiers of the civil war at $1 per day." We shall soon see that if each bill as drawn was enacted into law it would not pension anybody at any amount; and that the "volunteer service roll" mentioned in the former, and the "veteran volunteer roll" mentioned in the latter bill would result in having two invidious and shamefully unjust rolls from which would be excluded the larger part of the disabled, most worthy, and longest-serving veterans of the civil war, many of whom were wounded in battle and served with credit much longer in the battle front than most of those who would be eligible to be entered on either roll. No veteran soldier of the Regular Army, nor of any other than the civil war, nor any sailor or marine of any war is to become eligible to either roll.

The author of the bills, in his recent speech here (February 26, 1908), described himself as a "plain, blunt old soldier" who appears "to speak a few words for 175,000 veterans of the civil war" in favor of his bills, "giving to every veteran who served eighteen months at the front $1 per day." What of the 633,339 disabled veterans of the civil war now drawing a pension for disability? We shall soon see how absolutely misleading this statement is. I quote further from his speech:

This movement is the most formidable movement among veterans since the close of the war. There never has been any movement like it. It is a spontaneous movement of the old soldiers without any organization whatever. This is the only measure that takes care of the veteran soldiers. All other bills that have been enacted by Congress were passed through committees appointed by the Grand Army of the Republic operating through committees of Congress. This bill is not a political pension bill. It is a bill that recognizes only service and merit.

He then follows with an attack upon the Grand Army of the Republic for having a salutary order that requires Grand Army of the Republic posts (not members) when acting as such to have—

Petitions, memorials, and resolutions by posts in regard to pension legislation forwarded to national headquarters through the department headquarters, and that posts be forbidden to make separate and independent application to Congress for legislation upon the subject of pensions.

This order is in pursuance of a resolution first adopted in 1884, and repeatedly since by the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, and published in the usual way in general orders of the commander in chief, as often before, without regard to my colleague's pretended pension bills, and without any knowledge of them or of their misleading character. The purpose of the attacks seems to be to try to demonstrate that the Grand Army of the Republic and its pension committees and friends have not the old veteran soldiers' interests at heart—that only my colleague champions their rights.

Then the National Tribune is assailed for recently printing this order, and the present commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic is viciously attacked because, as is assumed, he does not support the "dollar-a-day pension bill," and because (as the speech alleges) he "should have allowed the 'old boys of '61 to '65' the right of direct petition, at least." Neither he nor the order denies the "old boys" the right of direct petition. Then, in contradiction of his declaration, that the approval of one of his bills "is a spontaneous movement," and after declaring other things not justified by the facts, the speech continues:

I have labored side by side for the past six months with these old veterans * * * to create patriotic sentiment for this bill. And now, when it has already received favorable consideration by a majority vote of the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, to have this high official, who, above all others, should stand for justice and equity for these brave and constant soldiers, attempt to cripple our efforts for relief, has overwhelmed me with disappointment. And if this great measure of grateful succor to the comrades is killed in this Congress the old veterans will know where to fix a part, at least, of the responsibility.

The last clause of this quotation shows the real purpose for which the bills were introduced—that is, solely a political one.

The author of the bill in his speech further states "that this bill can be passed by this Congress without taking a single dollar of money out of the United States Treasury, simply by reducing the appropriations for the Army," and by mustering out the larger part thereof; that the bill "will only take about $17,500,000 the first year," and by "stopping the construction of two more of the useless battle ships that are to cost $20,000,000;" "by reducing the large appropriation for a standing army to maintain a government of force in the Philippine Islands;" "by reducing the enormous appropriations for continuing the work on the Panama Canal, a project (he says) now liable to prove the most expensive failure in all the centuries, * * * pronounced impracticable by the most capable engineers of England, France, Germany, and the United States." None of these statements are warranted by the facts.

He then refers to petitions and letters (quoting some of them) from veterans, and perhaps others, favoring the passage of the bills as though they were pension bills. The true character of neither bill is stated or explained in the speeches or in interviews or in the petition headings, or in any literature sent to the old soldiers, or to Grand Army of the Republic posts, or to the country; hence the numerous petitions, resolutions, and memorials so much boasted of here. Looking to letters and petitions my colleague presents here, we learn that the old veterans who signed them were led to believe that the bills propose "to give all the old veterans of the civil war $1 per day." The petitions presented by him generally show this. This mistaken notion is variously promulgated. I quote from his recent speech:

I have before me some of the petitions I have received from these old soldiers in favor of the bill that I had the honor to introduce, giving to every veteran who served eighteen months at the front $1 per day.

No such bill has been introduced by him.

There are other things of like tenor stated in this speech, which concludes with the now usual threat that the Democratic party will afflict the country by electing Bryan President of the United States this year. My colleague says this result is to follow because the Republican Members of this Congress will not pass his bills.

I may say in passing that Mr. Bryan's latest utterances (March 5, 1908) on pensions appears in the Nebraska Democratic platform, said to be written by him, which declares that his party favors pensioning "the surviving veterans and their dependents, because it relieves the country of the necessity of maintaining a large standing army." This is pure slander.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. KEIFER. What is your question?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I would like you to point out in my speech on pensions where I referred to Bryan at all.

Mr. KEIFER. I will ask the gentleman to read his own speech in the RECORD, and I will furnish him with a copy.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Bryan's name is not mentioned in that speech.

Mr. KEIFER. I will give the gentleman a copy of his speech and I will ask him to read it.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The gentleman misrepresents me entirely; it is not the speech at all.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, the Chairman must protect me against the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BUTLER). The gentleman will have to protect himself; the Chair can not make the other gentleman from Ohio hear.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I want you to tell the truth.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman had his day, and does not even know his own speech.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I challenge the gentleman to show a sentence in that speech in which I abused any gentleman of this House. It is not true.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman has had his day, and has misrepresented Members and his comrades.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I will take care of my comrades all right. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I challenge the gentleman to produce a single sentence in my speech in which I attack a single Member of this House. The gentleman can not do it, and I challenge the gentleman to do it. He can not do it, and I will furnish him with a copy of my speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is out of order.

Mr. KEIFER. The inference to be drawn from this reason for pensioning veterans is that they were, and our citizens are hereafter, to be moved to go to war by the promise, or the hope, of pensions, and that the patriotism of the American citizen-soldier depends on the amount of pension he is paid or promised, even though his country's call is to preserve the Union, to perpetuate liberty and to transmit it to posterity.

To show how shamefully petitioners have been imposed on as to the character of the bills, I quote some sample headings of petitions presented and referred by my colleague to committees of this House:

We, the undersigned Union soldiers, sailors, and marines of the war of 1861 to 1865, respectfully request you to use your influence and assist in the passage of the bill introduced by Hon. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD, providing for the payment of $1 per day to all soldiers, sailors, and marines.

It will be kept in mind that neither of his bills provides "for the payment of $1 per day to all soldiers," or any pension to any soldier; and sailors or marines are not mentioned.

Another heading:

We, the undersigned residents of Ohio, hereby petition your honorable body to pass the bill known as the "Isaac R. Sherwood bill," to give all veteran soldiers who served in the war a pension of $1 per day.

Neither bill pretends to put "all veteran soldiers who served in the war" even on a roll, nor to pension any of them if on the roll either bill would create.

I quote another heading of like misleading character:

We, the undersigned veteran soldiers, believing the pension bill known as the "Sherwood bill," giving to all veteran soldiers $1 per day, to be a just and meritorious bill, assure you that we would greatly appreciate it if you would use your best efforts for the passage of said bill.

So of another:

We, the surviving veterans of the war of 1861 to 1865, do humbly petition your honor to use your influence to secure the passage of the bill entitling the old soldiers of the war of 1861 to 1865 a pension of $1 per day. The bill is known as the "Sherwood pension bill."

Here is another heading:

We, the undersigned soldiers of the civil war, earnestly solicit your support in the passage of what is known as the "Sherwood bill," now before Congress, which provides for a pension of $1 per day for all soldiers who served eighteen months or over.

These headings say nothing about all veterans being excluded from the rolls who had not "served with credit" or "not less than eighteen months in the field with troops," or had been in the Regular Army, or commissioned officers. And they rarely disclose that all soldiers of the Mexican war, the Spanish war, the Philippine war, and of all Indian wars, and all sailors and marines of the civil war and of all other wars are excluded, nor do they advise the old soldiers, sailors, or marines who signed the petitions that in ascertaining the required eighteen months' service "in the field with troops" that time spent in instruction and reserve camps, in forts or other defenses, or on guard duty in the rear, in the Veteran Reserve Corps, in hospitals or elsewhere, and on furlough, and so forth, must be excluded in calculating the eighteen months' time limit, and it does not state that the soldier must serve this period "in the field with troops," and so forth.

I quote also the heading of a petition signed at the Minnesota State Soldiers' Home:

We, the undersigned veterans of the civil war and now inmates of the Minnesota State Soldiers' Home, humbly petition you as our Representative in Congress to support the bill introduced by General SHERWOOD authorizing the payment of $1 per day to all veterans who served in the Union Army and were honorably discharged therefrom.

This one shows the signers understood there was a bill to provide for "the payment of $1 a day to all veterans who served in the Union Army and were honorably discharged" without regard to time of service. It is needless to say that no such bill has been introduced here. Those who signed this petition were led to believe, as in other cases, that service of any kind and for any time, with an honorable discharge, was all that was required to get a dollar a day pension.

I quote still another petition heading:

We, the undersigned old soldiers of the civil war, hereby petition you most earnestly to pass the Sherwood bill, now before Congress, allowing all soldiers $1 per day during the term of service for the preservation of the Union.

This indicates that there is a Sherwood bill, not to pay an annual pension, but to pay "all old soldiers $1 per day during the term of service" in the Union Army. There is no such bill as this pending here.

Petitions with these and other misleading headings are presented here by my colleague as though they supported his bills. Singularly enough, the petitions do not refer to a "volunteer service roll" or a "veteran volunteer roll" as being included in the objects of the bills. There may be possible exceptions to this. But any kind of petition is good enough to forward the scheme. Nor is any reference made at all in my colleague's speeches to any sort of a roll. They create the erroneous impression that they were only bills to pension all veterans at $1 a day.

In his last speech he says all "Democratic Members are anxious" to vote for his bill. I do not believe they are anxious to promote his mock legislation—at least no Republican will. A number of papers denominated by him "petitions" were recently (April 2) filed and again (April 3) refiled here, as though different ones. They were first filed by the Clerk, as the RECORD shows, as "Petitions for enactment of H. R. 7625, a bill to authorize enactment of a veteran volunteer roll." Scarcely a petition refers to such a roll, or to any provision of either bill. On refiling the same papers my colleague entitled them—in his own words—as "Petitions in favor of H. R. 7625, known as the 'Sherwood bill,' to authorize the enactment of a veteran volunteer roll, at the rate of $1 per day."

Why this? What a curiosity! "A roll at the rate of $1 per day." Not one of the petitions are for any such nondescript roll, nor is the bill. This refiling is the first we hear of "a roll at the rate of $1 per day." He did not describe the petitions as favoring a pension bill, though substantially all of them are for a $1 a day pension.

A few sample headings of the petitions last filed must suffice for all:

DENVER, COLO., ETC.

To the honorable Members of the House and Senate.

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned citizens of Colorado, respectfully request the Members of the House and Senate to support the Sherwood pension bill, which proposes to pay the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1861 to 1865 the sum of $1 per day.

Respectfully submitted.

HENRY A. BUCHTEL, Governor of Colorado.
(And others.)

Another:

STOUTLAND, ME.

We, the undersigned soldiers, marines, and citizens, hereby petition your honorable body to pass the Sherwood bill, which allows each veteran $1 per day as a pension.

Still another:

AUSTIN, TEX.

To the honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned ex-Federal soldiers, who are now citizens of Texas, very respectfully petition you to pass the Gen. I. R. Sherwood bill, giving all ex-Union veterans of the civil war $1 per day pension.

And another:

A PETITION OF SOLDIERS OF THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

To the honorable Senators and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned citizens of Mississippi County, Mo., and soldiers in the United States Army in the war of the rebellion, do respectfully petition that you will enact into a law General SHERWOOD'S bill, pensioning the United States soldiers of the rebellion at $1 a day.

Somebody was highly successful in deceiving the governor of Colorado and others of his State, the civil-war veterans of Maine, Texas, and Missouri. So others of other parts. If the Sherwood bill should become a law how they would be disappointed to find nobody was pensioned. The marines of Maine who petitioned for the passage of the bill would cry aloud in their wrath.

My colleague says, as we have seen, there is a "spontaneous movement" in favor of his bills. Here is a sample of the spontaneity:

Hon. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD:

In accordance with your request to Thomas Grabey, Soldiers' Home, Michigan, we send you the following list of soldiers who have served over two years, to aid you in presenting your bill before Congress to allow them a pension of $1 per day.

HENRY P. ADAMS.

How Henry P. Adams became attacked with a "spontaneous movement" is thus made clear. Others were likewise similarly attacked. And lists thus obtained answer in many cases for petitions.

Anything goes for a Sherwood bill.

One paper, filed and refiled as a petition for the passage of his bill, consists of a letter to him, dated November 19, 1907 (before either bill was introduced), from the editor of the Union News, Barnesville, Ga. This letter is quite as relevant as the other petitions. It favors "giving back to the South the $50,000,000 which is known as the 'cotton tax' collected from the Southern States." Among the papers so filed and refiled there are large quantities of such irrelevant matter.

Some of the most important petitions named in the RECORD as filed by him can not be found, notably those from Dayton, Ohio, and Leavenworth, Kans., purporting to be signed by veteran inmates of the National Home for Volunteer Disabled Soldiers and its Branches located at these places. Others from other Branches of this Home do not correspond with anything on file, namely: Marion, Ind.; Johnson City, Tenn.; Bath, Me., and so forth. How these veterans multiply on these mysterious petitions, or have the petitions been padded, if they exist at all?

The petition from the home at Dayton, with 4,178 veterans, purports by the RECORD to be signed by 6,000.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. KEIFER. You said it in the petitions yau filed.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I did not. That is a mistake. I never filed anything of the kind.

Mr. KEIFER. You filed it in your own words. See the RECORD of April 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield to his colleague.

Mr. KEIFER. Another from Leavenworth, where they have 2,385 veterans, he says in his filed petitions was signed by 10,000 of them; from Marion, Ind., with 1,625 veterans, by 5,000; from Johnson City, Tenn., with 1,359 veterans, by 5,000; from Hampton, Va., with 2,275 veterans, by 3,300, and the one in Maine, with 1,821 veterans, by 5,000. There are other such exaggerations and discrepancies—to say nothing worse—between what is shown in the RECORD and the pretended petitions filed here. If any of you doubt this, turn to the RECORD of April 3 and you will see it in his own language.

Mr. SHERWOOD. That is not my mistake; that is a mistake of the printer.

Mr. KEIFER. No, sir; not a mistake of the printer.

Mr. SHERWOOD. If you will turn to the corrected report you will see it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has declined to yield.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I hope the gentleman does not want to misrepresent me.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no. Many petitions filed and refiled here were evidently signed on representations of the author that he had amended his original bill so as to include and pension all "enlisted volunteers in 1861, 1862, 1863, and 1864 and were later transferred to the Regular Army" and "to include all soldiers who enlisted as privates and were afterwards promoted to officers."

This I quote from an interview sent out by my colleague, found at the head of one of the petitions he filed. But no such amendment was made, and neither of his bills contains a provision to pension such volunteers. Such petitions were filed and refiled by him in support of H. R. 7625 as late as April 2 and 3. And still others were then filed and refiled, praying for the passage of that bill, reciting that it would pension every soldier and sailor of the civil war, the Mexican war, and the war of 1812—there is no pensioned soldier of the war of 1812 now living. Here is a sample petition of this class from Bury Hill, Ohio:

We, the undersigned soldiers and sailors of the civil war, do hereby heartily indorse the pension bill known as the "Sherwood bill," which allows $365 per year to every honorably discharged soldier or sailor of the civil war, the Mexican war, and the war of 1812.

My colleague vigorously assailed in his January 29 speech the ninety and hundred day men and Congress for pensioning them for disabilities, and then refers most pathetically to the "Hovey Division"—"Morton Boys"—who joined Sherman's army "at the opening of the Atlanta campaign at the average age of about 19 years" * * * "who served until the close of the war," who are not pensionable under the McCumber age-pension act.

He pretends to have a bill for their relief and for other veterans of like age. If his statement is accurate, not one of them could even get on the soldiers' roll mentioned in his bills, to say nothing of being pensioned. They did not serve in the Army eighteen months. That campaign opened in May 1864, and the war closed about one year later, when they were, he says, mustered out. How these 1864 surviving veterans must have wept if they read the pathetic appeal in their behalf, and how they will exclaim when they find they are never even to enjoy the empty honor of being on a roll! A more stupendous imposition was never perpetrated on worthy men, but old soldiers are confiding.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. KEIFER. Well, if you can confine yourself to a single question.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I think I am capable of as much thinking as you are.

Mr. KEIFER. Very well; I will not yield, if the gentleman is going to undertake to dictate to me. He has no time now.

Mr. SHERWOOD. You hold me responsible for the petitions of soldiers.

Mr. KEIFER. Petitions that you file as your own, in support of your own bills.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Your arraignment now is against the soldiers.

Mr. KEIFER. No; you are attempting to mislead them, if you want to know it exactly.

Not a petition supports either bill or favors a mere soldier's roll. All that is provided for in each bill. Every petitioner seems to have become such under a mistake as to the purpose for which the bills were introduced. The petitions do not favor any bill and should not have been filed.

I repeat that, so far as I can discover, not one of the petitioners favors or is ever likely to favor either bill. And it seems certain that no petition or memorial filed by my colleague was ever intended to favor a bill merely to create a roll.

This summary of the bills, the speeches of their author, and of the petitions gotten up under the guise of their approval and presented here by him I have made, so there can be no room for any doubt as to the character or the purpose of the bills. They are before the House, and Members can read and judge them for themselves.

I now propose to review their fake character as pension bills.

NOT PENSION BILLS.

One of the bills provides for an invidious "volunteer service roll" and the other provides for a like "veteran volunteer roll," and neither bill if, enacted into law without amendment, would provide, as already stated, a pension for any member of either "roll," or for any veteran, or for anybody. If a "roll" should ever be made up according to the provisions of either bill is should be styled "a roll to dishonor the great majority of the wounded, disabled, and worthy veteran soldiers and sailors of the civil war." All of the letters and petitions, as already appears, were signed on the mistaken belief that there was at least one bill which would give all veterans of the civil war a pension of $1 a day during their natural lives. Nor would the proposed rolls include the one-fifth, as I will soon point out, of these veterans. The two bills were introduced in December last, nine days apart. The earlier one—H. R. 4038—was referred, as before stated, to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the later one—H. R. 7625—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The title of each indicates, as heretofore stated, its object, and while in the body of each bill (section 2) there is something about paying to "each of the class hereinafter described, when entered upon such 'roll,'" money out of the Treasury of the United States, there is no class of any kind thereafter described to be entered "on such roll," or to be pensioned.

Section 1 of each bill describes one class to be entered on a "roll," while section 2 of each bill refers to each of two or more classes nowhere described. The substitution of the word heretofore for the word hereinafter would not make sense or transform the bills into pension bills. They are alike in this respect, and both must have been designedly so drawn. It will hardly, at this late date, be claimed they were both so drawn by mistake. Their author must have deliberately drawn them (one he caused to be reprinted in the RECORD January 29) and he used language to accomplish the political end sought; and he is supposed to have known their purpose before eulogizing them as pension bills in speeches here and through letters, interviews, etc., to the country, and before he presented, with a great flourish, petitions here favoring their passage as pension bills. There are provisions in the latter not found in the former bill, but the two agree in omitting to provide any class of veterans who are to take anything by any provision. The long time that has elapsed since the bills were introduced has been ample to discover and correct mere accidental errors in the use of language, and the failure of my colleague to point out in his speeches any error leaves us to conclude the language used is satisfactory. There are many things to suggest that the bills each express all that was intended. They have, so far, answered the purpose of exploiting for political purposes the matter of pensions for "all old veteran soldiers," though neither is a pension bill. In addition to not mentioning any class to become pensioners the bills are each unjust and invidious to the veteran soldiers and sailors.

Neither bill makes any distinction between soldiers disabled or incapacitated from earning a living and who still endure constant suffering incident to faithful service and those who were more fortunate, save to exclude in ascertaining the eighteen months' limit such of them as were off duty while in the service recovering from injuries or illness, unless they were discharged for such disability. There were on February 1, 1908, on our pension rolls on account of disability 633,338 veterans of the civil war. The author says his bills are to provide for only 175,000 veteran soldiers. All soldiers of the Regular Army, of the Mexican war, the Spanish war, the Philippine war, the Indian wars, and others are excluded, it must be remembered.

The earlier bill proposes to create a "volunteer service roll" composed of civil war veterans who served "with credit as an enlisted man not less than eighteen months in the field with troops" "between July 15, 1861, and July 15, 1865." This bill cuts out, in counting the eighteen months, the time (three months) volunteer Union soldiers served under Lincoln's first call for troops (April 15, 1861), most of whom reenlisted before July 15, 1861, and served with honorable records. What is the matter with these worthy first volunteers to respond to their country's call that they are to be excluded from the proposed "volunteer service roll?"

But the bill includes in counting time of service "in the field with troops" those who remained after all field service had ended and the war was over, up to July 15, 1865. The older veteran is not to have his earliest service counted, because he responded too quickly to the call to arms when his country was in imminent peril, and those retained on guard duty or in camps after the Confederate armies had surrendered or were disbanded are to be given credit for service "in the field with troops." And all enlisted men discharged for any disability, however slight, would be entered on the "volunteer service roll" as if they had served a full term of eighteen months, although they only enlisted, as many did, for three months or other short term of service, and although they did not serve ten days, were not permanently disabled, and were never in battle. A temporary illness and discharge without any actual service would, in many cases, suffice to get on this roll, while the veterans of many battles, many of whom are decorated with honorable scars received in bloody combat, would be excluded unless discharged for disability contracted in the service, and also those who, however long they may have served, belonged to the Regular Army during or since the war, or became commissioned officers.

In many cases a soldier in the civil war performed more efficient service, enduring more hardships, privations, and suffering in a short period of service than did others in four years or more of service. No account is taken in either bill of hardships, privations, and sufferings endured, or even of disabilities by wounds or disease incurred in the service unless the disability, great or slight, resulted in a discharge from the service. The wounded and sick soldiers who recovered and returned to duty are to be excluded unless they served "in the field with troops" for full eighteen months, their absence, wounded or sick, deducted. And, under the bill, if an old veteran served three years or more in the volunteer army in the civil war and it happened that he was by special detail on duty, however important or dangerous, or on guard duty in the rear in forts or defenses or in reserve camps or was engaged in guarding supplies, trains, and so forth, or a railway station, depot of supplies, a city, and so forth, enough time to reduce his service "in the field with troops" below eighteen months, he would be ineligible for the "volunteer service roll." If he were of that unfortunate class who were wounded or otherwise disabled and transferred to the "Veteran Reserve Corps" instead of being mustered out before he had served eighteen months "in the field with troops" then he, too, would be, under the bill, dishonored and held not worthy to be on either roll, however long or well he may have served.

There were many thousands in the Union Army who, like those of the Veteran Reserve Corps, were not mustered out on account of the wounds they received or the disabilities they contracted, but at the ends of their terms of enlistment, or at the end of the war. Many were thus mustered out who served more than eighteen months, if time spent in hospital or elsewhere suffering from disease, or in the rear in camps, forts, defenses, or guard duty, and so forth, was counted. All these are to be excluded.

Unless discharged for disability both bills require the time an old veteran spent in hospital or elsewhere recovering from disease to be deducted from his total service, and if eighteen months do not remain, he will be regarded unworthy to be on any "roll." And H. R. 4038 requires all the time an old civil war soldier was captive and in prison to be deducted from his entire service to find out whether he served "in the field with troops" eighteen months. Thus, time spent in captivity and prison pens must count to dishonor him. (The other bill is slightly different in this respect.) The roll would, if it reached 175,000, as my colleague states, be made up of many who, for want of opportunity or lateness of enlistment, were never in a campaign or a battle, and who did not meet the hardships and dangers of war. If an old soldier is alleged to have served without credit he would have to be acquitted of all infractions of duty or discipline before he could be placed on the roll, no matter how long or honorably he has served, and though honorably discharged.

This bill (H. R. 4038) is the one referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and the one my colleague boasted in his speech here that it had "already received favorable consideration by a majority vote of" that committee. After this exultant boast I was inclined to think the members of that committee had not analyzed or intelligently understood the bill and had acted on the same, or similar, information that misled so many splendid and patriotic old veteran Union soldiers, but I was relieved of the necessity of taking this charitable view of the personnel of that great committee by the information that it never had favorably considered the bill at all, and that it was never likely to do so. My distinguished colleague was mistaken wholly in his statement. I presume he was misinformed or misunderstood the action of the committee.

Information comes that my colleague has represented his bill (H. R. 7625) stands "on a tie vote, 8 to 8" in the Invalid Pensions Committee. This, I am assured, is not the case.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I never made such a statement.

Mr. KEIFER. Will you allow me to read some of your letters?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. I will read them later, not in this speech. I have some of those letters. My colleague tells us "this bill is not a political pension bill." Granted—it is not a pension bill at all, nor is his other bill. It is a shallow sham, a mere pretense for one. I have yet to hear of any Member of this House who has read it, save, possibly, its author, who is willing to vote for it. I will not gain any honor by prophesying that he will disavow both bills and claim there ought to be another and different one. The bills, however, have served their original purpose; at least they have succeeded in misleading some of the worthy and honest old soldiers and sailors into the belief that an effort was being made to pension all of them at "a dollar a day" when no such thing was proposed.

My other colleague [Mr. ASHBROOK] seems also to have been shamefully and grossly deceived, as well as the old soldiers, as to the Sherwood bills. In a recent speech here (March 17) he inquires:

> But why did Congress * * * remain indifferent to such meritorious bills as the Sherwood dollar-a-day bill?

I do not charge that his speech was solely for buncombe or for political purposes alone. It may have only been recklessly made. He ought, however, to advise the readers of his speech of his entire misinformation as to the bills he referred to and advise them that they were only mock pension bills.

The later bill (H. R. 7625), referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was not offered as a substitute for the one I have just discussed, and which was said, erroneously however, to have been favorably considered by the Military Affairs Committee. It was obviously introduced to catch other and additional "old soldier veterans." Its title shows its real object was "to authorize the enactment of a veteran volunteer roll" different from that proposed to be created by the other bill, denominated a "volunteer service roll." If the two bills would pass we would have two rolls for a few of the veterans, but the large majority of the real and meritorious old field veteran Union soldiers of the civil war and all soldiers of other wars would be ineligible to either. The later bill, it must be borne in mind, like the earlier one, provides no class of soldiers to whom "$1 a day" or any sum as pension is to be paid; and it differs from the earlier bill in only one or two particulars. It has about all the bad and objectionable features of the first one, and some more. It requires a veteran Union soldier, though honorably discharged, to have served "with credit" to be eligible at all to the "veteran volunteer roll."

And a volunteer Union soldier would be ineligible to either roll if he became a commissioned officer or "belongs or shall have belonged" at any time to the Regular Army, however valiant or long his service as an enlisted man has been, even though disabled while a private soldier in battle or by disease contracted in line of duty, and had served honorably "in the field with troops" more than eighteen months and had been discharged before enlisting in the Regular Army or before being commissioned.

What is the matter with the old veteran enlisted Regular soldiers, including the noncommissioned staff, who served "in the field with troops" during the civil war, many of them over four years, and what of such soldiers who were in the volunteer service, many of them two, three, and four years "in the field with troops," who later enlisted in the Regular Army or received commissions, and who are not now in any army? There are thousands of each of these classes. Their honorable service, according to both bills, works their disgrace and disqualifies them from either roll, and from any pension should a pension ever be granted those on the rolls.

And the men who first enlisted late in and after 1863 under President Lincoln's calls (including substantially all colored veterans in the Union Army) could get on neither roll unless allowed to count time served after the war of the rebellion closed, when there was no more service "in the field with troops." November 1, 1863, to May 1, 1865, would be exactly eighteen months.

But under the last bill, H. R. 7625, "the surviving volunteer soldier * * * of the civil war," a candidate for the empty honor of being on a roll, is allowed to count in making up his eighteen months' time of service "in the field with troops" such time as he may have been in the Army after the war closed up to July 15, 1866, covering a period of more than fifteen months after Lee surrendered (April 9, 1865) at Appomattox, and almost that long after the war had ended. This extension of time of service "in the field with troops" was to throw a sop to a class of soldiers (not included in the first bill) who were, for some reason, retained in the service after the great body of the grand Union armies had been mustered out and the Confederate armies had surrendered or were disbanded and the war had ceased entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio ten minutes more.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Well, make it short.

Mr. SHERWOOD. You say that I have written a letter saying that——

Mr. KEIFER. I am not going into the letter question now, because that would lead to a scandal that I do not wish at all.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I want to say that I have written no such letter, and you can not produce it. I challenge the gentleman to do so.

Mr. KEIFER. I will show it to you as soon as I get through.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The gentleman can not do it. He is misstating my position. I have never written any such letter.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman can repeat his statement as often as he pleases, but he will find the substance of it in the papers he himself filed here, calling them petitions.

And all veteran sailors and marines, however long and gallant their service may have been, are wholly excluded from any roll or from any possible benefits. There were 21,944 civil war soldiers and marines pensioners on the rolls June 30, 1907, for disabilities, not one of whom would receive any benefits under the bill.

It is fair to conclude that not more than 100,000 of the 633,338 veteran soldiers of the civil war on our pension rolls February 1 last, drawing pensions on account of disabilities, would be eligible to either rolls, and the other 75,000 (if so many) my colleague states would get on the rolls would be made up of soldiers under no disability.

What a roll of honor we would have which excluded the long-time battlefield soldiers of the Regular service; all such soldiers who may have served in the Volunteer Army two, three, and four years before they enlisted in the Regular Army or became commissioned officers; all soldiers who, by reason of wounds received in battle or other disability contracted in the service, were transferred for duty to the Veteran Reserve Corps; all soldiers who had been on duty, however long, other than "in the field with troops;" all soldiers who had been in camps of instruction or in prison so long as to prevent them from serving "in the field with troops" the required eighteen months; all soldiers who were mustered out at the end of their terms of enlistment or at the end of the war and not on account of disability who, on account of wounds or disease, were off duty at home or in hospitals so long as to prevent their serving "in the field with troops" eighteen months; all soldiers who were in the Quartermaster, Commissary, Engineers', Ordnance, or Medical departments, or in the Signal Corps, so much of their term of service as to reduce their actual service "in the field with troops" below eighteen months; all soldiers who, having enlisted late in 1863, and were mustered out at the close of the war, before they had served "in the field with troops" eighteen months, though they campaigned and fought at Mine Run (November 27, 1863), the Wilderness, Spottsylvania (May, 1864), Cold Harbor and Gettysburg (June, 1864), at Opequon, Fishers Hill and Cedar Creek (September and October, 1864) under Sheridan and Wright; at Chickamauga (September, 1863), under Rosecrans and Thomas; at Missionary Ridge (November, 1863), under Grant and Thomas; in the Atlanta campaign and in the march to the sea, under Sherman, in the spring, summer, and autumn of 1864; at Bentonville (March, 1865), and under Thomas at Franklin and Nashville (1864), and under Grant, Meade, Sheridan, and others at Petersburg, Five Forks, Sailors Creek, in the final campaigns and battles in the spring of 1865, and so forth; and all soldiers, even though they served and fought in some or all of these and other campaigns and battles, though two, three, or four years in the service as enlisted men, had been in reserve camps, and so forth, of instruction and had not served "in the field with troops" full eighteen months; all Army and naval officers, volunteer or regular; and all Mexican war soldiers, however long they may have served, however severely they were wounded or disabled by disease contracted in the service; all sailors and marines of all wars; also all Spanish and Philippine war veterans, and all veterans of all Indian wars.

The purpose of each bill seems to be to disgrace all volunteer officers of the civil war, all officers and men of the Regular Army and of the Navy.

This is a summary of the widely proclaimed bills under which all veteran Union soldiers and sailors of the civil war have been led to believe they are to be pensioned at $1 per day.

The honorable discharge of a Union veteran soldier, sailor, or marine, regardless of his length of service, puts him on a true roll of honor not to be detracted from by buncombe legislation, certainly not to be detracted from at this late day. Such a roll of honor is hallowed with patriotism, and by duty well performed, too sacred to be tampered with for the purpose of making political capital, or for any other purpose. [Applause.]

But treating the bills as pension bills, though they are not, and supposing that under them civil war veterans to the number of 175,000 would be pensioned at $1 per day, it would require an aggregate per year of $63,875,000 to pay them, subject to reductions for pensions some of them now receive, instead of $17,500,000 the first year, as stated by my colleague. He is unfortunate in all his figures. It would require a little more than $17,500,000 to pension at $1 per day 48,000 veterans. If all the old veterans of the civil war, as pretended, should be pensioned at $1 per day, the total number would probably exceed 700,000, and the sum required annually to pay them would exceed $255,500,000. But if the civil war veterans so to be pensioned should only equal those now pensioned, the number would be, as last reported (February 1), about 633,338, and the aggregate annual payment would at first be about $231,186,620, subject to reductions by the amount of pensions the same old soldiers now receive. The reductions and additions would probably for a while equalize each other.

Only about 100,000 of the number now pensioned, as we have seen, would be pensioned if the bills were amended to pension those who would go on the rolls. The average annual value of a pension of a civil war veteran is about $175, which would make the total to be deducted on account of this 100,000 from the aggregate $17,500,000, leaving still, under such a law, an addition to be paid annually of $213,686,620, more than fifteen times the amount my colleague states would be necessary and above $63,000,000 more than we now pay to all our disabled Army and Navy pensioners, including veterans, widows, minors, and all other classes, leaving the sums now paid other and disabled pensioners not very largely reduced. And, as has also been shown, the rolls proposed to be created would have on them at least 75,000 soldiers not now pensionable because under no disability. If they, too, should be pensioned at $1 per day, it would require a further appropriation of $27,375,000, which would bring the total additions up to $241,061,620 and the aggregate to be paid annually to above $350,000,000.

Following the line of retrenchment my colleague suggests it would be necessary to inaugurate to enable the Government to pay the $17,500,000 he estimates, it would become necessary, in order for it to be able to pay the real increase (about $200,000,000) that would result, to wipe out or cripple still other departments or branches of our Government and to put an end to other of its great enterprises besides, as he suggests, the Army and the Navy, and besides withdrawing from the Philippines in dishonor and disgrace, and besides abandoning the construction of the Panama Canal, the greatest single world enterprise of the ages.

Still regarding, for the purposes of this discussion, the bills as pension bills, we find, following the analysis of the bills already made, and regarding the whole number of veteran civil war soldiers who could possibly be eligible to rolls proposed to be established at 175,000 (the author's estimate), and making no allowance for changes in the number of civil war pensioners since February 1, 1908, and assuming that the whole 175,000 claimed to be eligible to the rolls were now pensioners, there would still be 358,388 of the disabled pensioned civil war veterans not on either roll, and therefore not pensionable under the bills, but pensionable, as now, on an average at less than half the others' rate. And following the same analysis, 100,000 is a fair estimate of the now pensioned disabled war soldiers who could get on the rolls under the bills, and the remaining 75,000 would be made up of soldiers who have now no pensionable disability either on account of wounds, of disease, or of age. There would still be 533,338 of the most worthy soldiers of the civil war—above five-sixths of those now pensioned for disability—who would not receive pensions at $1 per day should the bills be amended into pension bills and become laws. And no Mexican or Spanish war veteran, nor veteran sailor, or marine of any war, nor any veteran of any Indian war or of the Philippine war, nor any regular soldier of any war, nor any volunteer veteran soldier of the civil war who at any time became a regular soldier or a commissioned officer, nor any officer, volunteer or regular, would receive such pension. And others would not, though disabled and their service was distinguished in many battles and in campaigns of years' duration.

Verily the bills are not designed to provide a pension of $1 per day for all old veterans of the Civil War as they have been led to believe, nor are they bills "giving to every veteran who served eighteen months at the front $1 per day" as their author stated in his February 26th speech.

I believe in real pension legislation; not pretenses of legislation for partisan purposes. The Republican party has a record for liberality in pensioning not only civil war veterans but the Mexican and Spanish war veterans and the disabled soldiers and sailors and marines of all other wars and their widows and orphans. Since the civil war ended (1865) there was disbursed before the end of the last fiscal year to such veterans and their dependents $3,501,570,279.46.

At almost every session Congress passes one or more general, and many special, acts enlarging the pension roll, and increasing its value. From the time I first entered Congress (the Forty-fifth) in 1877 I advocated liberal pensions to the Republic's defenders in all wars. On January 5, 1885, (Forty-eighth Congress) I moved to suspend the rules here and to pass a Mexican war pension bill granting a pension of $8 per month to the—

Surviving officers and enlisted men, including marines, militia and volunteers, of the military and naval services of the United States who served sixty days in the war of 1846 and 1847 and 1848 with Mexico, or who, being enlisted as aforesaid, actually served with the Army or Navy of the United States in Mexico in said war, or were actually engaged in a battle in said war, and were honorably discharged, and to such officers and soldiers and sailors as may have been personally named in any resolution of Congress for any specific service in said wars although their term of service may have been less than sixty days, and the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men.

That bill then failed for want of a two-thirds vote, which stood 129 for to 85 against, in a Democratic House; and no Republican voted against the bill. Now, Speaker CANNON and other Republican Members besides myself, spoke and voted in support of my motion. Later a Mexican war pension bill was passed, principally through Republican votes.

Shortly after I reentered Congress (Fifty-ninth), I had to do with legislation doing away with the much-assailed "Order 78," relating to an age presumption of disability and making certain ages conclusive of disability, and later I favored and voted for the McCumber Act fixing the rate of pension of veterans 62 years of age, at $12; 70 years of age, at $15, and 75 years of age, at $20 per month, under which act about 250,000 veterans have now gone on the pension rolls either with an increase or as original pensioners.

We have passed a liberal widows' pension act admitting some widows not hitherto pensioned and increasing to $12 the monthly payment to widows.

I recently reported, and we passed, a $150,000,000 pension appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, and a deficiency of $15,000,000 is expected.

The attacks on Congress, or individual Members thereof, for a lack of liberality in granting pensions is a gross slander and without justification. When further general pension legislation is enacted it will be, as in the past, on just and liberal lines, recognizing all honorably discharged veteran soldiers, sailors, and marines, particularly the disabled of all our wars, and the widows and orphans of those who are deceased.

The true citizen soldier, sailor, or marine has not, in any of our wars, responded to his country's call to arms for pay, for bounty, or for the hope of pension, but to discharge his duty as a patriot who loves his flag and his country and to preserve and perpetuate the liberty and the blessings guaranteed by our Constitution and laws. [Applause.] He has gone forth to fight and die for his own sovereignty—that sovereignty which wears no crown save that of independence common to all citizens of our Republic. But, notwithstanding this, a deeply grateful country has cared for and will continue to care most liberally for all her war veterans and the dependents of those who have fallen in battle or have died of wounds or of disease. Let us not endanger the liberal discharge of this obligation by professions and pretenses or by proposing sham legislation, born of a political exigency, which can bear no fruit. The true friends of the now old, war-worn, battle-scarred, weary, and worthy veterans do not resort to such efforts. And these veterans will not regard with favor the mockery of a pretense of a tender of bread from a hand that holds only a stone. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I now yield thirty-five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. BYRD. Mr. Chairman, continuing along the line of my remarks a few days ago, I desire to say that we are upon the eve of a Presidential election, and of all the vital issues to be considered in this campaign the most important is whether we are to continue the doctrine of high protection or return to the policy of our fathers, who believed in taxation for revenue only and in equal opportunities to all men and all industries. It is to be hoped that our Republican friends are beginning to realize that their paramount policy, if it ever had a virtue, has now reached the limit of its usefulness, and that it is now destroying by overproduction the very industries it was intended to foster. It has been contended that the American markets should be monopolized by protection in order to guarantee our industrial development, but it is apparent that many of our tariff-protected industries have outgrown this monopolized market, and are struggling on the verge of bankruptcy for the want of a place to sell their surplus. This paramount policy of the Government for forty years has brought us face to face with an industrial crisis such as never before confronted any nation. In support of this statement let me say:

First, for quite half a century we have been separated from the consuming masses of the world by selfish laws, by an insurmountable tariff wall, our central idea of government being "American markets for American products." This unwise doctrine not only includes home markets, but extends to those of our insular possessions, and in another form it circumscribes our shipping industry. No foreign vessel is allowed to engage in our coastwise trade, nor is our flag permitted to float over any vessel not manufactured by domestic trusts; no material for the construction of the Panama Canal or other public work can be purchased without this wall of protection, and the limit is not yet reached, since there is now pending a joint resolution forbidding the transportation of supplies to Panama in foreign vessels.

Next, we are becoming flooded by overproduction. Having outgrown our home markets, we must look to other nations to consume our surplus products, which are yearly increasing by leaps and bounds. In 1896 they were $863,000,000 and $1,717,000,000 in 1906, an increase of nearly a billion dollars.

Next, this is indeed a day of world-wide commercial activity. European nations are vying each with the other in their efforts to monopolize foreign markets, having practically partitioned the continent of Africa, and by advantageous trade concessions have a monopoly of the trade of South America. Japan has complete control of Korea and has a jealous eye on all that part of China not dominated by England, while Russia, by taxation, is fast driving us from northern Asia. Should Europe and Japan, after having secured domination of the world's markets, do unto us as we are doing unto them by levying retaliatory tariff duties, what would become of our increasing surplus?

In view of these conditions—first, our increasing national selfishness; second, the marvelous increase of our products above home consumption; third, the world-wide activity of other nations in appropriating the world's best markets—how can our high protective policy appear otherwise than unjust, unwise, and indefensible?

In my judgment, the policy of protection never contributed to our national wealth. While upbuilding one section it destroyed another; in making Pittsburg it destroyed Charleston, Savannah, and other seaports; Pennsylvania may have developed under its hothouse influence, but it brought poverty to many other States; it has given multiplied millions to a favored few in some sections, while to the masses in other parts only trust robbery and high taxation. England has had free trade only a few years longer than we have had high protection, yet we find her 43,000,000 people congested within an area scarcely larger than New England, possessing a per capita wealth of $1,475, while ours is only $1,393, notwithstanding our national resources are tenfold more per capita than hers. Let me read the following table showing the individual wealth of the four leading nations:

England	$1,475
United States	1,393
France	1,200
Germany	727

From this it appears that highly protected Germany has only about half the per capita wealth of free-trade England. Then away with the idea that protection enriches a nation. [Applause.]

NO POLICY THAT ROBS ONE MAN TO ENRICH ANOTHER CAN INCREASE A NATION'S WEALTH.

Mr. Chairman, many wrongs have been committed in the name of protection. It is the author of 90 per cent of the trusts, that not only like highwaymen rob the masses, but destroy the laborer by refusing him bread-earning work with one hand and raising the cost of living with the other. Yet all of this pales into insignificance when compared with the injury done by closing the markets of the world to our increasing surplus products. It is wrong, indeed, to commit robbery in any form, but it is the limit of cruel injustice to rob a man and then deny him an opportunity to replace his loss, yet this is just what protection is now, and has been doing for the farmer for the last forty years. It forces him to not only yield up his hard-earned dollars to swell the coffers of the rich, but forbids him the privilege of feeding and clothing millions who are suffering for his products in other quarters of the globe.

No one making more than he can consume will prosper unless he can induce some one else to purchase his surplus. If he makes more than is needed in his own town or country, then he must have access to other markets or suffer all the evils of industrial congestion. The want of adequate markets has been the fate of the Southern farmer for many years; his great staple could not be consumed at home, and it has been begging for purchasers abroad.

Mr. Chairman, the seller always prospers when he has competitive purchasers. When there is only one purchaser, the latter names the price and takes the goods; when but few, they agree on the price and take them; but when many, they compete for the purchase, and the highest bidder takes them. Hence a wayfaring man, though he be a fool, can see the fallacy of circumscribing the American producer to the purchasers of an overcrowded home market. For forty years England named the price of our Southern cotton and took it; now she, Germany, and a few other nations agree on the price and take it. As to how it will be sold in the future, we can only conjecture, but one thing is certain, we can not hope for higher prices unless we find new purchasers by expanding our markets in other nations. Nothing is so vitally important to the cotton growers of the South just at this time, when the dawn of prosperity is breaking upon that long depressed section, as the removal of every obstruction circumscribing our trade zone. Since American cotton first attained importance as a commercial commodity, its producers have been compelled to look beyond the sea for a market for two-thirds thereof. In 1850 we made about 2,400,000 bales. One-third went into home consumption, one-third was purchased by England, and the balance by other countries. The same per cent of consumption at home and abroad has remained practically unchanged, for in 1906 we produced about 13,500,000 bales, of which we consumed about one-third, England practically one-third, and the world at large the remainder. Hence the time has never been when the Southern farmer was not twice as much interested in markets abroad as in those at home. This being true, is it not apparent to anyone that any obstruction thrown between the cotton fields of the South and the markets of other countries must result in much injury to this great industry?

It is an inflexible law of political economy that industrial development, under the protected home-market idea, reaches its limit when the demands for local consumption are supplied. For this reason our sawmill, shoe, cotton, and many other manufacturers are now waning and struggling for financial existence, having oversupplied the market at home and having only a meager one abroad. Twenty years ago the ring of the hammer building cotton factories might have been heard in nearly every city of the South, and their stocks were selling at a premium in nearly every market. But how few have been built in the last five years, and how many have gone into bankruptcy within that time? I know of several on the verge of financial ruin in my section, and a reputable gentleman from the South on yesterday told me that he could now buy the stock of more than one cotton factory in his vicinity for less than half of its value ten years ago. What a different picture is presented by the present prosperity and activity of the cotton-mill industry of other countries, especially England, as shown by the following extract from a bulletin just issued by our Department of Commerce and Labor:

The recent erection of new cotton mills in Lancashire has been without parallel in industrial history. In order to emphasize the marvelous extension in the productive capacity of the Lancashire zone it may be pointed out that the number of spinning spindles added within the last three or four years in the district of which Manchester is the distributing center and Liverpool the cotton-buying headquarters exceeds 10,000,000, with approximately enough new looms to take the increased yarn output. This development is all the more astounding when it can be truthfully said that the English growth is greater than the total number of spindles operated in either Germany, India, Russia, France, or any other country in the world except the United States, and that the total spindleage of our Southern States does not reach the growth in Lancashire since 1900. And no end seems to be in sight, for new mills are projected almost every week. Some halt in the movement is evident, but that is only due to the fact that cotton machinery makers have their output sold so far ahead that it is impossible to obtain the deliveries for new mills for one year or more to come. Nor have other manufacturing countries been at a standstill. Continental Europe and Japan and India have been abnormally active in mill building.

Permit me to read further from the same bulletin:

It has been estimated that prior to the present unprecedented boom in the British cotton-mill building the normal increase in the world's consumption of cotton was approximately 400,000 bales annually. If we add to this only a part of the abnormally increased British and other requirements, we get at least 1,500,000 more bales needed each crop year than the spindles could previously consume.

Let me ask every Republican on this floor why this difference in the prosperity of England's free industry and our protected industry? Do you not know that it is because she has unlimited markets, while we have practically none? We have a congesting surplus of cotton goods; she has none. In 1906 she sold abroad $600,000,000 of her cotton goods, while we only sold $53,305,412, or less than one-eleventh of that amount. Her factories are running day and night, while ours are shutting down for the want of purchasers for their products. Ought not this showing to convince any person that the ultimate result of protection is the destruction of the very industries it pretends to protect?

Mr. Chairman, unless we abandon this policy of national exclusiveness, or otherwise find markets for our manufactured cotton goods, the South will be compelled to endure perpetually the loss of more than one-half the value of her greatest crop by having to continue to export it as raw material. It is an economic axiom that a country exporting largely her raw material never becomes rich. Only about 3 per cent of England's exports are in the raw state, while the German and French never permit a raw product to leave their shores if there is any possible method of increasing its value by shaping it into some useful product. The manufacturing and commercial nations have always dominated the wealth of the world, and all nations except the United States expand their commerce in the same ratio they increase their factories. We have developed the latter to the destruction of the former. We now export about 65 per cent of our cotton in the raw state, thereby losing to the nation multiplied millions of wealth. This wonderful crop, if utilized by this as it is by other countries, would not only prove to be our greatest source of national wealth, but would develop a great section and provide a support for an additional five or ten millions of people.

Why is this great wealth-giving product not manufactured at home and sent abroad in useful fabrics, or why do we give other nations the heart of the nut while we keep the rind? There must be some well-founded reason for this economic imbecility. We are rich—able to build all the cotton factories of Europe—possess in our mountain streams natural power sufficient to turn every spindle of the world, and have brains, mechanical ingenuity, and energy equal to any nation. Then why do our surplus millions seek doubtful investment in foreign countries rather than in cotton factories at home? There is, or can be, but one answer, and that is, we "hath not where" to sell the fabrics when made. Flooded at home by overproduction and outlawed by our selfishness abroad we are indeed in a helpless and hopeless condition. If we only had the English foreign markets in which she sold the 6,000,000,000 yards of cotton goods in 1906, but few bales of raw cotton would ever leave our southern shores. The whir of the spindle would be heard on every hand, and new cities would spring up like "isles from the sea" in the sunny South. [Applause.]

It will not suffice to say that England holds the prestige of the world in manufacturing cotton on account of her cheap labor, for many nations having much cheaper skilled factory labor are not known in the cotton manufacturing world, and, too, upon the examination of the facts we find that her factory labor is quite as well paid as ours. Besides, her factories, unlike ours, are hampered by all kinds of rigid labor laws. A government agent writing on this subject says:

Manufacturing operations in England are regulated by a multitude of statutory restrictions and regulations. The "factory and workshop act" is the name of the code for regulating the conditions of industrial employment. * * * Some of the things subject to governmental regulations are cleanliness, whitewashing of workrooms, amount of air space per worker, ventilation, temperature, and humidity, sanitary conveniences, and cloakrooms. Safety must be secured by fencing dangerous places in machine and power-transmission gearing. Restrictions must be observed as to cleaning when machinery is in motion, ample provision of fire escapes must be made, and doors must be locked and must open outward, except in the case of sliding doors. There are also restrictive provisions as to the employment of women, young persons, and children, the compulsory education of children, time allowed for meals, and holidays.

A short time ago I had the pleasure of meeting an Englishman returning to his home from an inspection of the cotton manufacturing industries in the South. He said that he came to this country hoping to find it to his advantage to enter into that business here, but, upon investigation, he had found that we were making more cotton goods than we could sell, and that to buy his cotton machinery here he would be forced to pay a 45 per cent tribute to the steel trust; that in England he could save this robbery, and, besides, to build his factory there would give him the world for a market. Hence he returned home discouraged and disappointed with the prospects of the American cotton manufacturing industry.

Mr. Chairman, I dare say that if the cotton belt had been north of the Ohio River instead of south of it; if the untold riches lurking in the possibilities of the cotton plant had been within reach of the grasping Yankee, this infamous market-destroying policy would not have been born, and in that event every pound of cotton leaving our shores would have dropped into our coffers 30 to 40 cents instead of 10. While the South was struggling with the problems of an unsuccessful war—poverty, carpetbaggery, and reconstruction—you were forging the chains of her industrial slavery. But just here let me diverge a moment and say that he is a fool who thinks the South is Democratic on account of the apprehension of negro domination. We fear him not. He is contented and happy, and you can not pass laws enough to disrupt him. Even this benighted son of Ham has learned of your methods of robbery, and you will never have decent Republicans enough in the South to "sing bass" in a backwoods revival until you have become more familiar with the old adage, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," and with that commandment which says, "Thou shalt not steal." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, there are twenty men beyond the sea to consume Southern cotton where there is one at home; and this being true, how can it be expected that any Member from that section, having the well-being of his people at heart, will stand for other than a fair and open-market policy? No Southern man except a political pelf hunter can afford to support any tariff policy except that predicated upon a strictly revenue basis. To act otherwise would be treachery to the blood and the land that produced him, and in this may be found the reason why the only white Republicans of that section are those now eating or scrambling for the pie dumped over the counter at the White House—pie-eating Republicans.

But, returning to my subject, foreign countries purchased two-thirds of our cotton crop of 1907, amounting to 8,708,469 bales, for which they paid us the sum of $481,277,797. They manufactured this raw product and sold it to the world for $1,400,000,000, making a net profit of $900,000,000. England alone paid us $212,605,609 for raw cotton, manufactured it and sold it to her subjects at home and to the world for not less than $600,000,000, making in wages and profits more than $400,000,000. In 1907, after having supplied the wants of her own population of 43,000,000, she sold abroad $600,000,000 worth of cotton fabrics, made almost exclusively of Southern cotton, or more than the gross output of all the American mills, while for the same year we sold abroad the small sum of $32,305,412. Upon these figures "hangs a tale" of idiotic statesmanship that will blur many pages of our history written within the past half century. In all these years while our favored policy was home markets by protection the keen-eyed Briton adhered steadfastly to the policy that practically gives him the world's riches. Not only is England becoming enormously rich by profits realized in manufacturing our raw cotton, but so are Germany, France, and other European countries who buy their chief supply of raw material from us, as will be shown from the statistics of 1907, as per the table I here insert, giving the amount of manufactured cotton goods sold abroad that year by the four leading nations after supplying their home demands:

From the United States	$53,305,412
From France	78,000,000
From Germany	118,000,000
From England	600,000,000

Is it not strange indeed, as shown from this table, that the United States, the home of the cotton plant, with all of her boasted wealth and intellectual arrogance, would cowardly surrender the millions of wealth involved in manufacturing and selling to the consuming world her own monopolized raw product? Why is this true? The answer is written in the damning schedules of the Dingley law.

In this connection let me quote from a recent boastful speech made by Mr. Lloyd George, then president of the British Board of Trade, member of Parliament, and who has just been raised to the English ministry, as follows:

Well, now, it is really very astonishing what Lancashire has done in cotton. Here you have got to carry your material thousands of miles across the ocean and you beat the world. There are two or three figures I should like to quote here because they are very remarkable. They are figures full of romance. It is a great story—a story of British grit, of British brains, of British courage, and it is something—after all we must not be too modest—to be proud of. Here we have the United States of America growing its own cotton and selling to the world last year $53,000,000 worth of fabrics. Here in Lancashire, which has to get its cotton from America, and, I am very glad to say, now getting its cotton from the British Empire in growing quantities and in improving qualities, has gone up to $500,000,000, and you are going to exceed that this year. In five years you put something like $135,000,000 into the cotton business of Great Britain. The United States of America has put in something like $20,000,000, and Germany has put in $30,000,000, and we expect three times as much as both of them put together. So, "let us eat, drink, and be merry." At any rate, if every county in Great Britain looks after its business as well as you are fighting your corner here in the great battle of British commerce, and fights for its own, there is nothing to fear and the only thing you can say is "what Lancashire is to-day let England be to-morrow," and all will be well.

Now, if my Republican friends have any degree of political honesty, they must keenly appreciate the humiliation thrust upon us by this truthful statement of the wily Englishman, and if they have statesmanship sufficient to look beyond the realms of selfish greed they must see that the English policy is right and ours is dangerously wrong. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in further condemnation of Dingleyism, and in contrast with the proud boasts of this English statesman, I want to read from our trade reports for July, 1907, an extract from the views of Mr. Fee, our consul at Bombay, a daily observer of England's exploits in the foreign cotton-goods markets. He says:

Not more than 6 per cent of the American export of cotton is in a manufactured form, yet we grow three-fourths of the world's supply, and furnish our competitors with the raw material, thereby losing the profits of the capital and the employment of labor that would result from such a vast world's industry. There is something radically wrong with the condition of the cotton trade. Did we manufacture the bulk of the cotton we grow and export we would thereby control and supply the world's cotton market, giving profitable investment to millions of capital, employment to a vast army of labor, build a dozen Manchesters within our borders, and furnish the cargo to an American merchant marine. The fact is that we can now manufacture better cotton cloths, yard for yard and pound for pound; and with our vast facilities, home-grown cotton, our inventive genius, and superior machinery, we can do it at a less cost than can be done elsewhere, excepting where higher wages interfere. Personally the day would be welcomed when our competitors would find other sources from which they would obtain their raw cotton and would cease buying from America, thereby forcing us to manufacture our own crop and enter, as we have not yet done, in dead earnest into a competition for our proper share of the world's supply. It remains for us to say whether we shall spin and weave for the world's market nature's abundant gift to us, or shall continue to grow only and permit another to collect the profits of our toil.

But, Mr. Chairman, it may be contended by some that England's international trade zone is open to our trade, she being a fair-trade nation, but it should be remembered that Canada, and perhaps others of her colonies, have already been so outraged at our system as to levy a retaliatory tariff against many of our products. Only a short while ago I noticed that a member of the English Parliament had been elected from the city of London upon the Chamberlain idea of retaliation against our policy. Also, we find in this bulletin on England's cotton industry, by Mr. Whittam, special agent sent out by our Commerce and Labor Department, the following:

American export trade in cotton can only be developed in countries which have not erected a preferential tariff barrier against us, and so far we seem to have made no effort to enter the greatest of all neutral markets—British India. The country takes 40 per cent of England's enormous cotton-cloth exports, notwithstanding the fact that England operates 6,000,000 spindles of her own. England sends to India over 2,500,000,000 yards of cloth a year, as against less than 1,000,000,000 yards to all other countries combined. Many statesmen and leaders of public opinion and thought in England predict that sooner or later a commercial empire union will be established between the United Kingdom and her colonies and dependencies, and with it a tariff barrier against the United States and those of every foreign cotton-manufacturing country. Therefore this is the time for United States manufacturers to establish a foreign market for their goods which will not be easily shaken from its foundation.

Now, if this prediction should prove true and England, in just retribution, should retaliate against our unreasonable trust policy and thereby shut us out of her rich markets, what would become of our future cotton-manufacturing industry? Would it not always languish as at present, and would it not entail perpetual poverty upon every cotton State? How are you going to answer this, my Republican friends?

Sir, it was my pleasure to attend the great International Cotton Convention held last fall in Atlanta, in which there were more than 100 foreigners, representing multiplied millions of wealth invested in foreign cotton factories. They were from England, Germany, France, and other countries negotiating with the great Southern cotton associations to facilitate a closer union between the "grower and the spinner," and for the purpose of eliminating the robbers standing between the cotton fields and the factories—the brokers and exchanges. This was all commendable, but the paramount thought that entered my mind was the fact that a great people and a great nation like this should be humiliated to the extent of calling on any foreigner to assist in taking care of any American industry. Why should they not also be eliminated? They stand between the cotton fields and millions of consumers, pocketing two dollars to our one. Do you suppose that England, Germany, or any other first-class nation would call upon American manufacturers to meet her subjects in deliberation touching the well-being of any of her great industries? The convention accomplished much good, and I refer to it only in order to impress upon this House and the country the necessity of changing our policy, manufacturing our great raw product at home, and send it directly to the consumer, thereby preventing these foreign leeches from growing rich on the fruits of our sweat and blood.

I was impressed with another fact by that convention, which is that our cotton farmers were annually suffering a loss of from twenty to fifty millions of dollars by having to send the product abroad to be manufactured. When a bale of Southern cotton reaches the factory at Manchester, England, it is rolled into a warehouse, stripped of its wrapping, denuded of all dirt and damaged cotton, and the price paid for the remainder, less the marine insurance and ocean freight, is what the farmer receives.

In an unfavorable season this loss to our farmers amounts to 15 or 20 per cent of the crop, all of which could be saved could the cotton be handled from the field to the factory and from the factory to the consumer. Besides, if only one-half the crop now exported could be handled from the field to the factory, the farmer's land would double in value; great cities would be built with a teeming population to consume his surplus food products, thereby enabling him to diversify his crops and always keep his production of cotton within the limits of the world's consumption.

Our only hope now is to disrobe ourselves of national selfishness and compete for the trade of the unappropriated countries. Protection has already cost us many of the richest cotton-goods markets of the world, and we might as well undertake to blot the stars from the firmament as to attempt to drive Europe from them by competition, force, or otherwise; nor will merchant marines or expanding navies reclaim them; nor will our great armada coquetting with the nations of South America and the Orient regain the pearls we have fed to the swine of protection.

Mr. Chairman, the world's population is estimated to be about 2,000,000,000 souls, and granting that the other civilized countries, if they had the opportunity, would consume only half as much cotton as we do per capita, which is about 12 pounds, then it would take an annual crop of 20,000,000 bales to supply the world, and when we consider the rapid strides of civilization and the many additional uses being discovered for cotton we are forced to conclude that in the near future to meet the demands of the world it will require 30,000,000 bales. Of this vast horde of people, every one now civilized and yet to be civilized will become a continuous consumer of this great product. Next to bread, it is the most indispensable necessity to human existence. It is required by the rich and can not be discarded by the poor—an indispensable commodity in every household, whether within the Arctic Circle or within the Tropics. The new-born babe is wrapped in its silken folds, and it furnishes a winding sheet to the centenarian in death. [Applause.]

At one time I thought perhaps the day might come when, under the supervision of European development, the cotton fields of Africa and other countries might supplant us in the production of raw cotton, but now I am convinced otherwise. The exploitations of England, Germany, and other European countries in foreign cotton fields, while they have made much progress, have utterly failed to produce or even to promise a production sufficient to supply their increasing factories.

Statistics compiled by the New York World show the production of raw cotton for the United States and other countries to be as follows:

Year.	Total.	United States.	East Indies.	All other countries.
	Bales.	Bales.	Bales.	Bales.
1903-4	12,636,000	10,275,000	1,300,000	1,063,000
1904-5	13,528,000	11,768,000	872,000	1,020,000
1905-6	14,072,000	11,967,000	1,288,000	1,274,000

This table is sufficiently correct to show that the United States now furnishes about 80 per cent of the world's commercial supply of cotton, notwithstanding millions of dollars have been expended by Europe in exploiting cotton culture in every quarter of the globe.

Mr. Chairman, it seems that we have a perpetual monopoly on this product, and the full measure of this inexhaustible source of wealth can only be appreciated by remembering that as long as civilization lives, as long as God's children live upon the earth, they must hide their nakedness, and those who live under the Stars and Stripes a thousand years hence, when our forests shall have been destroyed, and when our soil shall have yielded her last mineral to avarice, will behold the world still looking to the snow-white fields of the South for raiment. [Applause.]

If our cotton belt had belonged to any other civilized country, do you suppose it would have shared the same neglect and selfish indifference, if not oppression, from that government as it has from ours? If hers, England would go to the limit of her broad statesmanship in fostering the industry. It would not only be shielded from the thieving, protected trusts, but markets and factories would be provided for every fiber now produced or to be produced.

This great industry has been sacrificed to the upbuilding of other commercial enterprises. Protection has given it nothing but taxation, trust robbery, and destroyed markets, and if it has prospered in any degree it has been in spite of the infamous doctrine. Protection did not give us our fertile lands, navigable streams, sunshine, and showers; it did not provide the brains and energy of that noble, rustic citizenship who makes two bales of cotton now grow where one formerly grew.

Again, Mr. Chairman, if the great cotton industry of the South had even received a partial consideration at the hands of the Government, it long since would have enriched the nation. Several years ago agents were sent to Europe to teach the people how to utilize the corn of the Western farmer for food, but not until a few years ago did the Government ever spend a cent to open new markets for cotton and cotton products. But let me say that the cotton planters of the South feel deeply grateful for even the paltry sum expended in this regard. They have already realized good results from it, and I dare say that no public money was ever more profitably spent. The amount now appropriated for this purpose is by far too insignificant to get the best results, as will be attested by our Bureau of Commerce. In the early part of this session I introduced a bill to increase the appropriation to $500,000, and I think a more judicious expenditure could not have been made. Far better would it be to appropriate this amount to expand our commerce into countries where it has been heretofore unknown than to bury twenty times that amount in a battle ship to rust out in peace on the high seas, for if by so doing we could add a few cents a pound to our cotton crop, the South alone in a few years would be able to buy the whole English navy. It is my best judgment that the annual expenditure of that amount for this purpose would prove a permanent guaranty of a compensating price for this product, and therefore would enrich the country a hundredfold. I would rather be the author of even one additional cent a pound for our cotton than to reign as lord admiral of our Navy.

These special agents have been sent to South America, Europe, and Asia, and their reports are encyclopedias of information on the possibilities of American cotton goods and products in many foreign markets, if we only had the wisdom to reach them. Their work must be commended and must eventually result in great good to the country; but allow me here to venture one criticism of the reasons they assign for our inability to cope with other nations abroad. One says it is because we have no merchant marine; another because we have no international banking facilities; another because we have little knowledge of the kind of fabric used away from home, and another because our goods are not packed so as to be free from damage in shipping, all of which may be true, but they are as silent as the dead as to the real cause of our trouble. Doubtless they received instructions before leaving Washington that under no circumstances must they report any obstruction caused by protection. Those instructions were doubtless given them under the penalty of losing their official heads, and since "the ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib," we ought to be generous enough to forgive them. But, Mr. Chairman, we have only to read between the lines of these reports to discern the real cause of our trade troubles beyond the sea. For instance, take the report of Mr. Whittam on English cotton industries, referred to before in this speech, and you will find this remarkable statement touching the sale of cotton goods to our adjoining nations:

Coming nearer home, and comparing the British sales to the republics to the south of us on this hemisphere and the islands of the West Indies with our shipments to those countries, it is found that 1906 witnessed a greater trade in cotton goods between those countries and Great Britain than the total American shipments to the entire world. The official records show the cotton cloth shipped by England to the countries south of the United States in 1906 amounted to 755,000,000 yards, while American shipments during this period to the same countries were 136,000,000 yards. The total United States exports of cotton goods in 1906 were 511,000,000 yards.

Looking farther, Mexico, connected with the States by excellent railroad and steamship facilities, took 25,500,000 yards from England during 1906 and only 2,500,000 yards from the United States. Cuba, which has given us a substantial tariff preference, bought from this country in 1906 only 16,000,000 yards, taking during the same period nearly 59,000,000 yards from Great Britain.

From this it appears that we have not only been practically driven from the lower South American republics, but are being outlawed by England in Cuba and Mexico, our door neighbors. It is strange indeed that England can buy her cotton in Galveston, take it 4,000 miles to England, make it into cloth, bring it back, and sell it to the Mexican cheaper than it can be made and sold to him from Texas, separated from that market only by the Rio Grande. There is some well-founded reason for this anomalous trade condition, and it is we have outlawed Mexico by our infamous Dingley law. In the same ratio that we have closed our doors to her she has hers to us. In order to grease the beef trust, the copper trust, the hide trust, and a few others, we have levied an embargo ranging from 15 to 50 per cent on her leading export articles, while England has opened her doors wide to them. Consequently a 10-year-old boy can see the cause of our trouble. In the same manner we are driven from the cotton-goods markets of Cuba, notwithstanding we have a 25 per cent reduction of our tariff in her favor on many of her products. By all the ties of patriotism this trade should come to the United States. Every breath of national life she breathes is under our flag, and I dare say her trade would be ours if we appreciated it better than we did the sugar and the tobacco trusts and admit her greatest commodities free of duty into this country.

More than this, Mr. Chairman, we find from figures furnished by the Department of Commerce and Labor that England sold to our first-door neighbor, Canada, in 1907, manufactured cotton goods to the amount of $8,801,727, while we only sold that year $3,312,000. There is nothing separating the bankrupted cotton factories of New England from this rich, expanding market except the impassable wall of Dingleyism. She boycotts us because we outlaw her.

Again, our military flag, at a cost of $700,000,000, waves over the Phillipines, but the English flag floats proudly over her commerce. In 1907 we sold to the islands cotton goods to the amount of $1,608,000, while England sold $2,865,527 worth. We send them bombs, she sends them raiment. We tax their few crude products out of this country, she takes them free into hers. Hence she gets their trade and we their curses.

And on and on we might go, showing in this manner we have alienated from us the richest fields of trade—have sacrificed everything to the end that a few shylocks at home might become millionaires.

Proceeding further, Mr. Chairman, I want to make another criticism on these reports of our foreign-trade agents. For a long time it was strange, indeed, to me why they did not report the very great damage being done the American farmer by taxing him trust prices at home for all his agricultural supplies in order that the trusts might furnish the same to his competitors abroad at a much less price, but this question was loudly answered by the vote on the amendment, proposed a few days ago, directing them to look into and report on this matter, when your party voted solidly against it. I would like to know how you can look the honest farmer of the West in the face and ask him for his vote, when you know your policy and your vote compels him to pay 20 per cent more for his reaper than the trust sells it to his competitor, growing wheat in competition with his wheat on the plains of Argentina; and how can you ever hope to win a vote among the decent farmers of the South when they know and the world knows that they are being taxed from 20 to 30 per cent more for their cultivators, cotton planters, and other cotton-growing machinery than the trusts are selling the same implements to the cotton growers of Africa and Russia, who are his direct competitors in all foreign markets?

For the twelve months ending December, 1907, we sold to Russia, at a price 20 per cent less than was paid by home consumers, agricultural implements to the amount of $4,352,523; to Canada, $2,515,489, and to Argentina, $3,588,759. All three of these nations are now putting forth superhuman efforts to drive the American wheat and cotton out of the world's markets, and it does seem that the farmers of this country would rise in rebellion against any party or policy producing this infamous condition.

The policy of maintaining the United States harvester trust by a high duty on all agricultural implements in order that it may charge the wheat growers of the West $20 more for a reaper and $5 more for a cultivator than it does the wheat growers of Canada and Argentina is so infamous as to deserve the execration of every farmer in the land. When we remember that our farmers are being taxed in order to foster an industry in a foreign country whose sole object is to drive us out of the food markets of the world, we must conclude that our people must be controlled by the grossest ignorance or they would rise in arms against such a usurpation of their rights.

In order to show how the wheat industry in Canada and Argentina is being developed by the purchase of our cheap agricultural machinery and other necessaries of farm life, I invite your attention to the following table, which shows that these countries are fast supplanting this in the exportation of grain:

Domestic exports of wheat and flour combined from the countries below named.

[a] From official reports of the respective governments.

The remarkable increase in the exports of grain from these two competitive nations will be more fully appreciated when we remember that twenty years ago Canada exported less than one-tenth the amount she now does, while that of Argentina was so insignificant as not to be noticed in the statistics of the world's commerce. Now, how long will it be at this ratio of increase for these two nations to supplant our prestige so long enjoyed as the granary of the world? I may add, further, that what is here shown to be true about the increase of grain is likewise true about the meat and other food products of those nations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BYRD. Will the gentleman from New York kindly yield me a few minutes more?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but I only have two minutes at my command.

Mr. BYRD. So much for the kindly affection our Republican friends have for their grain-growing friends of the West. Now, let me pass on and show what is being done to the cotton farmers of the South by this tariff-protected trust. Besides the amount of cotton-growing machinery chiefly shipped to Russia in order to develop her cotton-growing Asiatic possessions, we shipped cultivators, cotton planters, plows, and other agricultural implements ranging from $300,000 to quite a million dollars each in 1907, to England, Germany, and other European countries for the development of their cotton-producing colonies in Africa and elsewhere, all of which was sold to them at a cost of 20 per cent less than to the cotton growers of the South, and it will be remembered that American cotton has been taxed out of Russia by her high tariff duty, and yet, notwithstanding this embargo against our chief agricultural product, this Government is permitting the United States harvester trust to tax the Southern cotton grower to build up his commercial enemy in other far-away countries.

To develop their cotton and other industries other nations are lending all the government aid possible. The Russian tariff is practically a bounty to her cotton growers. Germany subsidizes her industry by large appropriations from the royal treasury, and England is now spending many additional millions of dollars in raising the great Assouan dam on the upper Nile in order that the vast cotton fields of Egypt may be irrigated. She is also building railroads into the heart of Nigera in order that her cotton-growing subjects may have transportation facilities. Hence we at once see the injustice visited upon the farmers of this country and the favoritism shown to those of other countries by our Government.

It appears that we sold more agricultural implements at a reduced price to Russia in 1907 than to any other country. It also appears that one Mr. Medell McCormick is our ambassador to Russia, and that the exportations of our trust-protected goods have been increasing ever since he began to fill that important position, and it is further apparent that he is one of the owners and controlling factors in the United States harvester trust. Now, I do not charge him with prostituting his high office into a trade agency to exploit his trust-made goods, but I do say that all of these coincident facts make it highly probable that he is not altogether forgetting his trust interests at home while wining and dining in the imperial court at St. Petersburg.

The country has gone wild over the idea of saving the printing industries $60,000,000 annually by repealing the tax on print paper and wood pulp, thereby destroying the paper trust, and I must say that I am heartily in favor of the proposed legislation, but how much better would it be for us to repeal the tax on agricultural implements, destroy that trust, and thereby save the farmers from twenty-five to fifty millions a year, as well as prevent their competitors in other countries from driving them out of the world's markets. Such legislation would fall like manna from heaven on every farmer in the Union. This reform must and will come; truth may be suppressed, but not destroyed. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BYRD. I am not through, but will have to close.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GREENE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 171. Joint resolution providing for assistance to the people of the storm-swept States of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the message of the President this day delivered to the House be now read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. GREENE]. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the message of the President be now read.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think we had better go on with the debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri object?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I believe I do; yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, we have all of us read the message.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York object?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for the regular order. If it is the regular order to read the message, let us read it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York objects, and the committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the greatest practical question which confronts the people of the United States to-day is the large increase in the cost of living. This has now been going on for at least ten years steadily and rapidly, and it has reached a point so high that it has become a menace to the welfare of the great body of the American people, a menace which was serious enough last year and in the years preceding, but which has become increasingly so since the panic of last October, which threw out of employment probably more than a million wage-earners and salaried men.

The evidence of this increase in the cost of living, Mr. Chairman, may be had on every hand. It is known to every housewife, and to those in moderate circumstances with small incomes it is one of the daily and nightly family worries. We can examine it in a scientific manner, however, by looking at the works of economic writers or at the market reports of the necessaries of life, and perhaps the simplest and clearest way to get an idea of what it amounts to is to glance at the figures given in the Bradstreet review, published by Bradstreet's agency from time to time, purporting to give the index figures or average prices of the 107 leading commodities which people consume.

Ten years ago if we added up the total market prices of the leading 107 commodities, we found that they footed up $6.11; so we say that the index figure of prices for the year 1897 was $6.11. Footing up the total prices of those 107 commodities for the year 1907, just recently closed, we find that the index figures of the 107 commodities is $8.90. Thus we find in ten years an advance from $6.11 to $8.90, or nearly 50 per cent. Embraced in these 107 commodities are all the necessaries of life, all the articles which must be purchased and consumed by rich and poor alike. It would be difficult to say exactly in what proportion those necessaries of life are included in this total of 107 commodities, but they embrace a very large proportion of the number in one form or another.

Mr. Chairman, to the family in affluent circumstances it is a matter of little moment that the necessaries of life have greatly increased in cost. Such a family can look upon that marked increase with a good deal of indifference, but to those millions living on an income of, say, $800 for the whole family that increase means a very serious matter, and we see the effects produced by that increase in a number of ways.

We see a reduction in the annual savings of the American people. We see an increasing number of children driven into the mines and factories to help out the family income, until legislators are devising ways and means to check that tendency. We see women who formerly were confined to household lives and household duties driven into commercial life in an increasing degree in order to eke out the family income. We see the standard of living reduced and people obliged to do with less and less year by year. In short this tendency has enormously intensified the struggle for existence among the great mass of the American people. It is the more remarkable because America has raised more food than it can consume. It has produced untold wealth from its mines and has manufactured in its factories more than its people required. In the face of this enormous productiveness of the country, such as the world has never known, and the prodigious increase in national wealth, we find our people facing a struggle for existence, very much the same as the people in older countries have faced in times past because of the increased cost of living.

Mr. Chairman, what has caused this increase in the cost of living? There has been one great cause that is world-wide, natural, and not injurious. It is the increase in the production of gold and in the supply of money. Naturally as that increase of gold has come into the channels of commerce it has fallen in value, which means that commodities have risen slightly, but that cause is world-wide and not injurious. In other countries it has not been a serious matter, but in our Republic alone of all the nations that natural increase in the cost of living has been tremendously aggravated by the other increase in the cost of living, which is not natural and which is due to the devices of selfish man. If I were to designate it in a single word, I would say that the cause of that increased cost of living to the American people is the trusts.

Heretofore upon this floor I have at times declaimed against trusts which are promoted and sheltered by the tariff. I have shown that they have greatly raised the prices of their commodities to the American people, who enacted a law for their benefit. I have shown that they have been selling their products in foreign lands at lower prices than they sell them in the United States. I might go on now to show the baleful effects produced upon the American people by the tariff on lumber, which has permitted the lumber trust to increase in ten years the cost of lumber to the American people 70 per cent, a cost which we have felt in the increased cost of homes to the home builder and of rents to the rent payer. I might dwell upon the steel trust, which, protected behind a high tariff, has raised the cost of its products to the American people, so that it has increased the cost of every home that was built, has raised rents, added to the cost of raising crops on all western farms, increased the cost of all our American railroads, and thus affected freight and passenger rates.

But to-day, Mr. Chairman, I am to speak of a trust which is not the child of the tariff. I am to speak of the meat trust, and I am doing it now, Mr. Chairman, because I feel that I may be denied the opportunity to speak under the rules of this House when I call up for a vote the resolution which I introduced some weeks ago asking the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to lay before this House statistics showing the prices of meats and live stock in the great markets of the United States during the last two years. I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, when I called up that resolution before the House, to be given an opportunity to say something on the subject, but I realize that under the rules of this House it is quite possible that I may be shut off from saying anything by a partisan motion to lay my resolution on the table. And so, Mr. Chairman, under the license of general debate I am to say something of the subject of meat prices and live stock prices in the United States to-day, and review briefly the history of the failure of this Administration to bring the people relief in that respect.

On page 184 of one of the bulletins issued by the Bureau of Labor in July, 1907, I find a computation of the changes in the prices of various necessaries of life during the last few years. The author of this official bulletin has reported the average price of various products over a period of ten years and then in the year 1906 indicated in what way these prices have changed. Taking the average prices that prevailed on certain packing-house products for the ten years ending with 1899 this Government official shows there has been an advance, as follows:

	Per cent.
Salt pork or bacon	50
Fresh pork	38
Chickens	29
Lard	28
Hams	27
Mutton	24
Veal	23
Beef	16
Eggs	34

Now, Mr. Chairman, those increases represent the price of those products as they stood in the year 1906 compared with the average of the ten years ending with 1899. They represent an enormous increase and they are a fair index of what has been wrought upon the American people by the great combination popularly known as the "beef trust."

This enormous increase we found existed in 1906. Since then in most cases further advances have been made, and to-day retail meat prices paid by the consumers of the United States stand at the very highest point. Last October a panic struck the country which was followed by depression, and there was a considerable slump in the prices of many commodities. Among other things there was a great temporary decline in the price of live stock. There was not, however, a corresponding decline in the price of the products of live stock which come from the packing houses of the United States. The packers actually profited by the situation.

Right at this point, Mr. Chairman, I desire to digress for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the change which has come over the policy of this Administration toward the beef trust. Let me recite some recent history. Beginning even back of the year 1902 there were evidences of a gigantic combination among the great packers of the United States to raise the price of their products and depress the price of live stock which they bought. The complaint became so general and the outcry so loud that the Administration was forced to take notice, and in May, 1902, caused a petition for an injunction to be filed in Chicago to restrain the packing house companies of the United States from combining to restrain trade in violation of the Sherman law. That case went to trial, proof was introduced, and the result of it was that the presiding judge issued a permanent injunction restraining these six great packers from pursuing the policy which they had before pursued under which they bought live stock at their own conspiracy price in the great markets which they control and sold their products at a price secretly agreed upon. The case was brought to the Supreme Court of the United States, and in 1905 that tribunal sustained the decision of the lower court and a permanent injunction was granted. Simultaneously, however, with these judicial proceedings other proceedings had been going on. This House had voted what was called "the Martin resolution," instructing the Department of Commerce and Labor to investigate the packing-house interests and the beef combine.

Mr. Garfield, then the head of the Bureau of Corporations, went to Chicago to make this investigation, or at least to start it. He promptly fell into the trap set for him there. He walked into the lion's den, and fell into the hands of Mr. Dawes, who was the banker of the packers; Mr. McRoberts, one of their number, and Mr. Louis Krauthoff, one of the most astute, accomplished, and smooth special manipulators of the packers' combine. The history of the rise of this young man, Louis Krauthoff, reads almost like a romance. He began life, I believe, out in Kansas City as the son of a saloon keeper and his first duties on earth were to clean out the saloon in which his father did business. To-day he is reputed to be a millionaire, lives in New York in apartments for which he pays a rental of $60,000 a year, and his greatest achievement in life is having taken Mr. Garfield into camp and through him put the Government into the hands of the packing-house trust of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Garfield went to the great packing center of Chicago and, as I said, fell into the hands of Mr. Dawes, Mr. McRoberts, a packer, and Mr. Krauthoff. They dined him and wined him and they gave him the information which they wanted him to have and which he used in making up the ridiculous report which was published in 1905.

This Garfield report, published by him after he had made this so-called "investigation" and had taken the information that the packers chose to give, came before the country as a sort of apology for the existence of the combination. It declared that the profits packers made were reasonable; even went so far as to figure the profits of cattle killing at 99 cents for each steer that was killed and turned into packing-house products. This estimate was so preposterous and the report so apologetic that the country was amazed and disgusted at the outcome of this great investigation. Every man who ever had anything to do with the packing-house interests and every man who had opportunity to observe the great packing-house markets knew that the profits have been so enormous as to make these packers multimillionaires in the span of a short lifetime.

Modern packing is only about twenty-five years old, and yet to-day six of the great packing-house concerns in the United States have a capital of over $100,000,000, practically all made in a few years out of the business.

This great capital, however, hardly expresses the magnitude of the six great packing-house concerns that dominate the live-stock market and provision supply of the United States. Perhaps a better idea is gained by looking at the volume of their business. They take in each year almost as much money as the National Government collects in taxes. One of them alone does a business of over $200,000,000 a year. They not only have packing houses, ice houses, and hundreds of branch houses, but they have 40,000 refrigerator cars, several small railway systems, banks, trust companies, electric car lines, stock yards, and other enormous investments. They control the provision market and are rapidly getting control of the poultry, egg, butter, fruit, and vegetable supply. Their wealth and their profits are made by dictating not only the prices of what they sell, but of what they buy.

Now, let us see about Mr. Garfield's estimate of 99 cents profit on each head of cattle slaughtered.

I caused a friend of mine, well posted in such matters, to make for me a statement of what becomes of a thousand-pound steer at the South Omaha live-stock market. Such a thousand-pound steer at the present market price will be purchased by the packing house for about $64 to-day. Here is what such a steer will yield:

The steer will dress 58 per cent meat, 580 pounds, at 10 cents per pound	$58.00
Tallow, call fat, ruffle fat, and trimmings, 100 pounds, at 6 cents	6.00
Liver, 10 pounds, at 5 cents	.50
Heart, 3 pounds, at 3½ cents	.105
Tongue, 4 pounds, at 11 cents	.44
Hide, 70 pounds, at 8 cents	5.60
Feet	.15
Head	.10
Brains	.05
Bones	.10
Tripe, 5 pounds, at 7 cents	.35
Blood, fertilizer, 22 pounds, at 1½ cents	.264
Casings, bungs, middle, and rounds	.45
Total	$72.109

Cost of killing, dressing, and chilling one beef, 35 cents.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, we have there, made up by a practical man, the products of a steer converted into modern packing-house products; and the cost of killing, dressing, and chilling is only 35 cents. We have a $64 steer converted into $72.10 worth of products, and yet Mr. Garfield has come before the country with the claim that the profit is only 99 cents upon each steer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would be the last man to discredit the great packing-house industry of the United States. In my district at South Omaha there has been built up the third largest live-stock center of the world. Last year the packing houses of that city butchered practically 800,000 head of cattle, over 2,000,000 head of hogs, and 1,000,000 head of sheep. I believe it safe to say that 10,000 men, women, and children are employed there in that packing-house industry. I would like to see that industry prosper. But I do believe that the time has come when the people of the United States are entitled to protection. I do believe that the time has come when the Administration should renew the efforts which it abandoned absolutely two years ago. Why this silence and indifference that has followed after that furor of rage and indignation when the immunity bath was given? Why was it that the Administration of the United States after bringing those men into court and forcing them to admit that it was in possession of evidence which might send them to the penitentiary, abandoned any further effort to protect the people from their exactions? Has it been because the price of live stock or products has changed? Why, no, Mr. Chairman; not changed for the better. In 1906, two years ago, when the Administration abandoned these attempts, beef was selling at wholesale at the packing houses at a cent a pound less than it is selling now. The cattle were practically the same price. And, Mr. Chairman, let us glance at the figures of the last year, to show the power of this combine.

On the 1st day of April, 1907, the Chicago price of cattle according to Bradstreet's was $6.60. On the 1st day of April this year the Chicago price of cattle is $7.45, an advance of 13 per cent. And I want to say that that advance is justified. There is a reason why cattle are selling at a higher price this year. It is because of the scarcity. When the panic struck this country, in October last year, it became impossible for cattle feeders to borrow the necessary money to feed their cattle. They became alarmed, and many did not buy to feed. The result is there is a smaller supply of cattle in the country ready to market this year, and the advance of 13 per cent is reasonable. What has happened to the price of provisions? What has happened to the product that is made from these cattle by these packing houses? Has that advanced 13 per cent? Yes, Mr. Chairman; according to the figures published by Bradstreet's this month, the price of beef at wholesale, the whole carcass, sold at once, has advanced 29 per cent, as against an advance in cattle of only 13 per cent. Thus, while all the business interests in the country are suffering, if not prostrate, this beef combine not only maintains but actually raises its price to the wholesalers, and that is why the retailers are compelled to largely advance their price to the householders of the land.

So I say, Mr. Chairman, there is no reason why this Administration should for two years have abandoned the American people to the grasp of the beef trust.

Mr. Chairman, I know it is not an easy matter to prove the existence of a trust; but even if we take Mr. Garfield's statement alone, we find that in fourteen of the leading markets of the United States these allied concerns pack and slaughter 90 per cent of the cattle that are brought to those stock yards. We find that one of those concerns, the National Packing Company, is owned by three others—Armour, Swift, and Morris. While it is claimed that there are six packing concerns that divide up the earth and control these products, there are actually only five. It is reported on what seems to be such persistent and reliable authority that it is hard to doubt it that once every week representatives of these packers get together—I think it is Thursday in most markets—and they fix the price that they will pay during each day of the following week for all the cattle, sheep, and hogs that come to market and the prices that they will charge for provisions to the wholesalers and retailers with whom they deal. This is done week after week; yet this Government does not make, seemingly, any effort to look into this matter, although prices rise, living expenses increase, and people complain.

I telephoned to the Bureau of Corporations the other day, asking whether there was any additional information received since the Garfield report was issued, and was told substantially there was very little. Yet the Bureau of Corporations, as Judge Humphreys said, was created for the purpose of giving information to Congress, and great appropriations are made by Congress every year for the purpose of maintaining that Bureau. We heard here a few days ago a rather heated controversy between the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as to who was entitled to credit for having originated the Bureau of Corporations. It has occurred to me since that time that if I were in danger of being held responsible for the creation of the Bureau of Corporations I should endeavor at once to disclaim responsibility, judging by results.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman not admit that the Bureau of Corporations may be very useful to the Administration around campaign time, when they want to shake the plum tree?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I will say to the gentleman that there is a growing suspicion that such is the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GOEBEL].

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, when we come to the reading of the bill now under consideration under the five-minute rule we shall again encounter an amendment limiting or restricting the appropriations for the various Federal Homes for Soldiers, the object of which is to prevent the reestablishment of what is known as the "beer hall." There are also numerous bills pending in this House looking to prohibition or restricting the sale of intoxicating beverages and otherwise depriving the individual of the use and enjoyment of the same.

It is not my purpose at this time to discuss the amendments or the provisions of the various bills, nor point out the legal or constitutional provisions which they violate. In the brief space of time allotted to me I desire to make some observations, however, upon the underlying principle of government which is involved in this kind of legislation.

Any legislative act that undertakes to regulate our eating, drinking, or the expenditure of our private funds is sumptuary in its character and affect the personal liberty and rights of the individual. Mill says:

> That the sole end for which mankind are warranted individually or collectively in interfering with the liberty of action of any of their number is self-protection.

The only purpose for which power can be rightfully exercised over any member of a civilized community against his will is to prevent harm to others. His own good, either physical or moral, is not a sufficient warrant. He can not rightfully be compelled to do or forbear because it will be better for him to do so, because it will make him happier, because in the opinion of others to do so would be wise or even right. These are good reasons for remonstrating with him or reasoning with him or persuading him or entreating him, but not for compelling him or visiting him with any evil in case he do otherwise. To justify that, the conduct from which it is desired to deter him must be calculated to produce evil to some one else. The only part of the conduct of anyone for which he is amenable to society is that which concerns others. In the part which merely concerns himself his independence is of right absolute. Over himself, over his own body and mind, the individual is sovereign.

Every one—

> may seek his own happiness in the way that seems good to himself provided that he infringe not such freedom of others to strive after a similar end as is consistent with the freedom of all according to a possible general law. If my action or my condition generally can coexist with the freedom of every other according to a universal law, anyone does me a wrong who hinders me in the performance of this action or in the maintenance of this condition.

Herbert Spencer writes:

> Every man is free to do that which he wills provided he infringes not the equal freedom of any other man. The liberty of each is limited only by the like liberties of all.

These rights are fundamental, and whenever a free government suspends them and thereby seeks to regulate the conduct of the individual it violates a fundamental principle upon which it is founded. An overindulgence of the particular act while in the exercise of this right is at most a "vice." Vices are simply errors which a man may make in his search after his own happiness. It may be an immoral or evil habit, practice, or conduct in which he indulges, resulting from an impure or degrading appetite or passion, but vice is not a crime. It becomes mala prohibita when by statute you make it so. Widely differing from other offenses that are crimes mala in se, vice is a chronic and habitual transgression of the moral law and is social in its origin, progress, and aggravation.

Every voluntary act of a man's life which affects him is either in accordance with, or in conflict with natural laws of matter and mind upon which his physical, mental, and emotional health and well-being depend. It either gives him happiness or unhappiness. No one else knows or feels or can know or feel as he knows and feels the desire and the necessity, the hope and the fear and impulse of his own nature or the pressure of his own circumstances. It must then be left for each person to settle that question for himself. I am a firm believer in individual freedom. There must be no restraint upon the individual until his act injures other persons. His rights must not be withheld because social good may in an uncertain contingency be harmed.

If prohibition ever becomes the common basis of social life, it must come through the agency of the individual. To my mind every legislative act enacted to forward it would not hasten, but rather retard it. What statutory law will curb the appetite of man? Appetite is of divine creation. Life is itself chained to it. The aim of man is to live. When you dam a stream, it is not stopped. The current ceases as you look upon it, but while the source remains the stream gathers new force and cuts new channels, made even more dangerous by the dam you have interposed.

As legislators let us get this principle fixed in our minds—that the individual is not accountable to society for his actions in so far as these concern the interests of no person but himself, but whenever his actions are prejudicial to the interests of others, the individual is accountable and may be subjected either to social or to legal punishments when one or other is requisite to the protection of society. Underlying this principle is liberty of action. The voluntary act or choice of an individual is evidence that what he so chooses is desirable or at least endurable to him, and his good is best provided for by allowing him to take his own means of pursuing it. On the other hand, society has its remedy. If the individual by his conduct displeases us, we can express our distaste and we may stand aloof from him, reflecting that he bears the whole penalty of his error. I admit that the mischief which a person does to himself may sometimes seriously affect those nearly connected with him, and in a minor degree society at large, so that when a man, through intemperance or extravagance, becomes unable to pay his debts, or having undertaken the moral responsibility of a family becomes, from the same cause, incapable of supporting or educating them, he ought to be punished, not for drunkenness or extravagance, but for the breach of duty to his family or creditors.

If the resources which ought to have been devoted to them had been diverted from them for the most prudent investment, the moral culpability would have been the same. Again, is there any reason why our existence shall be constructed on one or some small number of patterns? When a person who possesses a reasonable amount of common sense lays out his mode of existence, should society interfere? It may not be the best mode in itself, but it is his own mode. We are not all alike. Different persons require different conditions for their development. Things which are helpful to one person are hindrance to another. The fact that people have diversities of taste is reason enough for not attempting to shape them all after one model.

In the early history of the world it may have been necessary to prohibit one from possessing a house or furniture which was the work of more elaborate implements than the axe and saw, or against the expensiveness of female attire, or that no fowl should be served but a single hen and that not fattened, or to limit the cost of funerals. You will remember that the Oppian law, enacted before the birth of Christ, provided that no woman should possess more than half an ounce of gold or wear a dress of different colors or ride in a carriage in the city or within a mile of it except upon occasions of public religious ceremonies. This law also limited the sums to be spent on private entertainments. Tiberius caused a decree to be enacted by the Senate prohibiting the use of gold vases except in sacred rites, and also prohibiting the wearing of silk garments by men.

Coming to a later period, we find that Charles V of France forbade the use of long-pointed shoes, and then under later kings the use of gold and silver embroidery, silk stuffs, and fine linen was prohibited. Laws were enacted to restrain undue expenditures and to regulate the dress of the several classes of people. In the reign of Edward II a proclamation had been issued against the "outrageous and excessive multitude of meats which the great men of the kingdom had used and still use in their castles," as well as "persons of inferior rank imitating their example beyond what their stations required and their circumstances could afford." Two courses of flesh meat were allowed to be served upon their tables. Servants of gentlemen, merchants, and artificers were allowed only one meal of flesh or fish in the day, and that the other food should consist of milk, butter, and cheese. These sumptuary laws had evidently their origin in and were dictated by financial necessities.

Later on it may be said that sumptuary laws were founded upon moral considerations, but in the sixteenth century the legislature ceased to be guided by moral consideration and began to be influenced by religion, partaking of commercial and police character, and then the so-called "mercantile or protective system" came into vogue.

But at all times it was found that sumptuary laws could not be enforced and government soon ceased the fruitless efforts and permitted luxuries and taxed them. It is sometimes maintained that a heavy tax on liquors would prohibit their use. I doubt it. True, every increase of cost is a prohibition, but only to those whose means do not come up to the price, and to those who do it is a penalty laid on them for gratifying a particular taste. Now, I do not mean to say that liquors ought not to be taxed. I justify it upon the ground that of all commodities liquor can best be spared by the consumer, and hence the State and Federal Government is justified in imposing a tax to the point which will produce the largest amount of revenue without destroying the industry. [Applause.]

Recurring for a moment to sumptuary laws in the early history of the world, what people in this enlightened country would tolerate such laws at this day? Undesirable habits and wasteful expenditures should at all times be discouraged by every man, but action thereon belongs more properly to the spiritual than to the temporal power. At least it ought to find no lodgment in any legislative body.

If I were to transgress from things earthly to things spiritual I would say that our Saviour at the marriage feast at Cana made wine for the use of his guests. He visited the Pharisees and attended their feasts, where wine was lavishly used, and he used it at his own home and at the Passover. On an occasion, speaking to the multitude, he said unto them:

> Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man. (Matt. 15, v. 11.)

Now, I might go on and quote innumerable passages from the Bible to illustrate that prohibition of intoxicating liquors was not favored by our Saviour. I prefer to discuss earthly matters at this time.

In a free government sumptuary laws are in contravention of the rights and liberty of the individual. Whenever by force of law it is sought to rectify "vice," that government becomes the abettor of persecution, the friend of hypocrites, and the ally of tyranny. You must bear in mind that the laws of nature are supreme, and laws enacted by man in opposition thereto would be unnatural and untenable.

The issues involved form the substance of a great reform, and it is not difficult to appeal to a morbid sentimentalism and receive the applause of the multitude. I admire the courage and convictions of such men as Bishop Webb and Bishop Grafton and the distinguished Cardinal Gibbons, who, on January 8 last, in an interview, published in the Baltimore Sun, said:

> I have always been in favor of high license and have made utterances to that effect. In a community as large as Baltimore I do not consider absolute prohibition practical, for there are so many ways of getting around legislation. But the high liquor license I believe to be the proper solution of the problem.
> To begin with, the revenue will be guaranteed by the increased price, despite the fact the number of saloons will be greatly decreased. The high license will do away with the small grog shops, that throw out many temptations for the poorer class of people, and with the number of saloons decreased, the police will be better able to enforce the laws. When the number of saloons is diminished the police will be better able to keep a much closer watch on all of them.
> So, with the revenue assured and the advantage placed in the hands of the police, many dangers can be guarded against and many done away with.

But, Mr. Chairman, extremists will continue to agitate absolute prohibition, and they will not be contented until our statute books contain complete sumptuary laws and have taken away effectively every personal liberty of the individual, and then governments will absolutely control and regulate our eating, drinking, and the expenditure of our private funds. I would then suggest that Satan be bound and restrained from again seducing men to sin, and it occurs to me that at last millenarians will have triumphed. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much the little incident that happened this afternoon between two of my colleagues, both brave soldiers in the civil war—General KEIFER and General SHERWOOD. I regret it for more than one reason; first and foremost, however, because I am in favor of the Sherwood bill, because I believe that the bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD], whether you call it a "pension bill," or whatever you call it, which seeks to make up a roll of soldiers of the late war who served at least eighteen months, and gives them a dollar a day pension, is a meritorious measure, and, while not an ideal pension bill, is a step in the right direction. These two gentlemen, both of them now past 70 years of age, answered the first call of President Lincoln for troops within a day or two after the issue of that call.

Both entered the war, I believe, as privates; both rose to high rank; and I say, in fairness to their comrades, in justice to their comrades, that the voice and influence of both should be exercised in this Chamber, not in bickering and in quarreling, but in support of measures calculated to advance the failing fortunes of the men who served under them; in support of the men in the ranks who did not rise so high as they; in support of a measure giving to these men at least a portion of their due. [Applause.] Now, gentlemen, on one side I find one of my friends [General KEIFER] trying to convince us that the bill introduced by General SHERWOOD is not a pension bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Have you got a copy of it?

Mr. ANSBERRY. Yes; I have. I am a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. That bill has been considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I say that the bill makes provision for giving a pension of a dollar a day to every soldier who served one year and six months in the civil war, and if that does not make it a pension bill, I do not know what would.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I can not yield to the gentleman. I will say further I am here trying to defend General SHERWOOD from the unwarranted and unfair assault made upon his integrity by my colleague from Ohio, General KEIFER, and, if necessary, I would rise in this House or anywhere else to defend General KEIFER or any other soldier from assault, no matter from how high a source it came. I say these two men should not be here, jealous of one another's influence in behalf of the old soldiers, their comrades in arms. I invite General KEIFER to cooperate with his colleague, General SHERWOOD, to further the interests of these soldiers of the civil war. It is a remarkable spectacle that here in this House, the Republicans being in the majority and daily boasting that they can pass or repress any legislation they choose, and it is a well-known fact that the old soldiers have for many years been that party's most valuable asset, yet the old soldiers of the civil war must look to this side of the Chamber for their champion; on the other side of the Chamber the other day, when the steel trust was attacked, a gentleman from Pennsylvania quickly rose in his place and defended that trust.

The trust that has a monopoly of the print paper and pulp wood was attacked, and a gentleman—in fact, numerous gentlemen—on the other side rose in their places and defended that trust. To-day an old soldier of the civil war, who went in in 1861 and who stayed in until the close of the war in 1865, who rose from the humble position of private to be a colonel and brevet brigadier-general, was attacked most viciously because of a measure he had introduced in behalf of the old soldiers of the country, a measure looking to a substantial increase in pensions of those soldiers; was ridiculed and laughed to scorn, his petitions flouted and misconstrued by one who should have been aiding rather than deterring such measures. Did any one on the other side rise up to defend either General SHERWOOD or his bill, or to suggest that while possibly there were mistakes in the phraseology or punctuation, still it was in the main correct in principle? And certainly that is all that General KEIFER can find fault with in this measure. That is his reason for insisting that it is not a pension bill; mistakes, if any, in form, not in substance.

Mr. KEIFER. Will you allow me to hand it to you, so that you may read it?

Mr. ANSBERRY. Not in my time. If that bill is incorrect in phraseology, take the time you have and correct it. Surely you are a friend of the old soldiers?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Surely you want to see these men who served a year and six months in behalf of the old flag getting a dollar-a-day pension. Yet, instead of joining hands with this other old general, you, General KEIFER, stand back and poke fun at his measure.

General KEIFER is a lawyer; General SHERWOOD is not a lawyer. He is engaged in other lines of business. Perhaps he can not draw a measure of this character under the strict technical rules that apply in this House. Perhaps he can not draw a bill as well as this lawyer soldier, but at any rate, if he can not, the gentleman on the other side [General KEIFER] should come to the rescue; and if not to the rescue of General SHERWOOD, then to the rescue of the old soldiers of the country, who have a right to expect this dollar a day because of services rendered in time of stress to the country, and he should not spend his time in carping criticism.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I say that the gentleman on the other side should not spend his time in carping criticism. If the measure is ineffectual because of defective phraseology, let him correct it. Let him come down to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I assure the gentleman they will give him plenty of time to offer a substitute for this measure, looking to the end that General SHERWOOD has in view, on which he has spent not only the last six months, but the last seven or eight years of his life, looking not particularly after this special bill, but looking after the interests of the old soldier. I have personal knowledge of the fact that this measure was submitted to twelve different organizations of veterans of the civil war before it was introduced by General SHERWOOD, and met with their approval. True, these men may not have thought it was technically correct, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] spoke of the shadows, not the substance.

If he did not intend to do that, if he is a friend of the old soldier, why did he wait until the closing days of the session to point out an error in phraseology or punctuation? Why did he not rise in his seat long ago and offer a measure correcting the measure that General SHERWOOD introduced and for which he has waged such a hard fight? He says there is politics in this proposition. I take it if there is it is not on this side, but on the other. Not long ago, in answer to a question propounded by me in this House, the gentleman from Ohio, General KEIFER, rose on his feet here and said that he would follow the Republican party, no matter what platform it made, no matter whom it nominated. General SHERWOOD is an independent in every sense of the word. He has been elected to office by the Republicans; he has been honored by that party when a member of it. He has been honored by the Democratic party, and he was an honor to it. He has been honored by the Independent party. He holds a seat in this House as an Independent. He was elected from an Independent district, and if there is politics in this question I would rather follow the Independent than the man who in this House brazenly says he would follow the Republican party, no matter what its platform and no matter who its candidate. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN].

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, at the opening of the session I introduced a bill (H. R. 3983) proposing to limit the effect of interstate commerce as applied to the shipments of whisky from one State to another.

The text of the bill is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3983) to limit the effect of the regulation of commerce between the several States and Territories, as to certain commodities.

Be it enacted, etc., That all intoxicating liquors, including ale, wine, and beer, shipped from one State or Territory into another State or Territory shall, immediately after crossing the boundary line of the State or Territory in which its destination is located, and before delivery to the consignee, become subject, in every respect, to the laws of such State or Territory which have been enacted therein in the exercise of police powers, just as though said liquors had been produced in said State or Territory; and the interstate-commerce character of such shipments of intoxicating liquors shall terminate immediately after such liquors have passed into said State or Territory of their destination and no exemption shall be made of original packages of intoxicating liquors shipped in any form or manner: Provided, That liquors shipped entirely across a State or Territory, that are not to be be delivered therein, shall not be subject to the provisions of this act, nor shall this act affect the right of common carriers to transport intoxicating liquors from points without a State or Territory to any point within that State or Territory.

SEC. 2. That any railroad company, express company, or other common carrier, or other person who shall, in connection with the transportation of spirituous, vinous, malt, and intoxicating liquors of all kinds from one State or Territory into another State or Territory, collect on, before, or after delivery, from the consignee or other person, the purchase price, or any part thereof of such liquors, or who shall in any manner act as the agent of the consignor or seller of such liquors for the purpose of selling or completing the sale thereof, saving only in the actual transportation and delivery of the same, shall be subject in so doing to all the police powers of the State or Territory into which such liquors are transported and delivered; and for this purpose in all cases of the sale of spirituous, vinous, malt, and intoxicating liquors of all kinds, in interstate commerce, where the same is sold "collect on delivery" the place of delivery shall be deemed and held the place of sale.

Neither the idea nor substance of this bill is new, but like the several others of its nature that have been introduced at previous sessions its purpose is to supplement and make effective the Wilson Act.

The great obstacle in the face of any bill affecting interstate commerce is its constitutionality. In that particular, in so far as this body is of itself capable of judging, there is no doubt as to my bill. Every point covered in it has been fully covered and favorably reported to the House by the Judiciary Committee in other bills, amendments, or suggestions that have previously been before that committee on this subject. So full and complete was the committee's report on Mr. LITTLEFIELD'S bill that it seems to be conclusive of the matter. The way being apparently clear for legislation on this subject, it is my purpose to try to bring to the attention of the House the necessity for that legislation.

The question of the method of controlling whisky has no place in this discussion, nor do I propose to question the right of the individual to use it, where he buys it legally and uses it in moderation. But I do say that when a majority of the good citizens of a State declare for prohibition, or for the dispensary, if you please, they have a right to control their policy, and not have it dictated by the nonresident liquor dealer of Baltimore, St. Louis, or Cincinnati. And I will go a step further. They ought to have the right to control their liquor policy without interference by the National Government.

It is the State that is responsible for the morals of its citizens. It is the State that must bear the odium of crime. It is the State that must be taxed for the suppression of crime. Then who will deny to the State the right to pluck up by the roots the plant whose branches are laden with the seeds of crime? To such an extent has interstate commerce been protected by interpretations of the Constitution that it has set at naught the laws of the States enacted in behalf of sobriety and good citizenship. How much longer will the Federal Government defeat the will of the States in their reasonable demand for protection against the liquor barons?

I yield to no man in the desire to promote trade between the States in commodities that add to the wealth and comfort of the people, but whisky is no such commodity. The Federal Government, by putting a tax of more than four times the cost of production on a gallon of whisky, has placed it under an unmistakable ban. It has by this act declared it to be a noxious substance, dangerous to its citizens, and to be dispensed only under its license. How inconsistent, then, to hamper with technical barriers the Commonwealth that would stay the use of whisky.

Clearly Congress recognizes the right of a State, in the exercise of its police powers, to prohibit the traffic in whisky between its own citizens. Why then does it stamp with its approval transactions between a citizen of a State and a nonresident that it recognizes as illegal between citizens of the same State? The right of a State to exercise police powers in matters affecting the welfare of its citizens is older than any constitutional right protecting interstate commerce. It was not surrendered by the States in their original compact, and its potency was reaffirmed in the tenth amendment to the Constitution.

I am willing to accord to every nonresident the right to free and untrammeled commerce in every article of traffic that is recognized as legitimate by my State, but I emphatically deny that he has rights superior to mine in my own State.

Under this quibble of protecting interstate commerce, this body and the courts—the former by silence, the latter by evasion—have become party to a crime against the weak and helpless of society. See you not the beseeching, careworn face of the impoverished widow? Hear you not the piteous cry of the orphan; yea, and even the despairing protest of the enfeebled drunkard himself? These should "plead with you like angels, trumpet tongued." And yet, Mr. Chairman, year by year bills have been presented here proposing to limit the effect of interstate commerce, bills that a majority of the members of the Judiciary Committee have declared to be constitutional—and they have invariably been put in cold storage.

Far out in the ocean, east of the West Indies, the warm, perfumed breezes of the Tropics meet the colder air of the north. Here is the home of the embryonic cyclone, which, growing with its progress, reaches the Gulf States and sweeps across the Atlantic States with such terrific effect.

Far out in the great sea of human hearts, beyond the ear of this august assembly, the appeal of the humble temperance advocate has been caught up by the masses. It has swept over State after State, making its way to this body, and it is here. It is the voice of the tempest that calls to you.

During the year 1906 there were consumed in the United States: Distilled spirits, 127,754,544 gallons; wines, 46,485,223 gallons, and malt, 1,699,985,642 gallons. Averaging the cost to the consumer of whisky at $3, wine at $2, and malt at 50 cents per gallon, the sum makes a total of $1,326,226,899.

Considering that the higher grades of whiskys and wines are retailed at excessive prices, and that much of the cheaper whisky is not dignified by the Government stamp, it is safe to say that a billion and a half dollars would not cover the annual consumption of whisky in the United States. This sum is equal to nearly twice the annual cost of running the Government, in its every department. The figures are staggering.

What are the returns from this stupendous waste of wealth? It is more effectually wasted than if consumed by fire. Hear them: Wasted and enfeebled manhood, crushed and bruised womanhood, degenerate and beggared childhood.

In its wake may be seen the eye of sorrow, the heart of woe, the life of desolation. It is the thief of the substance of the home, the seducer of the affections of the home, the murderer of the protector of the home. It is the worm at the root of the plant, sparing neither the tender shoot nor the fruiting stalk. "It biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

That these are no empty words, let us see what the records show. In 1,000 deaths during the year 1900 of persons between 30 and 34 years of age, 254 were from alcoholism—133 men and 121 women. Between the ages of 35 and 39 years there were 372 deaths from this cause—190 men and 182 women.

Pause for one moment and think just what this means. Out of 100 persons dying in the United States, at the age of 36 years, nearly 40 go unshriven to a drunkard's grave. Truly this is a text for the moralist, but its broadest and most practical application is in uncovering the path of right to this body. State after State has risen in its might to check this waste of wealth and more than waste of human life. It is "the voice of the people, it is the voice of God."

I said at the outset that I would not argue the constitutionality of this bill at length. I will only review briefly the progress that the interstate phase of the liquor question has made.

In Leisey v. Harden it was held that a man had a constitutional right to sell liquor in original unbroken packages, despite any State law to the contrary. The Wilson law, passed subsequent to this decision, which was declared to be constitutional, divested original packages of liquor of this interstate-commerce character upon arrival within a State. But a strained construction of the language of that law interpreted "arrival within a State" to mean "after delivery to the consignee," and this is the present law. So far as the right of the consignee to receive is concerned, it makes no difference, under the Wilson law, whether the goods are intended for personal use or for sale; they must be delivered. The proposed law does not interfere with the right of a citizen to make a bona fide order of whisky from another State for personal use. The effect of the law would be simply to permit the State to regulate, control, or prohibit the sale of whisky within its borders without the trammeling effect of Federal interference. Whether the policy of the State be high license, local option, dispensary, or prohibition, is a question that neither Congress nor the Federal courts need be concerned about.

The State has not parted with its police power, and the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of whisky being the legitimate exercise of that power, interstate commerce law should relinquish all protection to this commodity immediately after it crosses the border line of the State of its destination. It is little short of exasperating to the citizen of a prohibition State to have liquor sold indiscriminately within its borders from without the State. And yet this is just what the Wilson law permits. Liquors have been shipped by the consignor outside of a State to himself as consignee within that State. Again, it is a common practice to ship liquors to a fictitious person and instruct the railroad or express agent to sell them to any person who will pay the cost of the whisky and the charges of transportation. But the most common method of evading prohibition laws is through an agency. The nonresident dealer establishes agencies over the State. The agent solicits orders and, in many cases, actually delivers the goods in person. Of course the money is paid to the nonresident dealer, and so the State's laws are set at naught.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this Congress owes it to the law-abiding citizens of the various Commonwealths—it owes it to itself—not to be party to the shameless practices that are in vogue for the furtherance of immorality and degeneracy. Mere knowledge of crime before its perpetration is held in the criminal courts to incriminate the person who had the information and did not communicate it. What, then, must be said of him who would aid and abet the criminal? And yet this is just what we are doing. By our persistent refusal to brush away the technical barricades, under shelter of which the nonresident dealer can debauch the citizens of a prohibition State, we aid and abet him in his nefarious work.

Inaction can no longer be excused on the threadbare ground of unconstitutionality. Time and again the Judiciary Committee has brought this question squarely up to us with a favorable report. It is the custom of this body, as a rule, to accept the finding of the committee to which a bill is referred. In respect to our own committee, in justice to the sovereign right of a State to protect the interests and guard the morals of its citizens; in pity for the poor inebriate and those dependent upon him, is it not our duty to pass this or some kindred law? If right must be trampled underfoot for a constitutional quibble, let it be by the courts and not by Congress.

[Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire at this time to make some remarks on a subject not entirely germane to the bill, but one which I deem the most important that confronts the American people—that of foreign immigration. The vast horde of illiterates from Southern and Eastern Europe that has swarmed to our shores for the past few years presents an issue before which those of finance, tariff, railroad regulation, and trusts pale into insignificance. If mistakes are made in these questions to-day, the statesmen of to-morrow may to a great extent correct them, but this motley mass of aliens threatens us with a condition that coming ages will perhaps grapple with in vain.

I am not a "Know Nothing," nor do I believe in the doctrine of "America for Americans alone." I have no racial prejudices except those which an almighty God has planted in the heart of every true Southerner who believes that in the keeping of the Caucasian race have been placed the principles of human liberty and the just rights of all the people. I am inspired by no narrow sectarianism which would keep out any man because he is Protestant, Catholic, or Jew. I have proven this by the disposition of some of the few official favors that have been at my disposal since I have been in Congress. I will cite one. Three years ago I had to appoint a cadet to the Naval School at Annapolis. I gave the appointment to a bright young son of German people at Cullman, after having first tendered it to a young Jew of my own town.

So, Mr. Chairman, you see that I am not influenced in my views of this question by any narrow prejudice on account of creed, or on account of foreign blood. But I do believe that it should be considered and solved, if possible, with an eye to the permanent welfare of our whole country, and not with a view of bridging over any temporary necessity or of meeting any short-lived contingency.

My position as to the best way of settling the question is embraced in the following section of a bill which was reported to the Fifty-ninth Congress by the Committee on Immigration, of which I was a member:

SEC. 38. That no alien over 16 years of age physically capable of reading shall be admitted to the United States until he has proved to the satisfaction of the proper inspection officers that he can read English or some other language or dialect, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized and directed to prescribe from time to time such methods and rules as he may think best for the purpose of testing the ability of such immigrants to read: Provided, That an admissible alien over 16 years of age, or a person now or hereafter in the United States of like age, may bring in or send for his wife, his mother, or his grandmother, his affianced wife, his father, who is over 55 years of age, or his grandfather, if they are otherwise admissible, whether they are able to read or not; and such persons shall be permitted to land: Provided further, That a daughter not exceeding 21 years of age, or a son not exceeding 18 years of age, otherwise admissible, if accompanying an admissible alien father or mother, shall be permitted to land whether said daughter or son is able to read or not.

Gentlemen, is that a radical proposition? The constitution of many of our States has an educational or property qualification for suffrage. Some have both. Then is it an unjust requirement to say to the foreigner over 16 years of age that before landing in this country he must at least come up to the standards set for our sons before they can become electors, even after they have been here twenty-one years.

I do not contend that every Italian or Russian or Syrian who is admitted becomes a voter, or even a naturalized citizen, but it should be the wish of all that no male person should come except those who desire and are qualified to become voters.

It is unfortunate for any country or section that it has large numbers of men who can not take part in the affairs of government, at least at the ballot box. We have had that unfortunate condition in the South, and we all regret that it exists, but events over which this generation had no control forced it upon us, and I am one of those who believe that we are trying to settle it in the best way. With this experience behind us, will it be wise to bring upon ourselves and our posterity another similar problem that may involve us or them in perhaps greater troubles than those with which we have had to grapple?

It is against those of a different race from ours that my principal objection is aimed. I do not contend that because a man is illiterate he is necessarily vicious; nor would I debar him merely by reason of the fact that he can not read if he is of the Caucasian race and otherwise a desirable person. I favor this restriction, because it appears to me to be the only practicable way in which many people of an undesirable race can be excluded. We could not without perhaps becoming involved in serious international complications, enact a law which would say that no Italian or Syrian, Russian or Greek shall be admitted. We have done this as to Chinese, but I doubt if European nations would stand for such legislation. Hence, if the end desired can be reached by the educational test, would it not be better to bring it about in that way?

It has only been within recent years that so many undesirables have been coming to our shores. More of them have been admitted within the last ten years than came throughout the entire previous history of our Government. Prior to 1890 almost all our immigration was the Teuton and the Celt. They were the sturdy pioneers who penetrated the forests of this country and won them over to civilization. They were the people who, chafing under religious or political oppression, sought these shores in order that they might erect the standard of liberty. Although the Spaniard and the Italian preceded them in discovery, they could not keep pace with them in occupancy and in development. If we had no other evidence of the superiority of the Caucasian than the permanency of his occupancy of this part of the New World, that itself ought to convince us that before the steady march of the white man no obstruction can impede and no opposition can prevail. Fortifying my position as to this racial superiority, I need but point you to the sad history of the governments in South America where the Iberic blood has predominated. True, Mexico has within recent years made rapid strides toward an eminent place in the galaxy of nations, but who will deny that she owes much, if not most, of her prosperity to her proximity to the United States and to the influx of blood, brains, and money from our country?

The only substantial argument presented by leaders in Congress who oppose the admission of New Mexico is that there are thousands of Mexicans in her borders, many of them unable to speak our language. This opposition is made in the face of the fact that settlers from the States largely preponderate both in wealth and in numbers. The strange inconsistency of these very leaders is that they pretend to see no danger from the unrestricted flow of this very same blood into the United States.

A brief comparison of the immigration in 1882, when the change began, with that in 1905 will be instructive to those who really seek the truth.

Prior to 1882 the principal sources of our recruits were the British Isles, Germany, Scandinavia, and the Netherlands.

About that time the change began, and there was a rapid shifting of the sources of immigration from western to eastern and southern Europe. In 1882 the total immigration from all Europe and Turkey in Asia was 647,000; in 1905 it was 1,024.000, and in 1906 about 1,200,000.

Of those admitted in 1882, there were 563,000 from the countries of western Europe. There were only 83,637 that year from southern and eastern Europe and Turkey in Asia—that is, of the total immigration, 87 per cent of it was from northwestern Europe. In 1905 there were only 216,000 from the countries of northwestern Europe and 809,000 from the countries of eastern and southern Europe—that is, of the total immigration, 21.7 per cent was from northwestern Europe and 78.9 per cent from eastern and southern Europe.

To emphasize the danger of this condition, I will contrast the immigration of a few of the countries during those two years. From Great Britain in 1882 there came 179,000; in 1905, when the total immigration had nearly doubled, it had fallen to 102,200. In 1882 it was nearly 28 per cent of the total immigration; in 1905, not quite 10 per cent. In 1882 Germany sent us 250,000; in 1905, 37,500. In 1882 it sent over 38 per cent of the entire immigration; in 1905, less than 4 per cent. In 1882 Sweden sent 64,600; in 1905, 23,300. In 1882 it sent 10 per cent, in 1905, a little over 2 per cent. In 1882 Italy sent 32,000; in 1905, 273,000. In 1882 it sent 5 per cent of the total; in 1905, nearly 27 per cent. In 1882 Austria-Hungary sent 29,150; in 1905, 265,000, and in 1906, 338,000. In 1882 it sent 4.5 per cent; in 1905, 26 per cent. In 1882 Russia sent 21,600; in 1905, 215,600. In 1882 it sent 3.3 per cent; in 1905, 21 per cent. This, gentlemen, gives us a comparison of the emigration from the three principal countries of northwestern Europe with the three principal countries of eastern and southern Europe.

In these statements I have generally used round numbers.

In 1882 eastern and southern Europe sent us 13 per cent of our entire immigration; in 1905 it sent us 79 per cent. While northwestern Europe has decreased nearly fourfold, eastern and southern Europe has increased more than tenfold.

Gentlemen, can we cut ourselves loose from the dollar mark and say that the comparison bodes good for our children and the children of our people? It is said by those who differ from me that we have reached the high-water mark and that it will soon begin to recede. This has been repeated time and time again for several years, and yet we see the high-water mark rising with each year that comes, and the deplorable phase of the matter is that as the increase of the undesirable grows greater the number of the desirable grows less.

Commissioner-General Sargent, in his last annual report, says that the average monthly arrivals of immigrants at Ellis Island alone during the last fiscal year was 93,654, equaling the total number arriving during some entire previous years.

Mr. Sargent further says in this report, page 4:

The immigration for the year 1907 (1,285,349) exceeded that for 1906 (1,100,735) by 184,614 and that for the year 1905 (1,026,499) by 258,850, or an increase over the year 1906 of more than 17 per cent and over the year 1905 of more than 25 per cent.

This does not include the thousands who steal in surreptitiously every year. On page 74 of this report Mr. Sargent quotes from the report of a special inspector recently detailed to make investigations in Mexico as follows:

The sum and substance of my recent investigations in Mexico crystallizes itself into the conviction that, taking the most conservative view, fully 15,000 aliens from Europe and Asia enter the United States annually from Mexico.

The reason of the decrease of desirable immigration often given is that conditions are so much better in the countries in northwestern Europe than they formerly were that it has given a check to immigration from that part of the world. To some extent this is true, but as I traveled through Scotland and Ireland, as a member of the Immigration Commission, I found the poverty and oppression of the people pitiable to see. I asked two or three intelligent young Irishmen, who were coming to Queenstown to board the ship on which I sailed, why more of them did not come to America, and they replied that thousands more would come every year if they could only get the money to pay steamship fare. Can we conceive of much greater poverty than that of a people thousands of whom are prevented from coming to our country because they can not raise $30 or $40 to pay steerage passage on a steamship? Yet less than 4 per cent of the adult Scotch and Irish who come to America are unable to read and write and as a rule, they make first-class American citizens.

On account of this Republican panic the number of immigrants has recently fallen off, but just as soon as times begin to improve we will see that same swarm of birds of passage again flocking to our shores. Those who have returned to their native homes within the past few months have taken millions of dollars to further the hard conditions already existing here.

Mr. Chairman, is this great increase from the healthy and the intelligent? One extract from the annual report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration for 1906 will answer that. On page 7 of that report he says:

The constant increase of the number of aliens afflicted with contagious diseases, insanity, and idiocy is significant.

In my investigations in Europe I visited a number of emigrant boarding houses at one of the ports through which many of them pass. There were a large number of Syrians in these houses waiting to ship for America. They were about the dirtiest lot that I saw on my trip. I found a woman of moderate intelligence who had spent three or four years in America and spoke pretty fair English. She had evidently not been coached by the runners for the steamship companies, and talked freely. When we asked her where she was going she replied that she was going to Mexico and from there to the United States. She said that she was returning with several of her relatives, and on account of trachoma she was afraid they could not get in through our ports.

On page 75 Mr. Sargent quotes from the special inspector before referred to, as follows:

As far as other immigration is concerned—namely, of Syrians and Greeks—I have to report that it is on the increase. The steamers landing in Mexico bring more and more of that class of aliens, and I have seen in the office of the Mexican Central Railroad Company some correspondence with European steamship companies speaking about the increased traffic in emigrants who want to go to the southwestern parts of the United States from Mexico. From that correspondence it appeared to me that transportation companies in Europe are making an effort to get as many emigrant passages as possible for the United States via Mexico.

The immigrants who come that way are afflicted with trachoma and other diseases which debar them from entering through our ports; and the steamship companies are lending a willing hand to these violators of our law. Mr. Chairman, my observation of the steamship companies that bring immigrants to our shores convinces me that they are the most arrogant and lawless of any corporations or individuals who abuse the privileges given to them. Even now they are knocking at the doors of Congress to secure an amendment of a law which we passed at the last session giving more air space and better comforts to the poor immigrants whom they huddle together in the steerage of their ships like so many dumb, driven cattle.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Are the steamships trying to get it amended before it goes into effect?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes, indeed. And, strange to say, our own Commissioner of Navigation seems to be lending his willing aid to this infamy. In regard to this air-space law Commissioner-General Sargent, on page 83 of his report, quotes from the report of Mr. Watchorn, Commissioner of Immigration for the port of New York, as follows:

It is a matter of regret that that part of the act of February 20, 1907, relating to improved conditions on passenger ships, was not made operative earlier than 1909. During the year just closed 1,506 children have been received at this station afflicted with measles, diphtheria, and scarlet fever, all of which diseases are due, more or less, to overcrowding and insanitary conditions. Of this number 205 died. * * * The cost of detention of relatives while waiting for the return from the hospital of persons afflicted with the diseases in question is fully $30,000 more, and has placed a strain upon the dormitories and detention rooms at Ellis Island second only to the stress that is placed upon the steerage itself.

The inspectors are pretty strict at most of our ports, but in spite of that fact thousands of diseased persons and criminals slip in every year.

The very manner of living of those coming from the undesirable countries breeds skin, eye, and head diseases that are highly contagious. In one village that we visited in Sicily I saw goats, chickens, and women and children all huddled together in one dirt-floor room, and the fleas working by the thousand.

In Naples the filth in the poorer quarters of the city was absolutely nauseating, and the public indecency of the people was shocking.

We crossed over the Russian border at one point contiguous to Germany, and the difference in the cleanliness, the intelligence, and the thriftiness of the two peoples, only separated by a narrow stream, would almost tax the credulity of anyone who had not seen it.

For one to realize and appreciate the difference between those of the Iberic and those of the Aryan stock, let him go just one day's travel from southern into northern Italy. I spent nearly a week in Sicily, circling the entire island, and stopping at several of the important cities.

More than 55 per cent of the immigrants from southern Italy, including Sicily, over 14 years of age, can not read even their own language. We saw a ship in which a large number of those south Italians were embarking for this country, and on one of the decks was a basket full of knives. On asking what it meant, we were told by one of the officers of the ship that they had to take the knives away from the emigrants for fear they would carve each other up on their voyage.

Gentlemen, do you believe that that kind of people will build up our country or advance its civilization?

In northern Italy we found intelligence, progress, and comparative prosperity. Italy has a compulsory system of education, but in the southern portion it is entirely ignored, while in the northern portion it is enforced, and as a result only about 10 per cent of the immigrants that come from that section of the Kingdom are illiterate.

It can not be said that oppressive laws make this difference, for here are people living under the same king, governed by the same laws, and enjoying the same civil and religious rights, and yet mark the difference. It can be explained on no other theory than that of racial difference. The ignorance, the vicious character, especially of the Sicilian, makes him an easy dupe when he reaches America for the Mafia and the Black Hand. In Sicily we visited the region once infested by the bandits, and on asking some of the natives about these outlaws, we were told that they were no longer troubled with them, as they had all gone to America.

We all remember when yellow fever was raging in New Orleans, the trouble that the physicians had with the ignorant and superstitious Italians. They would conceal the living victims of that dread disease from the doctors, and even hide them when they died.

Almost every day brings us news of some new outrage committed by Italian outlaws in Chicago, Pittsburg, New York City, or some other city or community. Even the priest at the communion is stricken down by their bloody hands. True, the leaders are generally shrewd scoundrels, often with some education, but do you believe that they could long ply their trade without the aid of ignorant dupes from their own land?

The following is an extract from an article in the New York Commercial in its criticism of my position on this question:

It is true that large numbers of immigrants from the continent of Europe easily become viciously disposed after getting here and develop rapidly into criminals. The cause is to be found chiefly in their ignorance, their lack of moral training, their failure to understand and appreciate—after long experience of restrictive, harassing, and oppressive laws and practices—the meaning of personal liberty, and their inability to resist the temptations of their newly found freedom and their unaccustomed environment. As it is often only "the opportunity that makes the thief"—not dishonest instincts or purposes—so it is opportunity that leads morally irresponsible immigrants into vicious ways and criminal paths.

The writer contends, as do many others, that the remedy for this is the segregation of these people and their settlement in the country. That would help matters some if it could be accomplished, but in my judgment we will never get many of the south Italians into the country. Those who are laborers and peasants at home usually live in towns and villages and walk to the farms in the country. Their gregarious habits soon cause them to go to the cities even if they at first settle in the country. Again, the Italian comes here solely because he expects to get better wages than he received at home, and just as soon as he finds that the furnace, mine operator, or the contractor in the cities and manufacturing districts will pay him more than he can get from the planter he will at once pick up his little holdings and migrate to the city. This talk about getting him as a laborer on the farm is the merest moonshine. Besides, as I will show directly, the farmer in the South does not want him and does not need him.

He will continue to congregate in the cities, the prey of disease and often of dissipation. I was told by a high Italian official that thousands of the peasants who left Italy healthy, sober men, came back victims of tuberculosis and of strong drink. Disease, he said, was brought about by huddling together in unsanitary lodging houses and drunkenness by the poisons in American drinks.

Not only is disease and inebriety bred in these dens, but they become the hiding places and rendezvous of crime.

A short time ago the statement was made by the New York Evening Post that there are 132 Italian confidence men now serving time in Sing Sing.

A Member of Congress from Louisiana told me recently that in his State the Italians seldom go into the courts to settle their differences, but settle them with the knife and the dagger.

I have thus fully discussed the south Italian because I visited his country and studied him in his own home and because an especial effort is being made by many to encourage his emigration to America. Most of the south Italians and Sicilians that we are getting are the best of their kind that are found in those sections of Italy. They are generally of the peasant class from the smaller towns and villages. Naples, Palermo, Messina, and other large places have not yet fairly begun to dump their millions upon us. If the ignorant and vicious ones that we are now getting are the "pick of the flock," what will it be when the slums of those cities are turned loose upon us.

If there were no other objection to America's being made the dumping ground of the illiterates of Europe than the fact of their illiteracy, that itself ought to cause us to hesitate before we throw wide our gates for their admission. The old Confederate soldier came home forty-three years ago from that terrific struggle to find desolation and ruin, poverty and distress, on every hand. His property had been swept from him, and he had to start anew to recover his lost fortune and to try to educate his children. He also found that as one of the vicissitudes of war the children of his former slaves had to divide with his own the meager funds which he could pay to remove the dark cloud of illiteracy from our land.

Now, is it fair and just that while he and his children are trying to discharge their duty as patriots to the black as well as the white another race of illiterates should be precipitated on them to further divide the meager funds that they are having to pay for education?

Again, the very manner of living of many of these undesirables will bring them into such contact with the negro in the South that, in my opinion, it will cause us trouble. They know nothing of the superiority of the white man and will not consider the inferiority of the negro. The negro himself will regard them only as equals, or even as inferiors.

Every man reared in the South knows that the negro considers anyone his inferior who associates with him on terms of equality. Then where will he place the Syrian or the Greek or the "Dago," as he calls the Italian? Should these aliens come in great numbers to the South, I fear that trouble will spring up between the two races, and then more race questions will confront us.

The South has always been conservative. We have always believed that God made only the Caucasian to rule this country, and I, for one, look with apprehension upon any effort to introduce into her electorate, or into the seats of her rulers or lawmakers, those through whose veins flows the blood of any other than the Caucasian race.

We have for forty-three years had a race problem which the best intellect of the South has tried to solve, and which we believe, under the providence of God, we will yet settle right, if let alone. It was put upon us by the prejudices engendered by a terrible war. We feel that we have made progress already in its solution, and now, when we think hope points the way, shall we voluntarily assume another race problem that may give to our posterity more trouble than that which we have had to face?

Against the people from northwestern Europe I have not one word to say. The Scandinavian, the German, the French, the Swiss, the English, the Scotch, the Irish, the Bohemian, and, in fact, all the inhabitants of northwestern Europe, and most of those from northern Italy, are Caucasians. They are from the same great Aryan stock from which you and I sprang. The south Italian, the Greek, the Spaniard, and, in fact, most of the people of southern Europe and western Asia have intermingled their blood with that of the Arabian, the Saracen, and the people from other portions of Asia and northern Africa until they are not our kind of people. With them the Iberic blood predominates. With us the Teuton and the Celt prevails. If this proposition is conceded, it follows that if we admit them in great numbers, we will have a third alien race and blood to contend with and a third race problem to transmit to our posterity. If it is contended that these people are industrious and that their labor is needed, the same can be said of the Chinaman, the Jap, and the Hindoo, and yet will any man that loves his country say that the flood gates should be lifted and these people allowed, like the locusts of Egypt, to be turned loose on our Western shores?

Up to this time so few have come into the South that we have not felt great evil from their presence. But the cry is going up to turn the tide of these very ones whom I deem undesirable into the South. Do not let the cry of scarce labor blind us to the real danger that confronts us. Let not the Juggernaut of commercialism crush out the boasted civilization of our glorious country.

Were I to look at this question from the standpoint of cold, selfish commercialism, and as a temporary expedient to supply an acknowledged scarcity of labor, I would perhaps have to admit that the man who favors an unrestricted immigration has somewhat the better of the argument. But as one of the representatives of more than 80,000,000 of people, I feel that I should look beyond the exigencies of a temporary condition and do what I can to legislate not only for those of our day, but for the interest of our children.

At the present the demand for labor is not so great as some months ago, and it is in just such times as these that the American workingman suffers by the presence of the pauper labor that came in during our era of prosperity.

Is it not natural, then, that the American laborer whose family is suffering should resent being displaced by Italians who care nothing for American civilization or American liberty, and who, in case of America's peril, would never render aid. I desire to read an extract from a paper along this line:

SONS OF SUNNY ITALY RUN OUT.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., April 17.

Thirty Italians who have been employed by the Illinois Central at Clinton were driven from the town last night by a mob, who intimidated them with a fusillade of shots from guns and revolvers.

There has been indignation against the Italians since Mayor Edmonson received a "Black-Hand" letter threatening his life. The Italians were charged with the authorship. The railroad has been employing the Italians to the alleged exclusion of several hundred American-born residents who were unemployed. The authorities have been unable to secure any clew to the arrest of the men composing the mob.

But even as laborers these people are not desirable. Last spring I heard the superintendent of one of the biggest cotton mills in Georgia say that he would not give one man or woman from the mountains of North Georgia or North Alabama, as a cotton-mill worker, for any half dozen foreigners that he ever saw. I was told a short time ago by the president of one of the largest iron-working plants in Alabama that he was going to have to get rid of the Italian help at his plant, even if he had to substitute it with negroes.

Every convention of the Southern Cotton Association and of the Farmers' Union urges the people to reduce the acreage of cotton. Then, even if it were true that the Italian would go to the farms and grow cotton, you would put him in direct competition with the Southern farmer, who has borne the heat and burden of the struggle. The last cotton crop brought us about $800,000,000 in spite of the fact that the negro is every day becoming more worthless and more unreliable. The white farmer has already to a great extent solved the question of the scarcity of labor. He is doing it with improved implements and intelligent and intensive farming, and does not want or need the Italian to help him. I have asserted this proposition all over my district and have never heard a single dissent from it. If he should go to the farms, where would the farmer put him? The southern Italian usually comes without his family, and should he go to the farms would almost invariably take his place as a day laborer. Most of our farmers are small landholders and have to bed and board the hired man. He eats at the table with their wives and daughters and sleeps in the bed with their sons. In the South they would not want to put him with the negro, and yet not one in a thousand would take him into his home on terms of equality with his wife and children. Then where would he go? Just where he goes now—into the dirty tenement houses of the cities.

The fact is, gentlemen, this talk of getting the south Italian on the farms is a subterfuge and beneath it is the masked hand of the manufacturer, who really wants to hold him as a menace over the American workingman. Is that fair and just? Before every Federal election we hear from every stump the cry of what the Republican party has done for the American laborer, and are pointed with pride to the great prosperity of the country. What produced that prosperity? It was brought about by a partnership between labor and capital. All honest partnerships are based on the desire of both parties for a fair division of the profits. Then, is it right that without the consent of one of the members a third partner should be introduced to further divide the profits, that division to be taken from the portion of the objecting partner?

Let us deal fairly with this question. I rejoice in the prosperity of our country. I am from one of the cities where the cornucopia of our prosperity is running over, and I would not erect one single barrier to her legitimate progress. I delight in watching the lurid glare of her furnaces as it lightens the very heavens. I am glad to watch the dark pillows of smoke that hide the face of the sun, and I hope to see the light rise higher and the columns of smoke grow thicker and darker. But, gentlemen, I would rather see her fires banked and her smoke dissipated to the four winds than to see that prosperity erected upon the graves of our Caucasian civilization. This is no pessimistic vision and no vapid warning of a false Cassandra.

It is not from the homes of the rich that the cry will come, for they can protect their children from contact or association with the undesirable. But it will come from the weaker member of the partnership, asking us to protect his family against amalgamation and destruction, for amalgamation means destruction. Through his veins flows the same Caucasian blood that flows through yours. The blue eyes and fair skin of his children are just as beautiful to him as yours and mine are to us. While he does not, perhaps, expect for them that wealth or position that you and I hope for ours, he does desire that cleanliness and respectability and virtue and honor may be their heritage. I know that there are those who will say that these are the words of a place-hunter and a demagogue. But, gentlemen, are they not the words of soberness and of truth? One of the best rules of life is to put yourself in the other fellow's place. My friends, put yourself in the place of the white men in the little Mississippi village that rose in revolt some time ago against conditions there. Put your children on the seat beside the children of the dirty Italian in the Mississippi school, and tell me what you would have done. "Am I my brother's keeper" is a question even more pertinent to-day than it was when, in the early days of creation, it was answered by the wrath of an eternal God. As yet there is but an appeal, but should it go unheeded, the thunders of a demand and even of a threat will be heard. The conditions in the Mississippi town are but a hint at the Jim Crow car and the separate school. Let that hint go unnoticed, and let the columns of these undesirables, not alone from Italy, but from several other countries, continue to lengthen, and you men who favor their coming will have the gory locks of your own flesh and blood shaken at you as they exclaim in their wrath "You did it!"

I believe you who differ with me are just as patriotic as I am, but some have looked through the smoked glass of commercialism and have not given this question that fair consideration that I think its importance and its danger merits. I believe it is a more dangerous question in the South and in the West than in the North. The environments of our Northern brethren are such that race lines are not so closely drawn there as with us. They have never had the question in the acute form in which the people of the South and the people of the Pacific slope have had it. Had the few Jap school children in San Francisco who came so near involving us in trouble with Japan, lived in New York or Philadelphia, no protest whatever would have been heard. Yet an effort to force the negro into the schools in the South or the Japs into the schools in California will always be met with violent protest and resentment. It is because we have in the respective sections been up against the real thing and we know its dangers, and whenever anything presents itself that looks like an effort to force equality with an inferior race the sensitiveness of our Southern nature appears at once. It was but natural that Italian citizens should send in their protest against the effort in the Mississippi town to keep the children of their people out of the white schools. The Japs in San Francisco did the same, and the President was ready to back them up. The negroes have sent in their repeated protests to the Interstate Commerce Commission against Jim Crow cars. This will always be done by the offended party. No one expects him to admit his inferiority. The Italian consul appeals to Washington, and Washington will threaten to lay its heavy hand on the rights of the States to govern their own internal affairs, and thus we have no end of trouble. The North already has enough of these undesirables, and if they will endanger the South, Southern society, or Southern civilization, had we not better check them as far as possible while we can?

Mr. Chairman, I think this a subject for serious investigation by the thoughtful men of this great body of American Representatives. Take it with you, dissociate it from commercialism, analyze it in the alembic of truth, weigh it in the scales of justice and fair play; and when you have done so, I believe that we will have your sound approving judgment cooperating with and supporting us in our views. What is the remedy? If there be one, let us hasten to adopt it before the Black Hand spreads all over our country and we stand paralyzed and impotent to resist its deadly thrusts. The educational test, I believe, will more effectively solve it than any other method. In this connection, permit me to read from the opinion of our American consul at Messina, Sicily, who for fourteen years has passed his official life among these very people. He says:

> After nearly thirteen years' residence in Sicily, during which period I have tried to study the emigration question in all its phases, I have arrived at the conclusion that both Italy and America would benefit by its restriction; the fields of the former that now lie fallow, for lack of labor to cultivate them, would become productive, and the prisons and reformatories of the latter would not be overcrowded by a class of foreigners whose treacherous characteristics are such that a special arm of the detective service had to be created to keep them in check. It is said that the emigrant from upper Italy is sober, industrious, and makes a good citizen. I fear that the same can not be said of the one from Sicily or Calabria. The money he earns never sees the light of day after it finds its way to repose between the filthy linings of his leather wallet. His living expenses are about 40 cents a day, and the hogs in an American farmer's pen are more cleanly in their surroundings and habits than are he and his dozen associates who huddle together in one room and exist like animals, not human beings. When the wallet is well swollen he puts the contents in a registered letter and sends it to his relatives here, who change it into Italian currency and deposit it in the post-office bank. * * *
> Sometimes instead of sending it he brings it himself. In that case he appears upon the scene with a flashy suit, a top hat, a filled chain, and a brass watch, and struts among his former associates—a second Gulliver, a giant among pigmies. In a few weeks he returns, having induced some of his friends to accompany him. Immigrants of other nationalities, even the Polish Jews, spend their money where they make it, but the Sicilian and the Calabrese never. The only persons to whom their advent is a benefit are those who employ them at a cheaper figure than they would have to pay for American labor.
> To at least check the constant rush of those people to our shores I see but one remedy—the insertion of the illiteracy clause in the immigration law. This would oblige about 85 per cent of the class to devote their attention to the developing of the industries of their own country, which sadly need the aid that we are only too glad to dispense with.

Coming as it does from one who is so familiar with the people and the conditions in southern Italy, thoughtful men ought to give fair consideration to the views of this distinguished American consul.

The educational test will eliminate more than 300,000 Italians, Syrians, Russians, Greeks, and others from that section of Europe and Asia each year and will not touch 5 per cent of those from northwestern and northern Europe. Let us look at what the illiteracy test will do.

The Bohemians over 14 years of age who came last year were 11,015 in number. Of that number there were only 216 over 14 years of age that could not read. Those are all that would be cut out. Take the Finnish. While they are Russian citizens in a Russian country, they are contiguous to the Scandinavians, to Norway and Sweden, and are virtually of the same class of people. Although they are under the same laws with many of the illiterates of Russia, although they have the same Czar and the same legislative bodies, of the 13,893 who came only 351 were illiterates. Take the English, and of 43,144 who came there were only 536 illiterates. Of the French, of 8,390 who came there were only 170 illiterates. Of the Germans, of 78,091 who came there were only 5,310 illiterates. Of the Greeks, of 45,464 who came—I mean over 14 years of age in each of these statements—there were 13,883 that could not read a word, even of their own language. And here, in passing, let me remark, Mr. Chairman, that there were really more of each one of these nationalities that could not read than I have stated, because no test was applied to them. The question is asked by the immigration agents as to whether they can read or write or not. Then they answer without any test being applied, and no doubt many answer falsely as to this.

Of the Irish there were 36,463 that came who were over 14 years of age, and only 713 of them were unable to read. Of the north Italians—here I want to call your attention again to the difference between the north and the south Italians—of the north Italians there were 47,555 who came, and only 4,741 who were unable to read. Of the south Italians there were 214,000 who came, and 115,803 of them over 14 years of age were unable to read. Of the Russians there were 16,000, in round numbers, who came, and there were 6,998 who were unable to read. Of the Scandinavians there were 47,500 who came, and only 475 who were unable to read. Of the Scotch there were 17,274 who came, and only 149 illiterates, while of the Syrians there were 5,216 who came, and of that number 2,780 were unable to read.

Of the South Italians more than 50 per cent would be cut out; of their North Italian brothers but 10 per cent would go. Of the Greeks about 40-odd per cent would be cut out; and yet of the Bohemians, farther north of them, less than 2 per cent would go. Of the Syrians, from 40 to 50 per cent would be cut out; of the Scandinavians only about 2 per cent would be excluded, and of the Irish about a like number.

Mr. Chairman, I can not better conclude these remarks than by quoting from one who has devoted much study to this important question. He says:

> During the past fiscal year, which ended June 30, 1,285,349 aliens entered the United States—an increase of 556 per cent over the number that came ten years ago. Such a number is more than double the population of any Southern city, and is greater than that of any one of twenty-three States and Territories. * * *

Of this multitude—and never has there been in all history a similar invasion of any country—eight-tenths came from southeastern Europe and western Asia, regions which until recently sent us no immigrants. Three-fourths were destined to settle in the large Northern cities and labor markets of six States. Half of the million and a quarter were practically penniless. Less than one-tenth settled west of the Mississippi and south of the Potomac rivers. According to their own statements 343,402 of the adults were unable to read and write a single word in any language or dialect.

Such is the general character of the new immigration as a result of the foreign steamship's pursuit of profit and the large employer's search for cheap labor. The need of further rigidly selected and restrictive measures is obvious. Our existing laws, with the exception of Chinese and Japanese exclusion, are merely feeble police regulations, only half enforced at that. They do not in any appreciable way affect the caliber, character, or capacity of immigrants for citizenship in our democracy, and are merely unsuccessful attempts to exclude obviously undesirable persons because of some unquestionable physical deficiency.

What is needed is the absolute exclusion of the ignorant, the unintelligent, the penniless, those of low vitality, weak mentality, and poor physique, those who are able to perform only the cheapest kind of labor, those who desire to locate exclusively in the cities, and all who are unfitted for good citizenship in our enlightened industrial, political, and social democracy.

I am a firm believer in the illiteracy test. No test for selecting immigrants has had more general support. It works admirably in British Columbia, South Africa, and Australia, and would exclude, with the exception of near relatives, merely adults unable to read a line in some language or dialect. The only criticism is that it would not keep out the educated criminal and the literate anarchist agitator. While such a measure would not exclude the educated rascal and irresponsible agitator, it would catch the very class—the ignorant and illiterate—who are such a fertile field for his nefarious practices. Study and investigation show that it is the ignorant and illiterate who come destitute of resources, either in money, ability, or the means of support, who have a very low standard of living and little ambition to seek a better, who crowd into the city slums, and who, as I said, are such a fertile field for the corrupt bosses and irresponsible agitators.

We spend millions upon our public school system, and practically require a rudimentary education of our own native children as a condition precedent to full citizenship. Why admit foreigners on more favorable terms? Is a knowledge of the three "Rs" a handicap in the struggle for existence and an undesirable qualification for participation in our industrial, political, and social affairs? Such a test would keep out very few really desirable assimilative aliens, for all progressive foreign countries now have school facilities, advantage of which practically all the desirable illiterate persons that come to us would have taken, if they were coming now.

The chances of the South getting desirable immigrants as a result of such legislation would be increased. The classes that would be excluded by such laws are the very ones that settle in the slums and sweat shops of the Northeast, and are averse to going to the smaller cities and rural districts. Their coming prevents the coming of the more desirable. If the steamships are not allowed to bring the undesirable, they will fill their steerage with the desirable classes that used to come in such large numbers. The undesirable labor is even worse than the Chinese cooly, and ought to be excluded, if we consider our future racial, political, and social welfare. It conceals far worse menaces than the importation of the negro, and will add to and complicate our present economic, political, social, and race problems. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I now yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MADISON].

Mr. MADISON. Mr. Chairman, the Administration of Theodore Roosevelt is fast passing into history, and one of the greatest, if not the greatest, question in the minds of the American people at the present time is, Are the policies which have come to bear his name to be continued and perpetuated?

With the plain common people of the fields and workshops, who have always and do still regard the President as the champion of their rights and interests, there is the fear that they will not be. With many who have heretofore and many who continue to enjoy special privileges or freedom from restraint in the furtherance of their enterprises to enrich themselves at the expense of the people there is the fear that they may be.

A distinguished gentleman closed an eloquent speech on the floor of this House a short time ago with the statement that "Just what niche Theodore Roosevelt is to occupy in the temple of his country's history, God and the future alone can tell." The gentleman was correct, for the subject of his remarks is still a comparatively young man, whose career, in the natural order, lacks much of being closed, and the history of no man can be written until he is dead. But if to-day that career was to suddenly close, many of the gentlemen in Congress and out who have exhausted their vocabularies in depicting him as a usurper of power, a menace to the constitutional rights and liberties of his fellow-citizens, an insincere and dishonest Executive, would be saying of him that he enjoyed the confidence and affection of his countrymen as no man has since the days of Lincoln, and that he was entitled to and would live in history as a great tribune of the people. [Applause.]

In the history of America there are two great names that will always tower above the names of the other great men of this country as does a great mountain peak stand out in bold relief against the horizon above the surrounding mountains, dwarfing them, majestic though they may be in comparison with the surrounding foothills, by the grandeur of its magnificent proportions. They were men appointed by Providence to meet the two greatest occasions that ever occurred in our history—Washington and Lincoln.

Both performed their divinely appointed tasks in such manner that their names and memories belong, not alone to us, but to all the world. Each recognized the magnitude of the task that was set before him. When the day came for Abraham Lincoln to leave the little Illinois town where he had lived for years and whose people knew and loved him as no other people could; when the time of parting came and they crowded about him as he stood on the rear platform of his car in the rain that was falling from a murky sky of late winter, he said to them:

> I now go, not knowing when, if ever, I may return, with a task resting upon me greater than that which rested on Washington. Without the assistance of that divine Providence which ever attended him, I can not succeed; with it, I can not fail. Commending you to Him who can go with me and remain with you and be everywhere for good, as I trust you will in your prayers commend me, I bid you an affectionate farewell.

Yet, Mr. Chairman, when that task was heaviest; when the Treasury of the nation was depleted and its credit was almost gone and its bonds were being hawked about the markets of the world below par; when the great resources of the North seemed almost exhausted; when the homes of the country were being appealed to for more of their boys to carry on the war for the preservation of the Government of which Lincoln was the responsible head, a great political party met in convention and explicitly declared in its platform that that "Government had disregarded the Constitution in every part and had trodden down both public liberty and private rights and essentially impaired the prosperity of the country."

Its whole platform was, in fact, an indictment of Abraham Lincoln and his Administration as unjust, inhuman, and tyrannical. It was a supposed political exigency that called forth that denunciation.

No portion of our citizenship render greater praise to the personal character and public acts of Abraham Lincoln to-day than do the members of the same party that so fiercely condemned him in 1864.

It is just as inopportune and almost as criminal to condemn Theodore Roosevelt and to endeavor to destroy the faith and confidence the American people have in him and the work he is doing as it was to condemn Abraham Lincoln in 1864. [Applause.]

Each conceived in his youth the purpose of combating the evils of his day and time that existed in his country and from which its people were suffering, and each conscientiously applied himself to the task when the opportunity that goes with high place came to him.

President Roosevelt is engaged in the performance of that task, and the American people who believe in him, in his courage, his sincerity, and high purposes are demanding of us as their representatives, and as they have a right to demand, that we shall not condemn and embarrass him, but that we shall aid him in its performance.

The attempts that have been made by speeches in the Congress and elsewhere and by attacks through the press to discredit the President have met with no echoing response from the great middle class that composes the great mass of our people and whose sober judgment controls the selection of the nation's rulers and determines its destiny.

They know his history. They know the high ideals of his youth, of his consistent work then for reform and good government in municipal and State affairs, and no one can convince them at this late day that he ever forsook those ideals or abandoned that work. In his first message to Congress he wrote:

It should be as much the aim of those who seek for social betterment to rid the business world of crimes of cunning as to rid the entire body politic of crime of violence. Great corporations exist only because they are created and safeguarded by our institutions; it is, therefore, our right and our duty to see that they work in harmony with these institutions.

Artificial bodies depending upon statutory law for their existence or privileges should be subject to proper governmental supervision; and they can not be convinced that the man who wrote these things, and who from that time to this, through more than six long years, filled with some of the greatest events in the world's history, has earnestly and by all the means within his power labored to maintain these principles and write them into the law of the land, is not consistent and sincere.

It is futile to attempt to make them believe that the Chief Magistrate—who has insisted, not alone by word, but by official acts, that the law should be enforced against the criminal of all classes; that the imposing of great burdens upon the many to enrich the few must stop; that the door of opportunity should not be shut in the face of any man; but that it is the highest duty of government to protect all men in the exercise of their natural and inalienable rights—is dangerous to the Republic.

When a person or party attempts to prove, for political or other selfish purpose, that any given individual in high place is a menace to the public welfare, they must choose some one who has less of the human qualities that draw men to him than has the President.

The American people admire the man who earnestly and aggressively does things, and they hate a "quitter." [Applause.]

They admire the man who stands up and fights for what he conceives to be right; who fights in the open and gives and receives blows; who takes the side of the weak against the strong, of the oppressed against the oppressor; who loves his fellowmen, and lives with and among them and not above them.

The human qualities of Theodore Roosevelt have appealed to them and all the ridicule and denunciation of political opponents, all the criticism of an unfriendly press, all the speeches of the advocates of those who see their special privileges being wrested from them will not avail to convince them that he is inimical to the welfare of the State.

And history will record that the great heart of the American was right in this instance, as it has always been when it has bestowed its affection upon a public servant, and in future days the men who denounced Roosevelt upon the floor of this House will join those who denounced Lincoln as a tyrant; Grant as a butcher; Garfield as a thief, and McKinley as a weak tool of combines and trusts, in thanking God that the American people in such matters are prone to forgetfulness and are at all times generous users of the mantle of charity.

The things that have been referred to here by those who seek to destroy the influence of the President are things that because of their insignificance, even if they contained an element of truth; even if they, in some measure, would bear out the inferences sought to be drawn from them, which they do not even by the most forced and strained construction, are the passing events of a day which the historian of the future will not even give a casual notice. But he will judge this Administration by those things which it has done or helped to do that have made their lasting impress upon this people as a nation and have contributed toward either the advancement or the check of the moral and material development of this mighty Republic. [Applause.]

In a multitude of communities of the great West, located in places that were once numbered among the waste places of the earth, where the sun beats down on boundless expanses of sand heaps dotted with an occasional cactus and barren plains covered with mesquite and sagebrush, men will in the future stand in the doors of comfortable houses and look out upon the productive fields and the homes of happy and prosperous American communities and give credit for the transformation to the reclamation policy of the Roosevelt Administration.

And the American business man of the future, with his cargoes of American goods made in American mills by American workmen, as he floats those cargoes on their way to the markets of the Orient through the great canal that is destined to forever unite the waters of the two greatest oceans on the globe, will not forget that it was the quick, decisive action of a man who did things that ended the procrastinating efforts of more than fifty years and brought about the speedy realization of the dream of centuries. [Applause.]

Those of our people who have removed from homes in the East or Middle West to the great treeless plains of the eastern slope of the Cordilleras, and who have settled upon a great, wide expanse of prairie, and whose eyes have hungered for the sight of a tree; those who have watched the growth of the cottonwood, the pioneer tree of the West, from cutting or seed and tenderly cared for it because of tree hunger, know the value of a tree as no other people can, and the inhabitants of those regions where the Government is now growing forests where they were never dreamed of will join, in the future, with the inhabitants of other sections where the hand of the ruthless destroyer was checked in the destruction of their natural forests in praising the policy of this Administration in the conservation of our forests.

In the great meetings of the representatives of the nations of the world to devise means and to form agreements to hasten the time when the disputes arising between nations shall be settled by appeals to judicial tribunals instead of the sword, and whenever and wherever men meet and plan for the establishment of universal peace, the part that was played by the President of the United States in bringing about peace between the two great nations who were engaged in the Orient in one of the most gigantic struggles of modern times will act as an inspiration and serve as an example that will redound to the incalculable benefit of humanity and the advancement of civilization.

But a few years ago the door of opportunity was closed to practically every man who would start a factory or establish a new business to produce or trade in the things consumed by the American people unless he was a man of large means, for his wealthy and old-established competitor, by means of the railroad rebate, could undersell him in every market he entered, and bankruptcy and ruin were inevitable.

The day of the railroad rebate is ended, and if this Administration had no other mark to its credit but that, for all the years of its existence, that one alone would entitle it to the esteem and gratitude of the American people.

The abolishing of railroad rebates, however, was but an incident in the great epoch-making policy of this Administration—the governmental regulation and control of the great corporations engaged in interstate commerce.

All men recognize the great change that has occurred in economic conditions in this country in the last thirty years. The age of combination has come in the industries. The competitive system may not be entirely a thing of the past in everything, but in some it seems almost ended. The day of the short-line railroad, even of the small system, is a thing of the past. A few men control the great transportation lines of the country. These railroads are the highways of the nation over which the products of the farm and shop must move to the markets and over which the people must pass in the transactions of the affairs of life. The human mind can not conceive of a greater power than that of the control of the principal highways of the greatest country on this earth.

The tendency to abuse unrestricted power is universal. It will not do to entrust a few men with unrestricted control over the transportation agencies of a nation or the manufacture or production of any of the necessities of life. The conditions extant here make governmental regulation and control of interstate corporations in some degree imperative, and that era in our national life has, in fact, been inaugurated during this Administration by its responsible head.

And, Mr. Chairman, it is no longer a question in America as to whether these creatures of the law are higher than the law. No longer will men exclaim that the great burning issue in America is whether the state is to control the corporations or the corporations control the state. That question is settled forever and settled—as all questions are ultimately settled under our system of government—in the interest of the people.

There will be other battles to fight for those who believe in governmental control and regulation of corporations, but the great decisive battle was fought and won in the Fifty-ninth Congress, and we have entered upon the new era from which we will never recede.

By the things I have mentioned and others of almost equal importance will the Administration of Theodore Roosevelt be judged in history. They indicate the statesmanship of the President and his advisers.

As one Representative, having in common with the other Members of the House the burden of responsibility cast on me, I feel that it is the duty of the Congress, as soon as may be, to enact into law many of the suggestions the President has submitted in his recent messages, and in the brief space of time remaining I want to refer briefly to some of them.

Too long have the people suffered from the evils of overcapitalization of carrying and industrial corporations. Every one of those corporations is organized for the purpose of trade with the public, and every dollar of watered stock issued is an unjust burden upon the public, which it has a right to protest against.

It is a familiar story how railroads have been built in this country with money secured from the investing public by the sale of the mortgage bonds of the company, and in addition there have been issued to the incorporators and promoters the stock of the company equal to or greater than the amount of the bonds for which the holders paid little, if anything, but their patrons have been called on, through unreasonable rates, to pay the interest on the bonds, provide a sinking fund for their payment, and pay dividends on the stock.

It is a familiar story how both the carrying and industrial combinations are formed and the property of the former firms and corporations exchanged for vast sums in excess of their actual value, measured in the stock of the new concern, and the people, who must eat and must be clothed and housed, are, in fact, taxed upon the necessities of life to fill the gap between the actual and fictitious values of the property and make the stock dividend paying and worth a hundred cents on the dollar. Why should Congress hesitate to enact legislation to prevent such practice in the future by all corporations engaged or to engage in interstate commerce?

With some of the greatest lawyers in the country among its membership, it can, if it will, devise and pass effective legislation along these lines within a reasonable time, and it can not escape responsibility if it does not.

The Government having of necessity under existing conditions entered upon the task of regulation and control of common carriers engaged in interstate commerce can not now stop in the middle of the stream. It must go on wherever there is actual need for further extension of regulation within the constitutional power of Congress to provide it; not in a spirit of destructiveness and not by hasty or ill-considered action, but certainly and surely, sanely and conservatively, in the interest of the people who look to the Government for the exercise of its proper powers for their protection.

As the railroads are highways of the nation, every person is entitled to use them upon equal terms with every other person and also upon reasonable terms, and the latter can not be secured in fact until the Interstate Commerce Commission has the power to initiate proceedings for the reduction of rates.

The benefits of the present law can not be obtained without great expense. Shippers and communities are to-day suffering from the imposition of unreasonable and discriminatory rates because of the expense and hardship of commencing and prosecuting a proceeding before the Commission. The State of Kansas, realizing the need of assisting its local communities to obtain just rates, has appropriated money from its treasury to assist its people in maintaining proceedings of that character before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

There should be an attorney for the Interstate Commerce Commission, with a competent corps of assistants, whose duty it should be to examine into all the complaints of unreasonable rates for interstate shipments made informally by shippers and communities, and in cases where the rates appear unreasonable he should initiate proceedings for their reduction before the Commission and maintain them at the expense of the public.

The State of Kansas has adopted this plan as to its local commission with marked success and without great expense to the State. The matter should not be and can not be fairly thrown upon the shoulders of individual persons, communities, or States. It is essentially a matter of public duty to secure for all the public at all points just and reasonable interstate rates. It will not do to give the people the shadow while withholding from them the substance. It is folly to enter upon rate making unless the power to secure evidence, and the best evidence obtainable, is made possible. Making the physical valuation of all the railroads of the country at one time, and stopping there, would be of but little evidentiary value, for the value of to-day of any given road may be wide of its value a year from now. But we should not hesitate to give the Commission power to make a physical valuation of a road whenever, in its judgment, it is deemed necessary in the exercise of its rate-making function.

The President has recommended the passage of an act requiring notice to be given before the issuance of injunction orders by the Federal courts, and to thus change the rule of practice that it is within the discretion of the court or judge whether or not notice will be given. I yield to no man in respect and admiration for the courts of this land. Every student of the law and of public affairs knows that in the chambers of the great judges, away from the turmoil and strife of both business and political warfare, the great principles of American jurisprudence have been formulated. And I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that the courts have been the most watchful of the rights and liberties of the people and that they have been their most effective guardians. [Applause.] They have guarded them both against the assaults of the demagogue and the seeker after special privileges. Time and again they have stood between the people and the results of their own inflamed and misguided passions, and the most dangerous and despicable demagogue is the man who would seek to destroy the confidence of the public in them.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is no man so great, nor so good, learned, and wise, who can adjust the differences that arise between men upon the written affidavits of only one side to the controversy. As every lawyer is well aware, there are three kinds of injunction orders—restraining orders, temporary injunctions, and permanent injunctions. The first is issued only for the time being and to preserve the status quo until a hearing can be had to determine whether a temporary injunction should be granted. The second is issued for the purpose of restraining the commission of the act threatened to be committed during the pendency of the litigation in the court, and continues during the entire litigation unless dissolved. The third is the final judgment of the court forever prohibiting the threatened action.

It is a well-settled principle of equity that no temporary injunction will be granted if the effect of granting it is to determine the ultimate rights of the parties. But this principle often fails in practical operation if but one side is heard on the application for the temporary order, for the applicant is always convinced that he is right and will generally be able, in affidavits drawn by skillful attorneys, to make a strong showing that he is, although he may not be in fact. If the other party has no opportunity to meet the allegations of the applicant, no opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses against him, it is apparent that, no matter how just and upright the judge may be, no matter how desirous he is of doing right, the opposite party will, in many instances, be wrong.

The evil of granting injunctions without hearings is not confined to labor disputes.

There have been instances of injustice being done by both Federal and State judges by the issuance of ex parte writs in every class of cases under the jurisdiction of courts of equity. Once a temporary injunction is granted to continue during the litigation, it is often a long and expensive process to secure its dissolution, and in many instances great hardships and loss have been imposed upon the party enjoined before its dissolution is obtained.

There are instances in which restraining orders must be granted without notice, otherwise a threatened injury could be and often would be effected pending the hearing for the temporary injunction. While in a few instances the granting of a restraining order for a few days without notice would work a hardship on the party enjoined, yet the instances are very few. I can recall none, and I am certain it is the experience of every lawyer in this House that there are many occasions where the prompt action of a court of equity, by the issuance of a restraining order without notice and hearing, is absolutely indispensable to protect the rights of litigants from irreparable injury. But there have been abuses in the issuance of restraining orders in the length of time which they have been allowed to be effective.

In these days of quick transportation and ready means of communication there is absolutely no need for the life of a restraining order to be extended over one week and the Congress ought, in the case of Federal courts, restrict the effectiveness to that or some other short period and provide also that it should not issue except upon giving bond to secure the party enjoined against loss.

Mr. Chairman, not long after the establishment of this Government the leaders of political thought and action in this country divided into two distinct schools upon the question of levying a tax upon imports. One advocated the theory of levying a tax upon imports sufficient to pay the expenses of the Government and for revenue only, it being the idea of its members that the people of this country should buy their goods of every kind needed by them where they could buy cheapest, no matter where that might be. They utterly disregarded and held in contempt any attempt upon the part of the Government, through a tax on imports, to foster and build up manufacturing industries on our own soil. With the cheap labor of Europe already in possession to a large degree of the American markets that theory meant, if carried into practice, that this country would have always remained a purely agricultural country, with no great cities and no great manufacturing industries.

The other school believed in the principle of building manufacturing industries on American soil for the benefit of American business men, American laborers, and incidentally of American agriculturists, by providing for them a stable and handy market for the products of their farms, plantations, and ranches. The object sought by the latter school was to build up American industries to the point where they could compete with the industries of every country in the world. It was never intended by any of the fathers of this school that the duty levied should be other than in truth and fact protective. They did not believe that it should be prohibitive, or even so high as to enable the American manufacturer to make more than a reasonable profit.

The Republican party, at its organization, espoused the principle of protection as one of its cardinal principles, and it adhered to the ideas of the founders of the school that protection and protection alone was the purpose of the protective tariff and that it should never be used as a means for extortion or the conferring of special privileges or unfair advantage. There has grown up among the people of this country a feeling that is so general that it can not be long disregarded by Congress, if it would do so, that the rates of the Dingley law are at this time so high in many particulars that they give to some industries the opportunity of extorting unreasonable prices for their products from the public. There is a demand that the tariff be revised, and it is universally conceded that a revision is to be made, so that the question has changed from, "Will there be a revision?" to "What kind of a revision will there be?"

Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to represent a people who will demand that it be a revision that actually revises. A mere juggling with words that works no change of the law in fact where rates are excessive will not suffice. In such cases they will ask that there be actual reduction or removal of duty entirely, according to whether the industry is in actual need of protection. The great majority of the people of the West, in common with a great majority of the people of the entire country, believe just as strongly to-day as they ever did in the past in the principle of protection, although strongly protesting against its use to enable the extortion of unreasonable profits. The greatest calamity that could occur to the country, in comparison with which all previous financial disasters would sink into insignificance, would follow the repeal of all protective duties. The person is not yet born who will see the adoption of free trade or tariff for revenue only as the settled policy of this Government.

The Democratic party, if given absolute power, would not commit that crime against the interests of every business man, workingman, and farmer in this country. It would doubtless threaten to do so, and, after the business of the country was prostrated by the unsettlement of conditions, would do as it did the last time it had unrestricted control, wind up with the passage of an act recognizing the principle of protection. We can not make it too strongly understood that if the Republican party revises the tariff it will retain the protective principle. [Applause on the Republican side.] That no industry that needs protection need fear for one moment, and that only those who, behind a tariff wall that shuts out foreign competition have been able to extort unreasonable prices need prepare for a change.

James A. Garfield, on the floor of this House, said of the Congress that in 1870 was engaged in a revision of the tariff:

> The great want of industry is a stable policy, and it is a significant comment on the character of our legislation that Congress has become a terror to the business men of the country.

And, Mr. Chairman, this Congress and all succeeding ones should emphasize the fact that the settled policy of this Government toward American industries is protection without graft or unfair advantage.

When we come to the enactment of new tariff laws, it is to be hoped that provision will be made to extend the foreign markets for the products of the farms and ranches of the country. The American beef steer is to-day excluded from every European market except the United Kingdom and Belgium. There is no question but what he makes the finest meat of any animal of his kind, and that millions of the hungry of Europe who are dining upon the flesh of ancient goats and broken-down horses are anxious for the opportunity to feed upon the juicy steaks and delicious roasts that his carcass produces.

The American cattle raiser, when he takes his cattle to market, finds there just two customers, the beef trust and the exporter. The old days when competitive buyers crowded around him in the stock yards are past. If, after he sells his cattle to one whom he supposes to be a single purchaser, he drops around to the packing houses, he sees part of them in the pens of Armour & Co., a part in those of Swift & Co., and so on.

He has learned that the only competitor of the beef trust is the export buyer, and he is looking to the American Congress to provide the means to compel the removal of the barriers that keep his cattle from German, French, and other European markets.

When this Government enacted the Dingley law it placed its rates into effect at once as to every country, but provided for the negotiation of reciprocal commercial agreements whereby certain concessions might be made to nations with which an agreement could be effected.

The expected has happened. Every industry receiving the benefits of the Dingley tariff and threatened with a reduction of rate by a reciprocity treaty has been able to defeat the ratication of the treaty.

Germany enacted a new tariff law in 1902, but did not put it into effect, and, with a view of negotiating reciprocal agreements with other nations, provided that discretion should be granted the executive as to when it should be enforced. The commercial treaty existing until recently between this country and Germany was denounced by her in 1905, and notice was given that the high rates of the 1902 law would be enforced against this country on March 1, 1906. This has been avoided, however, by a temporary arrangement that was succeeded by another which will doubtless continue until after the revision of our tariff.

As is well known, Germany not alone prohibits the shipment of live cattle from this country, but also by unfair sanitary restrictions and customs regulations keeps out of her market a great many of our other meat products, and practically all the countries of Europe in some manner effect the same result.

The Western live-stock producer cries out against these things, and he will ask of the next Congress, when it comes to the revision of the tariff, that if it enacts a maximum and minimum tariff it give to the Executive the power to use the maximum rate to compel justice to him in the markets of the world, and the farmer will join him in the demand that no matter what the form of the tariff act it be of such a kind and character as can be employed to extend the markets for the grain, live stock, and other products of American farms.

Mr. Chairman, greater economic changes have occurred in this country in the last thirty years than have occurred since English civilization was planted on this continent. These changes have brought great problems for solution. They can not all be worked out in a day or a month. They are so vast, so complicated, and so vitally affect the material and political welfare of the nation that haste must be made slowly, and they call not alone for the most exalted wisdom, but they also demand the exercise of the highest statesmanship and loftiest patriotism.

The great burden of responsibility for the conduct of the affairs of this nation has rested upon the Republican party practically all the time for half a century, and that half century of American history is the grandest page in the history of any nation in the world.

Each changing condition has been met by that party under the leadership of Abraham Lincoln, Charles Sumner, Edwin M. Stanton, Ulysses S. Grant, James G. Blaine, James A. Garfield, John Sherman, and William McKinley, and other great leaders, and they have been met squarely and settled in the ways conducive to the best interests of the American people.

The old party has not lost either its patriotism or its statesmanship. It is still the one single, active, vital, moving force in American politics that has coherence sufficient among its members to enable it to carry out its pledges to the people when the responsibility of government rests upon it. It will in its next national convention mark out its programme for the ensuing four years. Its platform will be one upon which every patriotic American who loves his country and would advance its interests can stand. It will pledge justice to capital and labor, and it will do it without demagoguery and without attempt to set one class against another. It will promise a revision of the tariff along protective lines, but a revision that will mean a thorough examination into every rate and schedule. It will indorse the Administration of Theodore Roosevelt and pledge itself to maintain and continue its policies, and, as in the past, it will keep faith with the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—yeas 90, noes 41.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WATSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21260, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SPECIAL MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which, with accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered printed:

[For message of the President see Senate proceedings of to-day.]

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 171. Joint resolution providing for assistance to the people of the storm-swept States of Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 5126. An act to grant the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington, certain right of way for sewer and street purposes through and along the military reservation of Fort Lawton, Wash., and through the reservations for the Lake Washington Canal.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ALLEN, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for four days on account of important business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If I caught the utterance of the Chair a moment ago, the President's message was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, all of it. The parliamentary inquiry is whether the President's message ought not to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

The SPEAKER. The Chair examined the message quite fully.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that the Committee of the Whole House might determine where it should go.

The SPEAKER. We get messages from the President about many matters almost daily in the ordinary transaction of business, and under the practice of the House they are referred by the Speaker to the appropriate committee. The Chair has carefully examined the message and is satisfied that there is but one matter in it that does not belong to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that is a matter touching postal savings banks, and already by many bills and messages that committee has jurisdiction of that subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the gentleman from New York rises to a question of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that that part of the President's message referring to financial legislation and to revision of the tariff can not, under the rules of the House, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And also the part referring to the postal savings bank.

Mr. PAYNE. That point comes rather late. Since the order was made the Committee on Enrolled Bills has made a report and the gentleman from Iowa has made his motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. That is correct. The point of order, even if it were well taken, comes too late.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, one word, if the Chair pleases, before the Chair pronounces upon that—one word. The assertion is now made that the point has come too late. I leave it to the Chair if we were not trying to the very best of our ability to obtain the attention of the Chair, appealing to the Chair for its attention, before the motion was made and pending its making. Therefore, if it be too late, it has been made too late by the action of the Speaker, and not by the action of the Members of the House, who had a right to appeal to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. This is the situation——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make this point of order, if I may be permitted——

The SPEAKER. But there is nothing pending about which to make a point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would be pending but for the fact that the Speaker has refused to recognize in order that it might be pending.

The SPEAKER. Let us not muddy the water by statements that gentlemen are mistaken about. The message was read, and the Chair, following the usual practice, referred——

Mr. WILLIAMS. But that is the point of order.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair, following the usual practice, referred the message to the Judiciary Committee, and then the Chair laid before the House the report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and the report was made; and then for the first time, after other business had intervened, not on a point of order, but under the guise of a parliamentary inquiry, the gentleman rose, and we have the situation about something which is not pending. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. I rise for the purpose of making a motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is too late under the ruling of the Chair just made.

Mr. PAYNE. But I desire to make a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair, having in mind the gentleman from Mississippi, said as many as were in favor would say "aye," as many as were opposed would say "no," but the result of the vote was not announced, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11.30 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House do take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11.30 o'clock.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the House was dividing, and that motion is not in order.

Mr. DALZELL. But, Mr. Speaker, the House was not dividing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes a highly privileged motion, that the House do take a recess. The motion is highly privileged and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I think that is dilatory, and I do not think the House ought to be kept waiting at this hour in order to educate the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But there is nothing more important than my education, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11.30 o'clock. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 137, nays 96, answered "present" 6, not voting 148, as follows:

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of certain channels in the harbor of Portland, Me. (H. Doc. 896)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting additional reports in response to the joint resolution of March 7, 1906, directing an investigation of railroad discriminations and monopolies in coal and iron (S. Doc. 450)—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. GRONNA, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9111) to permit the State of North Dakota to sell a portion of certain lands heretofore granted to it as a memorial park on the White Stone Hills battlefield, for the purpose of raising funds for improving and beautifying such park, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1533), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the resolution of the Senate (S. R. 40) to provide for the transportation by sea of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1534), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4712) to provide for the care of persons adjudged insane in the district of Alaska, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1535), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 60) for the relief of the Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis Railway Company of Illinois, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1531), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8734) for the relief of Niels P. Larsen, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1532), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PRINCE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3388) to correct the military record of William A. Hinsch, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1536), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. YOUNG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 6136) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue patent to certain lands in Boise, Idaho, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1537), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GORDON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8545) for the relief of Jackson Pryor, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1538), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENSON presented a memorial of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Milwaukee, Wis., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Aldrich currency bill," which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, Wis., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to increase the diversion of the water from Lake Michigan into the Chicago Drainage Canal, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. du PONT presented sundry memorials of labor organizations of Wilmington, Del., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a petition of Preston City Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Preston City, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post bill," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Business Men's Association of New Haven, Conn., and a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of New Haven, Conn., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a public building at that city, which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. RAYNER presented petitions of sundry citizens and labor organizations of Cumberland and Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law" relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3720) for the relief of the families of certain Indian policemen who were killed during the engagement at Sitting Bull's camp, on Grand River, December 15, 1890, and for the relief of Alexander Middle, who was wounded in said engagement, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 577) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5306) granting increase of pensions to survivors of the Indian wars under the acts of July 27, 1892, and June 27, 1902, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 578) thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 142) providing for the deposit of a model of any vessel of war of the United States Navy, bearing the name of a State of the United States, in the capitol building of said State, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 579) thereon.

Mr. DIXON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2963) for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Crow Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 581) thereon.

GLACIER NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. DIXON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was refered the bill (S. 5648) to establish the Glacier National Park west of the summit of the Rocky Mountains and south of the international boundary line in Montana, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 580) thereon.

Mr. CARTER. In connection with the report just made I wish to offer a resolution, and I request consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Geological Survey is hereby authorized to reproduce by photolithograph the map filed as a part of the report on S. 5648, and to direct the reproduction of the illustrations, without competitive bidding.

ESTATE OF CORNELIUS VAN COTT.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4720) for the relief of the sureties on the official bond of the late Cornelius Van Cott, to report it favorably, and I submit a report (No. 576) thereon. It is a brief bill, and may as well be passed now. I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that the estate of Cornelius Van Cott, late postmaster of the city of New York, and the sureties on his bond be relieved from the payment to the United States of America of the sum of $1,285.71, the amount paid H. Clayton Graff during the fourth quarter of the year 1902 and the first and second quarters of the year 1903, who was carried on the pay rolls at the New York City post-office for that period.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 6885) granting a pension to Mary O'Neill, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 6886) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Jewell, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURKETT introduced a bill (S. 6897) granting an increase of pension to Maud J. Clark, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 6898) granting an increase of pension to James Ritchie, jr., which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WETMORE introduced a bill (S. 6899) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan Davison, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DICK introduced a bill (S. 6900) to amend the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against any unlawful restraints and monopolies," which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 6901) to acquire the triangular square bounded by Second and T streets and Rhode Island avenue NW. for use as a public park, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLAPP introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 6902) to refund to the Territory of Hawaii the amount expended in maintaining light-house service on its coasts from the time of the organization of the Territory until said light-house service was taken over by the Federal Government; and

A bill (S. 6903) for the relief of John I. Conroy and others.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,800 for the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1909, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 to meet the expenses on the part of the United States in the arbitration before the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WETMORE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $150,000 for the purchase of the tract of land formerly known as "Graceland Cemetery," in the District of Columbia, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus public buildings bill, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $200,000 for the erection of a fireproof addition to the court-house, Washington, D. C., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,267 for the purchase of property for embassy at Tokyo, Japan, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. McCREARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill No. 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RESTRICTIONS ON LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. DAVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. HEMENWAY submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the University of the United States be, and the same is hereby, authorized to continue during vacation and for the remainder of the Sixtieth Congress the services of a stenographer, authorized by Senate resolution No. 59, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,000 per annum.

COMMISSION UNDER JAY TREATY.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Resolved, That there be printed and bound, as a Senate document, report of the proceedings and opinions of the Commission under the seventh article of the Jay treaty, with correspondence relating thereto, prepared by Jackson H. Ralston, the same to be suitably indexed.

JOSE T. SILVA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with section 32 of an act of Congress entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, I transmit herewith certified copies of a franchise granted by the executive council of Porto Rico to Jose T. Silva.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 29, 1908.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I desire to call up the resolution which I introduced yesterday relating to Indian affairs and ask its adoption, and upon the resolution I desire to be heard for a few moments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield that I may make a request, which will occupy but a moment?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia, has been at the head of the Calendar for a good many weeks and it has been passed over to accommodate Senators. I think it is very important that that bill should have consideration, and I rise to ask unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock on Thursday, May 7, any amendments pending and to be offered on the bill shall be voted upon without further debate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator put that request a little later? I am compelled to be out of the city on the 7th.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask what bill the Senator refers to?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is the bill to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Could the Senator put it on the 11th? I must be out of the city on the 7th.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would put it pretty far ahead.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All right; then make it the day before the 7th.

Mr. KEAN. Why not pass the bill now? It is a very simple measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. My request is made to accommodate one or two Senators who would like to have it postponed. I will ask that on Wednesday, May 6, at 4 p. m., the bill be voted upon without further debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that Senate bill 4812 be voted upon at 4 o'clock on Wednesday, the 6th day of May; that the vote be then taken upon amendments pending and to be offered and the bill without further debate.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to the bill being taken up for consideration at that time or on any other date, but until it has been taken up and discussed I am unwilling to agree upon any time for voting upon it. We have had no debate at all upon the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will postpone that motion until we can fix a day.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire to say that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] is ill and confined to his house and will not be able to be in the Senate for some days to complete his speech on the Brownsville affair. In his behalf, in order that he may be relieved in that regard, I ask that he may be permitted to print his speech in the RECORD and extend it with such additions and extracts from testimony as are now embodied in his prepared speech.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts on behalf of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from Massachusetts is that, owing to the illness of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], that Senator be permitted to print the residue of his speech in the RECORD.

Mr. BACON. I beg that the Chair will again state the request. I could not hear it distinctly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is that the Senator from Missouri, being ill, may be permitted to print the residue of his speech in the RECORD, together with such additions and extensions as he may desire.

Mr. BACON. I think that would be a very unfortunate precedent. I have never known such a request to be made in the Senate. We know that in the other House it is the common practice and the recognized practice, but I think it would be very unfortunate for us to set a precedent of that kind here to print speeches which are not delivered. I hope it will not be done.

I am perfectly willing that every indulgence possible may be given to the Senator from Missouri, but if this be done once, where will be the end of it? I know it is generally supposed throughout the country—I say generally—possibly that is probably too broad a term, but it is thought by many that the practice which obtains in one House obtains also in the other. But it has never obtained here. There is great liberality as to publishing without being read exhibits or papers which are used in a speech. They are allowed to be inserted in the RECORD; but this is the first time I have heard during my limited term of service here a request made that a speech which has not been delivered should be printed in the RECORD.

I would say this, Mr. President: If it were near the close of the session and the Senator from Missouri had been prevented by illness from delivering his speech, that would be a providential matter which might be recognized as a sufficient ground upon which to base exceptional action on the part of the Senate. But we have no reason to doubt the fact, I presume, that the Senator will have the opportunity before the session closes to conclude his remarks. While I have every disposition to concede everything which circumstances may demand, I do not think that the present circumstances do demand that we should make such a wide departure from the practice of the Senate and inaugurate a precedent which certainly would be followed in the future in other instances.

Mr. LODGE. I am, of course, entirely aware of the rule of the Senate against extending speeches in the RECORD. I think it is an extremely wise rule and I hope it will never be changed. In this particular case the Senator who has given the notice that he would complete his speech to-day is ill. He may be several days absent from the Senate and it may be some time longer before he will be able to complete the delivery of his speech. He sent a message to me desiring to express to the Senate the hope that he might be permitted to print his speech as it stands, most of it having already been delivered. It contains a large number of extracts from testimony which could be perfectly well embodied and which permission is constantly given.

I have no desire to infringe any rule, nor would he have any such desire. I am as strongly in favor of the practice and rule of the Senate in this respect as anyone can be. I thought this was an exceptional case in which this relief might be given to a Senator who was ill.

I certainly shall not insist on the request if there is any objection to it. I merely desired to say that the Senator from Missouri could not go on to-day and it is uncertain when he will be able to complete the delivery of his speech.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I understand that if at any time a Senator is unable to read a speech which he has prepared, it has been the custom here for some time, I know, that he may ask some Senator to read it for him. It may be read for him, but it must be either read by him or some one else before it goes into the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Missouri desires to have the remainder of his speech read to the Senate and to complete it in that way, I am sure I should be very glad to assist him, and I have no doubt others would be, in arranging it in that manner and relieve him from the delivery of the remainder of his speech.

I thought it well, however, to make the statement at this time that he would not be here to-day to carry out the notice which appears on the Calendar, and which would leave the day clear, if the Senator from New Hampshire desires, as I hope he does, to take up the child-labor bill this morning, because I understand the agricultural appropriation bill will not be taken up until to-morrow.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope, in some way in substance, the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts may be granted. The situation is somewhat peculiar. The Senator from Missouri has been here speaking, I believe, upon three different days. He was unable to complete his speech yesterday, as he hoped he might, and was compelled to suspend with a notice that he would resume this morning. It is evident, and it has been evident, I think, to all his colleagues, that he has not been in good health, to say the least, and he has been speaking at a very great disadvantage. A speech with him, as it would be with any other Senator under like circumstances, weighs, no doubt, somewhat on his mind and interferes with the recovery of his health.

It would be a great relief to him, I understand, if he were permitted to conclude his speech in some manner, and, I think, the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado is perhaps, one that will relieve him, and either in that way or some other I hope that the request in substance at least may be granted.

There is this further reason. I am very anxious to have the speech concluded, because until it is the case has not been fully presented on that side, and there are some who want to speak on the other side of the proposition. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY] has given notice that he will address the Senate. He wants to address the Senate in answer to that speech and to the speech of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], made a few days ago. We are near the close of the session, and it is important to get through this discussion, if it is possible to conclude it, so that we may take action on these proposed measures.

I understand the Senator from Massachusetts has sent word to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. LODGE. I have sent word to the Senator from Missouri that if he desires his speech can be read here, and I shall be very happy to read it for him, as I have no doubt other Senators would be equally glad to aid him in that respect. If he expresses a wish to have it done in that way, we can go on to-day with it and conclude it.

Mr. FORAKER. If he should send word, I reserve the right to call up the matter again when we hear from him.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am occupying the floor through the courtesy of the Senator from Arkansas, and I will take but one moment more in connection with the measure I brought to the notice of the Senate.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BULKELEY. I have already given notice that on Thursday, if the Senator from Missouri shall have concluded his remarks, I would address the Senate on the pending matter in regard to the Brownsville affray. I have no desire to impose on the Senator in consequence of the illness of which he complains and of which we who have listened to him for the last few days are painfully aware.

I am not entirely familiar with the rule of the Senate in this respect except as it has been explained by the Senator from Georgia, but I understand that it is not the custom to publish the remarks of a Senator that have not actually been delivered in the Senate. However, in this case I should not object unless it is too great an innovation on the rules of this body. If that course should be adopted, I should like to be assured that the remarks the Senator has already made and those that are contained in the balance of his speech will be published as quickly as possible in the RECORD, in order that I might carry out my plan of replying, if I can, to the suggestions made in his remarks in regard to this matter.

I have no objection to the reading of the remainder of the speech by another Senator or by the Secretary, if the Senate should see fit to concede that proposition. If it occupied a long time—possibly one or two days, as the Senator told me yesterday would be consumed in the delivery of the balance of his remarks, with the progress he was making—it would necessitate somewhat a change of the notice which I gave. I understand the Senator from Arkansas has already announced that he will speak Friday on another measure, which would necessarily postpone the time that I desired to occupy to Monday next.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, the text of the speech is at the house of the Senator from Missouri. He has telephoned that he would be very much obliged if it would be read here and he desires to get it in the RECORD as soon as possible. I have therefore sent for it. It will be some little time before it will be received, and as soon as it can be read of course it will go into the RECORD. But I suppose it may then take some time. The Senator from Missouri will wish to correct the proof no doubt.

Mr. BULKELEY. In view of the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts and also in view of the probability that it will take some time to read the remarks in the Senate and then have them published in the RECORD, I should like to withdraw the notice I have given to speak on Thursday and make it Monday of next week. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if that gives ample time?

Mr. LODGE. Ample time.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON rose.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to make a request.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to make a suggestion in connection with it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps my request will cover the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest to the Senator that in his request he fix a time for taking up the bill for debate and then for a vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to do that, Mr. President.

Concerning this bill—and I beg pardon of the Senator from Arkansas for keeping him from the floor a single moment—it has been on the Calendar a long time and has been postponed at the suggestion of various Senators. The Senator from Minnesota desires to discuss it and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] wishes to speak on it. I have myself an amendment that I want to address myself to for a few minutes, and, as I presume, other Senators will wish to speak.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to make the request that, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia be made the unfinished business, not to interfere with appropriation bills, and that it be voted upon on Wednesday, May 6, at 4 o'clock p. m., the vote to be taken upon the amendments pending and to be offered and upon the bill at that time.

Mr. NELSON. It will continue as unfinished business from now on?

Mr. GALLINGER. From now on, to be laid aside from time to time, and to be discussed at times.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4812, and that all amendments pending and to be offered to the bill and the bill be voted upon at 4 o'clock on Wednesday, May 6.

Mr. BACON. I have no objection to voting at the time indicated, but I think the safer practice is to agree that we will vote on that day. I have noticed frequently that when the hour was fixed there is always some injustice done to some person who wished to be heard.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will ask that the bill be voted upon before adjournment on that day. That is entirely satisfactory. Let it be made the unfinished business by unanimous consent.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I shall not oppose his request. I am not opposed to the principle of the bill, I am simply in favor of having it amended. I think it goes too far in some particulars.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I understand to be the Senator's view. Let my request be stated, that the bill be made the unfinished business and that it be voted on before adjournment upon that day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 4812 be made the unfinished business, and that all amendments pending and to be offered to it and the bill itself be voted on before adjournment upon Wednesday, May 6.

Mr. BURROWS. Will not the Senator adhere to his original request that it be voted upon at a given hour, at 4 o'clock?

Mr. FRYE. No; objection was made to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Objection was made to it.

Mr. BURROWS. I think it would be better to have a fixed hour. Otherwise the session may be prolonged into the night.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, let it go.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BACON. I could not hear what was said on the other side. Is there a change in the request?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no change from the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LANDS OF THE CHOCTAWS AND CHICKASAWS.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 167, by Mr. DAVIS, directing the Secretary of the Interior to inform the Senate in regard to the authority by which certain lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians have been withdrawn from allotment in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the resolution under consideration is of the utmost importance in view of the fact, as Senators well know, that the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which I have the honor to be a member, has for more than a week had under investigation the conduct of certain Department officers with reference to Indian affairs, and that investigation, to my mind, has disclosed some startling facts.

That investigation, Mr. President, has not yet concluded, and I say in view of the fact that this resolution seeks certain information which may be of great benefit to the Committee on Indian Affairs in its investigation, I trust there will be no objection to its adoption.

I do not intend, Mr. President, to in any way reflect upon the Department of the Interior, but, to be entirely frank, I desire to say that most of the resolution relates to matters not occurring during the term of the present incumbent, but of his predecessor. Therefore, I take it, sir, that there can be no objection upon either side of the Chamber to the procuring of the information which the resolution seeks.

It has been heralded by the press of Oklahoma, through that new State, that I am opposed to the bill taking off the restriction upon the allotted lands. Here and now I desire to say that this report is absolutely false and that I am not opposed to a bill relieving the allotted land from the restrictions, if that bill be properly drawn, safeguarding and protecting the rights of the Indians, who are the wards of the Government.

As I said, the investigation which has proceeded before the Committee on Indian Affairs for the last week has disclosed some startling facts.

Mr. President, the act of June 28, 1898, directed the Secretary of the Interior to enroll all persons of Choctaw and Chickasaw Indian blood on the citizenship rolls of said nations. That act was construed by Judge Willis J. Van Devanter, the Assistant Attorney-General of the United States, who rendered an opinion under date of March 17, 1899, construing and defining said act for the guidance of the departmental officers, which opinion in part is as follows:

> The act of 1898 made no provision for new applications for citizenship. The Commission was authorized and directed to enroll the persons indicated—
> That is, all persons of Indian blood—
> and to investigate the rights of all other persons whose names were found upon any tribal roll.

Mr. President, to my utter amazement and surprise, having before the Committee on Indian Affairs the law clerk of the Indian Office, Mr. Ward, we found that this act of June 28, 1898, had been totally disregarded in many respects, and that more than 2,000 people had been denied enrollment because of the fact that they had not filed their applications, when the act of June 28, 1898, did not require an application.

More than that, Mr. President, on the 4th of March, 1907, at midnight, the enrollment of these citizens terminated. At midnight on March 4, as I understand the act, the right of enrollment, the question of passing upon the enrollment, ceased. We found from the testimony of Mr. Ward that Mr. Hitchcock, within less than a week prior to March 4, 1907, passed upon 2,023 cases for enrollment. Papers involving thousands of pages of testimony were passed upon hurriedly by the Department, and these 2,023 cases were stricken from the rolls after the rolls had been completed by the Secretary of the Interior, involving the right of citizenship of more than 10,000 applicants.

Mr. President, this resolution directs the Secretary of the Interior to furnish to the Senate a reason for that action upon the part of the Secretary of the Interior. Can there be any harm in this, Senators? Can any wrong result from it? Ought not the Senate to know the facts about this matter?

Mr. President, the Indian is, and of right ought to be, the ward of the Government, and ought not his rights to be protected in this question of allotment and in this question of removing restrictions from allotted lands?

These 2,023 cases, involving the rights of more than 10,000 Indians and their children, are now pending in court and before the Department, applications to be placed upon these rolls. Their rights are involved in this controversy. The Senate has a right to know just what their rights are, and I see no objection to the adoption of the resolution.

More than that, Mr. President, the act of June 28, 1898, made it a compulsory duty of this Commission to look up the tribal roll, not to wait until applications were filed, not to sit back in their tents in the field upon their official dignity and ask the Indians, who are unacquainted with our law and our customs and our regulations, to file their applications, but the act of June 28, 1898, required that this Commission go to the tribal roll and enroll every Chickasaw and every Choctaw of Indian blood without question as to an application.

This, Mr. President, I charge has not been done. I say, sir, that these Indians, whether of the whole or the half blood, whether freedmen or of whatever mixture of blood they may be, are entitled to the protection of this Government in the establishment of their just rights in this common Indian property.

Somewhere, somehow, by some means this right has been denied to 10,000 or more Indians. They to-day are knocking at the door of the Committee on Indian Affairs asking to have their rights passed upon by that committee and by this honorable body.

Ah, Mr. President, I am met with the specious reply that at some time, at some place, the Indian shop ought to be closed; that we ought to stop business in Indian affairs, shut up camp, and let that end the matter.

That would be well, Mr. President, if it did not involve any right of Indian women and children, who are to be left helpless, homeless, and destitute by such an order of procedure.

Mr. President, I intend to take up but a very few moments of the time of the Senate on this resolution. Not only that, sir, but the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Hitchcock, without warrant of law, without the slightest shadow of legal authority, as was determined by the select committee appointed for that purpose, of which the distinguished senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] was a member—Secretary Hitchcock, I say, without the slightest shadow of authority, arbitrarily and summarily withdrew from allotment 1,373,000 acres of the most choice land belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes.

Ah, sir, when called before that committee, as has been reported to me by one of the Senators composing that committee, Mr. Hitchcock could give no reason except that he thought it was best to do that, that he was bigger than Congress itself, and that he declined to restore that land for the purpose of allotment.

Mr. President, this resolution calls upon the present Secretary of the Interior to know whether or not he proposes to follow the precedent established by Secretary Hitchcock. There is to-day unallotted in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations 2,982,000 acres of the common lands of said Choctaws and Chickasaws, inclusive of the 1,373,000 acres which have been withdrawn by Secretary Hitchcock for the purpose of creating a forest reserve and a game preserve.

Mr. President, this land was given to the Indians as a heritage. When we first discovered this great country of ours the red man was its master, the red man was its king. For generations we have moved him back and back and back toward the setting sun, until to-day he finds himself with barely 40 acres of land carved from this vast possession if he be of mixed blood, and 320 acres of land if he be of the whole blood, for a homestead.

I say, Mr. President, that there is a question of sentimentality that clings around this subject that can not be ignored by Senators. The spirit of commercialism may be invoked, and it may be urged that this country ought to be opened to white settlers. I say that the right of the Indian, the ward of the Government, should be protected in the consideration of these measures.

Mr. President, I want to know of the Secretary of the Interior—and I apprehend that every Senator on this floor wants to know—if he purposes continuing the policies of Mr. Hitchcock with reference to the 1,373,000 acres of land withdrawn from the Indian allotments for the purpose of establishing this game preserve and this forest reserve. Not only that, Mr. President, but this is followed by the recommendation of the present Secretary of the Interior as to the 1,373,000 acres of land, that he be permitted to negotiate with the State of Oklahoma to sell this land to the State of Oklahoma for a forest reserve and a game preserve. Mark you, gentlemen, there are but 2,982,000 acres of the unallotted land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations. Mark you, 1,373,000 acres have been withdrawn from allotment for this game and forest preserve. Now, deduct that from the 2,982,000 acres of land and you have but a small portion of land left to be allotted to these Indians of the whole, the half, and the mixed blood, who, I contend, have been unjustly and improperly kept from these rolls, and who are now contesting their rights in the courts of the country.

Why, Mr. President, not only that, but the Secretary of the Interior inspired a bill, which was reported favorably from the Committee on Indian Affairs by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] on yesterday, and in that bill is the merciless provision that the rolls shall be conclusive evidence of the degree of blood, age, and so forth, of the allottee. That section, Mr. President, upon its face looks innocent and not harmful of the rights of the Indian, and one so wholly unacquainted with Indian affairs or with the laws regulating their allotments as myself, would scarcely detect any injustice in that provision; but, Mr. President, upon investigation, I find that that provision "that the rolls shall be conclusive evidence of the degree of blood" is aimed at this condition: If an Indian is mixed with "nigger," under the law he gets a homestead of only 40 acres. If he is not mixed with "nigger," he gets an allotment of 320 acres as a homestead. This bill proposes to make the rolls conclusive evidence as to the degree of blood. In other words, Mr. President, it proposes to make the action of that citizenship court of the Indian Territory and the work of the men who enrolled those ignorant Indians final and conclusive of the degree of blood, thereby determining their homestead rights.

Mr. President, I have before me to-day the report of the select committee to examine into these matters. On page 1521 of that report I find that in one family of the Chickasaw Nation—the McGee family—there are ten children—Dora, Annie, Florence, Mattie, John, Allison, Wade, Ruby, Oliver, and Elsie. All of these children were born of the same parents—the same father and the same mother. I find that nine of these children were enrolled as "nigger" Indians and the other one was enrolled as an Indian of the blood. Under this remarkable provision of the bill proposed by the Secretary of the Interior, the Indian child of the McGee family, who is enrolled as an Indian, gets 320 acres of land as a homestead and the nine other children, full brothers and sisters, of the McGee family, enrolled as "nigger" Indians, get but 40 acres of land as a homestead.

Gentlemen, is this fair? Is this right? A great deal of solicitude has been expressed during this session by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] as to the "nigger" race. I have seen these galleries packed until they were as black as midnight with that race of people to hear the distinguished Senator speak. Now, I appeal to the Senator from Ohio, if he really has such great love for the "nigger," I appeal to the Senator to give him his rights under the enrollment act of the Indian Territory. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if the Senator wants to address himself to me, if he would speak a little bit louder I could hear him better. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. I have been informed that the Senator's hearing was somewhat impaired on this question, and that is why I speak so loud in this behalf.

Mr. President, I say that is not fair; it is not right. This Senate ought to have the information that is called for by this resolution. In this connection, Mr. President, I desire to submit as a part of my remarks, to be printed in the Record, the testimony of Mr. George A. Ward, law clerk of the Indian Office, before the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am deeply interested in this resolution. It is not a party question. There is no politics in it. It is just a question as to whether or not this Government, charged with the solemn duty, charged with the solemn obligation to take care of these helpless, defenseless, and ignorant people, will permit their rights to be taken from them by means of legislation, the object and purpose of which, to my mind and to my understanding, is attempted to be concealed and covered by the language of the bill, removing restrictions from their allotted lands.

Mr. President, having said thus much in support of this resolution, I submit it without further discussion, trusting that no Senator will seriously oppose its adoption.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I was going to say to the Senator from Minnesota that this question will cause considerable discussion on both sides, and I was about to ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of certain bills on the Calendar, this being the hour to consider those bills.

Mr. CLAPP. I will only take a moment, and my suggestions will not lead to any debate, I can assure the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield for that purpose, Mr. President, so that I may hold the floor until the Senator has concluded his remarks.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, of course until the bill which was reported yesterday by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is up for consideration, I would withhold any argument bearing on the merits of that bill, nor do I at this time care to enter into an analysis of the criticisms of the Interior Department, which I shall take up at the proper time. This question is now pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I see no objection whatever, Mr. President, if the preamble to this resolution is stricken out, to the adoption of the resolution, excepting——

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest that the Senator from Minnesota is out of order and that I am entitled to a vote on this resolution, unless something else——

Mr. CLAPP. I thought the Senator from Arkansas was speaking on the bill reported by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I understood the Senator from Arkansas to refer to that bill.

Mr. DAVIS. No, sir; I simply offered an amendment before taking my seat, which was not at all pertinent or germane to the discussion in which the Senator indulged.

Mr. CLAPP. Was I mistaken when I thought I heard the Senator from Arkansas criticise the propositions of the bill which was reported yesterday?

Mr. DAVIS. Only in so far as this information is sought to correct it.

Mr. CLAPP. What I was saying was that I saw no objection to the adoption of the resolution if the preamble were stricken out. I really think the Senator ought to go over the resolution and so modify it as to frame its requests in such language as it will be proper for us to adopt. That, however, I leave entirely to him. If he consents to the striking out of the preamble, I am willing that the resolution shall be adopted.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to have the resolution passed as presented.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not care to make a speech, but I simply want to make a suggestion to the Senator from Minnesota in regard to the resolution. If you strike out the preamble, whatever objection or criticism may be made of it, then the resolution ought to be reframed. For instance, the resolution reads:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate without delay—

First. By what authority or pretended authority of law said lands were withdrawn from allotment.

There are no words identifying the land except in the preamble.

Mr. CLAPP. I made the suggestion that the resolution ought to be redrafted.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to say a word or two about the resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. I yielded to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] for the purpose of making a statement, and I still have the floor.

Mr. TELLER. I deny that the Senator has the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. TELLER. He yielded the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. I yielded the floor for a moment at the request of the Senator from Minnesota for the purpose of his making a statement and for that only, and so stated when I yielded.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, according to the precedents of the Senate, when the Senator sat down he had yielded the floor. At all events, I think he ought to give us a chance to dispose of this resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have never heard, Mr. President, that the particular posture which a Senator assumed indicated whether he yielded or not.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to take the time of the Senate. I merely desire to say a few words. I think this is a very extensive resolution; but I think it ought to pass in some shape, and I want to just say a word or two about the suggestion which has been made.

Mr. CURTIS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I agree with the Senator that the information asked for should be furnished the Senate, but I object to the preamble of the resolution. We have no right to agree to a preamble of that kind. The resolution ought to be worded by the Senator from Arkansas or by the Committee on Indian Affairs in such a way as to secure the information desired, and the information should be furnished the Senate; but we should not adopt a resolution with a preamble condemning the Secretary of the Interior for doing many things that we do not know whether he did or did not do and charging him with doing a number of things unlawfully.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what the preamble is. It was read, of course, hurriedly, and I do not pretend to say whether or not it is in proper shape.

Mr. CURTIS. Let me read the first paragraph.

Mr. TELLER. No; I am not going to insist upon the preamble, so it is not a matter of consequence.

But, Mr. President, there ought to be an investigation or some inquiry into this condition down there. Let me state it in a very few words. All that land held in the Indian country was held by a patent from the United States. It was to be held in trust for the members of the tribes. I will not go into any extended discussion as to how they got their title, except that the courts have held that they have an absolute fee-simple title, and that is enough.

Some two years ago the Secretary of the Interior set apart a million and more acres of this ground for the purpose of a forest reserve. He had as much right to take my land in the State of Colorado and to make a forest reserve as he had to take this land from the Indians who were to share in its distribution.

In the first place, I should say we had a general statute touching all of this land. It was all to be allotted, or whatever was not necessary for the allotment was to be reserved and disposed of for the benefit of the Indians under the law. This land was appraised at 70 cents an acre, not because that was the real value of it, but its relative value, compared with other land, farm lands being sold at $3 an acre, and so on. The distribution of this land ought to be equitable. If a man should take land in the mountain country, he would only be charged at the rate of 70 cents an acre, and if he took some of the other he would have to pay at the rate of $3 an acre, or at least the proportion would be in that direction.

The Secretary of the Interior in this instance set aside the statute that required him to allot this land. Allotments had, of course, already been taken in this neighborhood. Thereupon he ordered that no more allotments of those lands should be made, and he withdrew the land for the purpose of making a forest reserve.

One of the reasons given why the forest reserve ought to be made was that it would be a delightful place for people who lived in the South to come up there and spend their summers, and that it would be a delightful game preserve. The United States was supposed to go into the game business, even as they have gone into almost every other kind of business in the last few years. This was done after that country had been by an act of Congress practically created into a State, waiting only for the action of the people to see whether they were willing to accept statehood under the conditions we had provided.

The committee of which I was a member and of which the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming] was the chairman called the Secretary of the Interior before us. We inquired why he had attempted, in the first place, to suspend the law of allotments, and, in the second place, by what authority he had taken the private property of the Indians and attempted to put it into a forest reserve? He said he had been requested so to do by the Department of Agriculture, and therefore he had done so. The committee discussed the matter with him, and the chairman said, in the presence of several persons, that he did not think that the Secretary had the right to do that, and he thought he should revoke the order at once. The Secretary said he would decline to do that. He said it was "up to Congress now to determine." Then I submitted a question. I said, "Mr. Secretary, suppose Congress does nothing, what are you going to do?" He said, "I think I shall go on in the same way I am going." That is to say, he would create a forest reserve. I do not refer to the present Secretary of the Interior, Mr. President, but the ex-Secretary.

The land is worth in the market $5 an acre, I venture to say. In the first place, they started out to make a great game preserve by a party in the Southwest buying this land. That met the approval of the Secretary of the Interior at that time. There was difficulty discovered in that, however, and then it was thought that the only way to do it was the way they have done, by providing a forest reserve.

Mr. President, I understand that that land is withdrawn from allotment to-day, and that no man can locate there, no matter how much he wants it nor what his right may be to it, because the Department says it does not fall within the provision of the statute. I regard it as the grossest usurpation of power that has ever occurred in this country, and I think the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] has done a service to the country in calling for the information. I agree with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] that it would be a proper thing to refer this resolution to the committee, and for the committee to report just what ought to be done; but I think the Senate ought to indicate to the committee that they do not mean to let this resolution be smothered.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I do not mean to say that the committee would smother it, but I think we owe it to these people to say that we intend to look after their interests.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. I simply want to say that this very matter is under investigation at the request of the Senator from Arkansas. The Secretary of the Interior and other witnesses will appear before the committee to-morrow. The matter will be proceeded with at the same time, but I have no objection at all to the adoption of this resolution at this time or its reference to the committee.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question. I want to ask the Senator from Minnesota if I did not on yesterday plead with the Committee on Indian Affairs to withhold the reporting of the bill removing restrictions upon allotted lands until we could complete this investigation and get the information sought to be had by this resolution?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, after the committee, with the aid of the Senator from Arkansas——

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator please answer the question?

Mr. CLAPP. I am answering the question—had gone over that bill and put in language wherever it could be conceived to be necessary to safeguard against the foreclosing of any right of those who had not received allotments, the committee did refuse to accept his offer this morning as to an amendment to that bill.

Mr. DAVIS. It was not a question of the amendment, Mr. President. I desire to ask this question and have it answered by the Senator from Minnesota, if he will be kind enough to do so: Did I not insist that the committee withhold the reporting of the bill removing restrictions until we could get this very information for which this resolution asks?

Mr. CLAPP. Most certainly the Senator did.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I understood the Senator from Minnesota to say he had no objection to passing this resolution. I understood from his former statement that he had objection to the preamble. That is what I object to.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly; that is what I have already said. I said if the preamble were stricken out I should have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota that the preamble be stricken out and the resolution itself recast so as to describe in the body of the resolution the particular lands sought to be taken for a forest reserve. I have no objection to that; but, sir, I do seriously object at this late day in the session to having this matter sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs and there thrashed out for a week or ten days until the Congress adjourns. While the Committee on Indian Affairs would not purposely smother the resolution—and no member of that committee would do a thing wrong—yet, sir, in the very nature of things, the matter would be thrashed out and worn out there until this session adjourned. I think we ought to have this information. To send the resolution to the Committee on Indian Affairs means absolutely that we will not get it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think the Senator from Colorado in his suggestion has pointed out the very plain, appropriate thing to do with this whole affair, and I hope the chairman of the committee will agree to it.

Mr. CLAPP. As the chairman of the committee, I beg leave to make the suggestion, in order that there may be no possible question as to expedition, that the Senator from Arkansas adopt my suggestion—redraft the resolution with the preamble left off and present it here for immediate acceptance.

Mr. DAVIS. I will do that.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] strikes me with force that the adoption of the resolution without the preamble would not explain fully to the Secretary of the Interior the information desired. During the colloquy which has taken place since the Senator from Missouri sat down I have gone over the preamble and have run a pencil through such phrases or words as "unlawfully," "by pretended authority," and "arbitrarily and in violation of law." With those words stricken out I think the preamble in the copy of the resolution which I have is not at all objectionable. It recites certain facts, without charging that the Secretary of the Interior had "unlawfully" done so and so, and then asks, in view of those facts, certain questions. For instance, the first whereas is:

Whereas several thousand persons of Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood and descent have been unlawfully denied allotments of land.

I have stricken out the word "unlawfully." There is no question but what they have been denied allotment. So down to the fourth whereas, which reads:

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior has without authority of law arbitrarily—

I have stricken out the words "without authority of law arbitrarily," so as to read:

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior has withdrawn from allotment approximately 1,373,000 acres of land—

And so on down through the entire paragraph.

I have it here. In that form it is not objectionable, and it meets the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri. It presents the facts to the Secretary of the Interior so that his answer may be definite and intelligent with reference to the facts desired to be inquired about.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it seems to me that the preamble is too long a recital for us to attempt to adjust in that way. My proposition is that the Senator from Arkansas take the resolution, eliminate the preamble, adjust the resolution, bring it in here—it can be done in half an hour's time—and adopt it by unanimous consent, which will expedite action upon it more rapidly than could be done in any other way.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I should like to say a word about this preamble. It is God's truth. There is no question about that. It may not be courteous, perhaps, to put it in its present form, but it is absolutely true. Will any Senator here say, Mr. President, that the Secretary of the Interior could ignore a statute of the United States that is put around him, or will any Senator here say that, for however benevolent a purpose the Government might want this land, the Government could take it without the consent of the Indians? We were told by the officers in the report made on this subject that it would be a profitable thing, and that the Government in a little while could sell timber enough to pay for all of the land; in other words, the Government was to make money out of the property of its wards. Mr. President, the less said about this the better it will be for the credit of the United States. I should like to see the preamble amended so that everybody could vote for it.

Mr. DAVIS. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. If the resolution is amended as suggested, the preamble will be no part of the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. It will be a part of it when it passes.

Mr. CLAPP. Referring to the third paragraph, the present Secretary perhaps is not maintaining the withdrawal which was made by a former Secretary, but any Senator reading that would take it to mean that the present Secretary has arbitrarily made this withdrawal. There are a great many things in the preamble. Some of them should be dropped. It seems to me that the preamble should be eliminated, and that the Senator from Arkansas should be permitted to perfect the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. I am willing to dispense with the preamble entirely.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that even if the preamble is stricken out the resolution would be equally objectionable, for the reason that it refers to certain rights having been "unlawfully denied." In the eleventh clause of the resolution language appears as follows:

Why said Secretary has not reported the true facts to Congress with reference to the rights of those persons who have been unlawfully denied enrollment as blood citizens of said tribes, in order that Congress might provide for the correct enrollment of said blood citizens.

The same objectionable language appears in clause 12 of the resolution. The Secretary is asked why it is he has recommended certain legislation with reference to this matter, and then it is added:

And has thereby attempted to induce Congress to enact legislation designated for the purpose of legalizing said unlawful enrollments, and why he did not inform Congress of the real object sought to be accomplished by said proposed bill.

It seems to me the resolution is really more objectionable than the preamble. I am very much in favor of a resolution which would secure the information sought by the one under consideration. However, I desire one couched in respectful terms.

Mr. CURTIS. Unless the resolution is withdrawn for the purpose of amending it, I shall insist upon my motion to refer it to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS. I had no purpose myself in introducing the resolution to be disrespectful to the Secretary of the Interior, but I certainly am glad that the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], a man full of years, whose every word is full of truth, has spoken on this subject. I do not care anything about the language of the resolution. Therefore, with the permission of the Senate, I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota and ask that the resolution be temporarily withdrawn, in order that it may be modified, to be submitted in a real short time.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection to withdrawing the resolution, so far as I am concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill (H. R. 18930) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as the first business in order under the unanimous-consent agreement, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 3, line 19, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "seventeen," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Carrie L. Poole, widow of Theodore L. Poole, late first lieutenant Company H, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving and $2 per month additional on account of a minor child of the soldier until such child shall arrive at the age of 16 years.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the committee amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twelve," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Henry Hammond, late of Company E, First Regiment Delaware Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 16, after the words "rate of," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty," so as to read:

The name of America H. Adams, widow of William G. Adams, late of Company G, Sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 11, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Frances Crain, widow of Seburn S. Crain, late of Company G, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment, and Company C, Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 15, to strike out:

The name of N. Martin Curtis, late captain Company G, Sixteenth Regiment, and colonel One hundred and forty-second Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, and brigadier-general, United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $100 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 24, to strike out:

The name of Catherine Boykin, widow of Jabez Boykin, late of Company G, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twelve" and insert "eight," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Lizzie Duncan, widow of Robert Duncan, late of Company H, Eleventh Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The bill (S. 6569) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and helpless and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the names of—

Daniel J. Fox, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Sue Webb Cooke, widow of Robert H. Cooke, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, and pay her a pension of $12.

Alfred W. Gilkinson, late of Company A, Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

James K. Brewer, late of Company B, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension of $30.

Samuel V. List, late of Company A, Fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $24.

William C. Beebe, late of Company D, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension of $30.

Sumner L. Warner, late of Company B, Twentieth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Thomas Burton, jr., late of Company E, Eighty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Sarah L. Procter, widow of George W. Procter, late of Company E, Thirtieth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $16.

Elisha Johnson, late of Company B, Twenty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Oliver Bruch, late of Company C, Eleventh Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Lyman M. Aldrich, late of Company I, Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

John T. Hutchins, late of Company E, Twenty-fourth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and pay him a pension of $24.

William Stevens, late of Company D, Eleventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $40.

May de Forest Young, helpless and dependent child of Harrison de Forest Young, late captain Company A, Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12.

Anna Shaw, widow of William Shaw, late of Company E, Twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $20.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to call attention to page 12, lines 15 to 17. Let the Secretary read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the lines mentioned.

The Secretary read as follows:

The name of Maria B. Wheaton, widow of Frank Wheaton, late major-general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to make just one remark in reference to this item. One of the rules of the Committee on Pensions reads as follows:

No increase of pension to widows will be recommended above the general-law rating except in case of destitution, to be substantiated by competent testimony, and the word "destitution" will be held to mean the same when applied to an officer or his widow as when applied to a private or his widow; it will not be contracted or expanded to meet particular cases.

The evidence in this case shows that the claimant is in receipt of an income of about $2,500. An adverse report was made by the chairman of the committee, and I will ask, without having it read, unless some Senator desires to have it read, that the adverse report be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks upon this subject.

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. MCCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted the following minority adverse report, to accompany S. 5534:

Mr. MCCUMBER submits the following adverse report on the bill (S. 5534) granting a pension to Maria B. Wheaton, widow of Frank Wheaton, late major-general of the United States Army:

The statement of Maria B. Wheaton, filed with your committee, is to the effect that she has an income of something over $2,000 per annum from property left by her husband. It is not the intention of this adverse report to in any way belittle the gallant and meritorious services of the distinguished officer. But inasmuch as the pension committees of Congress were created to consider a few claims which, from their peculiar circumstances of extreme disability or destitution, could not secure adequate relief at the Bureau, and also to consider claims, some of which were necessarily rejected by the Bureau, for the reason that they are not covered by any existing laws, and others which were rejected on legal or medical technicalities which Congress could set aside, and not for the purpose of granting pensions upon the services of the soldiers, it is not believed this case would come within the category of cases properly provided for by special act of Congress.

It is not believed to have been the intention of Congress that the Government should provide full support for soldiers or their widows, but it is believed that pensions should be granted to prevent absolute want and suffering on the part of any soldier or his widow, and pension legislation should be restricted to cases of extreme destitution, where assistance is rendered imperative. The committee has adopted a rule which provides that the word "destitution" will be held to mean the same when applied to an officer or his widow as when applied to a private or his widow, and it will not be contracted or expanded to meet any particular case. In this case, with an income of over $2,000 a year, it can not be held that Mrs. Wheaton is in any sense destitute. Your committee has repeatedly refused to consider or favorably report bills where it was shown that the widows were in receipt of incomes considerably less than that of Mrs. Wheaton. And it is held that if it is the intention of Congress to grant large pensions to the widows of officers a general law should be enacted to provide for all cases, and not make exception of occasional cases by special act. While the services of some officers may have been more hazardous than those of others, yet, as a whole, every officer performed the duties of his position to the best of his ability, and the fact that circumstances placed him in exceptionally hazardous service should not be taken into consideration in considering pension claim of his widow when his death was not due to the service. The passage of this bill to grant Mrs. Wheaton a pension of $50 per month is clearly in violation of the rules of the committee, and if this bill should become a law the widows of other officers similarly situated should, in common justice, receive equal recognition. It is therefore recommended that the clause in the bill to grant a pension to Maria B. Wheaton be stricken out.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I do that simply to indicate that it is not the policy of the Pensions Committee to vote to grant any widow a pension of $60 a month, no matter what her income may be. I can but feel that if we want to give the widow of every general a rating of $50 per month, we ought to give it by a general law, to apply to every one the same, and not to select some particular cases, and allow one widow, who has an income of $2,500 a year, $50, and cut off one who has an income of a thousand dollars a year.

This, however, is the report of the Committee on Pensions, due undoubtedly to a recognition of the splendid services of General Wheaton. I want to say now that it is given by the committee as an exception, and is not in accordance with the rules. I will not move to strike it out, but I want to have this statement go on record.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions has asked that the adverse report be printed in the RECORD. I ask that the report of the committee on this case be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The report is as follows:

S. 5534. Maria B. Wheaton is the widow of Frank Wheaton, a distinguished soldier of the Volunteer Army and Regular service, who, first appointed a first lieutenant March 3, 1855, rose through all grades to major-general, which rank he bore at the time of his retirement, May 8, 1897.

Born May 8, 1833, Frank Wheaton was educated for the profession of civil engineer at Brown University, Providence, R. I., from which institution he received the degree of master of arts. In July, 1850, he was appointed an assistant in the United States and Mexican boundary survey, and served thereon in various localities for several years. While engaged on this survey encounters with hostile Comanches, Apaches, and other Indians were frequent, and his services were made known to the War Department, resulting in his receiving the appointment of first lieutenant, First United States Cavalry. His active service with the Army continued for over forty-two years. A statement thereof is furnished by the War Department, being as follows:

RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, September 25, 1903.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 16th instant, addressed to The Adjutant-General of the Army, and transmitted to this office, to which the subject pertains, in which you request the military record of the late Maj. Gen. Frank Wheaton, United States Army, I have the honor to inform you as follows:

It is shown by the records that Frank Wheaton, of Rhode Island, was appointed first lieutenant, First Cavalry, March 3, 1855; captain, same regiment, March 1, 1861, the designation of which regiment was changed August 3, 1861, to the Fourth Cavalry; appointed major, Second Cavalry, November 5, 1863; lieutenant-colonel Thirty-ninth Infantry, July 28, 1866, and was transferred to the Twenty-first Infantry March 15, 1869; appointed colonel, Second Infantry, December 15, 1874; brigadier-general, April 18, 1892; major-general, April 2, 1897, and was retired as major-general, United States Army, May 8, 1897. He died June 18, 1903, at Washington, D. C.

He was brevetted lieutenant-colonel May 5, 1864, for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of the Wilderness, Virginia; brevetted colonel October 19, 1864, for gallant and meritorious services in the battle of Cedar Creek, Virginia; brevetted brigadier-general March 13, 1865, for gallant and meritorious services in the capture of Petersburg, Va., and brevetted major-general March 13, 1865, for gallant and meritorious services during the war.

During a part of the period of his service in the Regular Army he also had volunteer service as follows: Was mustered into service July 12, 1861, as lieutenant-colonel, Second Rhode Island Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years; mustered in as colonel, same regiment, to date July 22, 1861; was appointed brigadier-general of volunteers November 29, 1862, and accepted the appointment December 14, 1862, and was mustered out as such April 30, 1866, his service in the volunteer army being no longer required.

He was brevetted major-general of volunteers to date October 19, 1864, for gallant and meritorious services in the battles of Opequan, Fishers Hill, and Middletown, Va.

Very respectfully,
F. C. AINSWORTH.
Chief Record and Pension Office.

Hon. GEORGE PEABODY WETMORE,
United States Senate.

General Wheaton's services before and since the war were largely rendered in the West, he being actively engaged in numerous campaigns against hostile Indians. During the war he rendered efficient and gallant services, taking part in many of the battles of that great conflict and receiving numerous brevets for gallant and meritorious services. In July, 1866, he received from his native State, Rhode Island, a sword of honor, inscribed as follows:

"Presented to Brevet Major-General Frank Wheaton, United States Volunteers, for gallant and meritorious services during the war, and especially at the battles of Opequan, Fishers Hill, and Middletown, by the State of Rhode Island, through James Y. Smith, governor, in conformity with a general resolution of the general assembly, passed at the January session 1865."

He commanded the Department of Texas from June 2, 1892, to May 16, 1895, and the Department of the Colorado from May 25, 1895, to the date of his retirement.

General Wheaton died in this city July 18, 1903. The cause of his death was cerebral hemorrhage from arterio-selerosis.

The following letter from Doctor Nash relative to the death of General Wheaton should be taken into consideration.

OFFICE OF ATTENDING SURGEON, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., October 13, 1903.

I hereby certify that I had the late Maj. Gen. Frank Wheaton, U. S. Army, under my professional observation at various times from October, 1901, to the date of his death, June 18, 1903, and that I attended him professionally in his last illness.

He died from cerebral hemorrhage, the result of arterio-sclerosis (hardening of his arteries).

He also had an enlarged prostate and partial paralysis of the bladder.

It is reasonable to regard riding on horseback, of which he necessarily had a great deal to do, as an exciting cause of the prostatic and bladder trouble, symptoms of which manifested themselves before his retirement from active service.

In my opinion the arterio-sclerosis had its origin prior to retirement, and was naturally influenced by the nature of the life and the character of the food that was imposed on him by the conditions of his office.

Going on sick report is as a rule distasteful to the officers of the Regular Army.

This seems to have been the case with General Wheaton, as I am informed that there is no medical record of him except for yellow fever.

That he should have passed a reasonably long life, under the conditions which he had to live, without being sick a day otherwise than the yellow fever, is absurd and incredible, and the absence of his name from the sick list can only be attributed to his extreme devotion to duty, which forced him to do his work when sick.

F. S. NASH, M. D.

Mrs. Wheaton married the officer January 14, 1867, and her claim for pension at the Bureau was rejected for the reason that she could not prove her husband's fatal disease to be contracted during his active service in the Army. She was not eligible to pension under the act of June 27, 1890, for the reason that her income was in excess of $250 per year. In her own behalf, Mrs. Wheaton states that she has an income of something over $2,000 per year, but that she has dependent upon her a daughter whose husband was killed in the Spanish war at Santiago, and also an old lady who has been in the family for years, and that by the strictest economy she is able to provide for herself and those dependent upon her the necessities of life.

In view of the long and distinguished service of the gallant officer, the majority of your committee believe they are justified in waiving in this case the rule of the committee as to income of the widow, and therefore they recommend that Mrs. Wheaton be allowed a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. President, I do not differ with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] in the policy which, I think, the Committee on Pensions has wisely adopted, but there are exceptions to all rules, and this is an exception. The Committee on Pensions thought it was an exception, because every member of the committee except the chairman voted in favor of giving Mrs. Maria Wheaton a pension of $50 per month. I have here a list of 111 cases where pensions amounting to from $50 to $200 per month have been granted to the widows of major-generals, brigadier-generals, colonels, and lieutenant-colonels.

I am a member of the Committee on Pensions, and I endeavor to do justice to all applicants for pensions. I take an interest in the application of Mrs. Wheaton for a pension, because after careful examination I am satisfied she should have a pension of at least $50 per month. The husband of Maria B. Wheaton served forty-two years in the United States Army. He entered the Federal Army as a lieutenant at the beginning of the civil war and was retired as a major-general, United States Army, in 1897.

I never met Mrs. Wheaton until a few weeks ago. She called to see me, as she did other members of the committee. I never met her distinguished husband, Gen. Frank Wheaton, unless I met him in Virginia during the civil war where we fought on different sides and where he was a Federal soldier and I a Confederate soldier. He was five times promoted for gallant and meritorious service on the battlefield, and when the civil war ended his State, Rhode Island, presented him with a sword, and when he died the State of Rhode Island erected a monument to his memory.

Mr. President, as the years roll by and we get further and further away from the animosities of the war and the horrors of civil strife, the excellence and the merit of those who honestly and conscientiously fought for what they believed to be right become more apparent, and brave and faithful soldiers are ready to do justice to gallant and worthy soldiers, no matter in what army they fought.

Mrs. Wheaton is now three-score years of age. For thirty-six years as the wife of General Wheaton she shared his pleasures and often endured with him hardships and trials. She has suffered more than any woman I know of. She has buried her husband and six children. She now, in her old age, asks for a pension, and the committee has made a report in behalf of Mrs. Wheaton, and reported in favor of giving her $50 a month, although widows of other major-generals are today receiving $100 a month.

I wish the Senate to remember that at this very session we have given $125 per month each to the widow of Doctor Reed, to the widow of Doctor Allen, to the widow of Doctor Lazear, three men who risked their lives to determine whether the mosquito transmitted yellow fever; and they decided that question and made a great and valuable discovery. I honor their memory, and I voted to give their widows the pensions they asked for. These men imperiled their lives once, but General Wheaton imperiled his life many times on many battlefields.

The only argument presented by the Senator from North Dakota in his adverse report and in his speech just made is that Mrs. Wheaton has an income of about $2,000. She deserves praise for candidly and truly stating her income. It is important, however, to state that the adverse report does not refer to all of Mrs. Wheaton's statement. She said in her written statement that she has dependent upon her a daughter, whose husband was killed in the Spanish war at Santiago, and three grandchildren, and also an old lady, who has been in the family for many years; and she told me she paid her taxes out of the income referred to, and it was only by the strictest economy she is able to provide the necessaries of life for herself and those dependent upon her.

Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to say more about this interesting and just application for a pension. I know of no more meritorious case. I believe, and all but one of the Committee on Pensions believe, that Mrs. Wheaton should have a pension of $50 per month, and I believe the Senate will indorse our report.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move to strike out lines 9 to 12, inclusive, on page 15, the party having died.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out lines 9 to 12, inclusive, on page 15.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 6625) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and helpless and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting pension and increase of pension to certain soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain and other wars, and to the widows of such soldiers and sailors."

The bill (H. R. 19463) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, on page 3, line 18, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twenty," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Mary U. Robinson, widow of Thomas F. Robinson, late of Company D, Sixty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 19737) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DIXON. I wish to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, after line 2, insert:

The name of John Burkman, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and Troop L, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I wish to state, in explanation of the amendment, that a Senate bill increasing the pension of John Burkman was passed in the Senate some time in the winter. He was a soldier who had both civil-war service and service in the Regular Army; in fact, he was Custer's own personal orderly and scout for many years. He was in Benteen's battalion at the battle when Custer's command was annihilated on the Rosebud.

The bill was favorably reported and passed in the Senate on February 12, but when it went to the House Mr. Kerr, the clerk of the committee, tells me that a wrong reference was made; that in reading his service they misinterpreted it to read only Regular Army service, and by inadvertence sent it to the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House instead of the regular Committee on Pensions, and that it was omitted from the House bill now before the Senate.

The bill was regularly reported from the committee and passed by the Senate. The old man is 84 years old at this time, and he is receiving a pension of $12 per month.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The bill (S. 6715) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Spanish war and other wars, and to the widows of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Secretary to read lines 21 to 23, inclusive, on page 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the lines indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

The name of Mary Eddy Driggs, widow of William H. Driggs, late commander, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, this is another case in which the chairman of the committee has felt it his duty to make a minority adverse report. I will say now that it is not my intention, the committee having reported the bill favorably by a majority vote, to ask the Senate to strike out this item, but to guard the committee against the dangers that a bill of this kind will lead it into as a matter of precedent, I will ask that the Secretary read the adverse report, which is very short.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the minority views of Mr. McCUMBER.

Mr. McCREARY. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] took special interest in this case, and he has been called away. In his absence I ask that the report of the committee upon this pension be also inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no objection to that, and possibly it should precede the minority report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The report of the committee is as follows:

S. 5977. Mary Eddy Driggs is the widow of William H. Driggs, late lieutenant-commander, United States Navy. Her husband was appointed midshipman in the Navy July 21, 1865, and graduated from the Naval Academy June 4, 1869. He was successively promoted through the several grades to lieutenant-commander, to which rank he was commissioned September 16, 1899. He was placed on the retired list from June 30, 1899. Commander Driggs died in this city January 6, 1908, of pneumonia, following a surgical operation for stomach disorder, from which he had suffered many years and which the records show was incident to his long and active service in the Navy. The claim of the widow, however, was rejected at the Bureau on the ground that her husband's death from pneumonia eight years after his retirement was not due to his active naval service.

Mrs. Driggs was married to the deceased officer April 29, 1885, and she is now about 49 years of age. She is left with two children who are dependent on her for support and one of whom is under the age of 16 years. As the Pension Bureau has refused to grant her a pension, she makes her appeal to Congress, and in her own behalf she states that she owns property in this city known as 2236 Massachusetts avenue NW. This property, she says, is assessed at $6,000, and is encumbered by a trust of $2,000. Its market value on the basis of the assessment would be at least $20,000. She states further that she has an 8-acre farm on Staten Island, N. Y., estimated to be worth about $3,000 and subject to a mortgage in the same amount. She also states that her husband owned a one-half interest in two other pieces of fairly valuable property in this city. The value of this property she does not give, but states they are subject to a blanket deed of trust in the amount of $8,000. Her husband, she states, left personal estate consisting of five shares of the stock of the Calumet and Hecla Mining Company, which are pledged as security for a note of $2,000. The market value of this stock is estimated to be worth about $3,000. It is claimed by Mrs. Driggs that she receives no income from any of the foregoing property and is without means of support, being compelled to borrow funds with which to maintain herself and family.

The following letter from the Bureau of Navigation gives a brief account of the services of Commander Driggs during the Spanish war:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 4, 1908.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 3d instant, I have the honor to advise you that the U. S. S. St. Paul, during the Spanish-American war, was engaged in blockading duty off Cuba and Porto Rico and in scouting duty, intercepting Spanish vessels or blockade runners.

The late Commander William H. Driggs, U. S. Navy, retired, was awarded a medal for his services on board the U. S. S. St. Paul on the occasion of the engagement of that vessel with two Spanish vessels off San Juan, P. R., on June 22, 1898, he having been on duty aboard the St. Paul at that time as executive officer. The commanding officer of the St. Paul, in his report of this engagement, says: "The rapid and accurate fire brought to bear on the Terror by the St. Paul, whose crew has been under drill less than one month and a half against adverse conditions, reflects great credit upon the executive officer, Lieut. Commander William H. Driggs * * *."

Very respectfully, C. McR. WINSLOW,
Assistant to Bureau.

Hon. P. J. McCUMBER,
Chairman Senate Committee on Pensions.

In similar cases your committee have recommended the allowance of substantial pensions, and therefore recommend the allowance of $40 per month in this case.

The minority views, submitted by Mr. McCUMBER, are as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

[To accompany S. 5977, granting a pension to Mary Eddy Driggs.]

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, submits the following minority adverse report:

As stated in the foregoing favorable report, Mary Eddy Driggs is the widow of William H. Driggs, late commander, United States Navy, retired.

The officer graduated from the Naval Academy in 1869, and was passed through the several grades of promotion and finally placed on the retired list of officers of the United States Navy July 5, 1899. His service was almost wholly a peace service, largely on detached duty, which allowed him time to perfect and patent an improved firearm known as the "Driggs-Schroeder" gun, from which invention he was financially benefited to the extent of several thousand dollars.

It is not shown that he incurred any disability by reason of his service, and the allowance of a pension to his widow would be practically the allowance of a service pension, which, in the opinion of the minority of your committee, should not be granted at this time. From affidavits of the beneficiary and other evidence filed with your committee, it is shown that she is possessed of real and personal property to the value of more than $25,000, and she can not therefore be held to be destitute. Your committee has repeatedly refused to give favorable consideration to bills proposing to pension widows of soldiers when it has been shown that they had considerably less property than the beneficiary in this case, on the grounds that they were not destitute. Your committee has adopted a rule that the word "destitution" shall be held to mean the same when applied to the widow of an officer as when applied to the widow of a private, and will not be contracted or expanded to meet particular cases. Mrs. Driggs's property, if properly invested, should give her an income sufficient to relieve her from want, and the minority of your committee therefore recommend that no pension be granted in her case.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in my judgment, the chairman of the Pension Committee is a very conservative leader in affairs of this sort, and he has given thorough consideration to the case now before the Senate The minority report shows that this party possesses more than $25,000 worth of property. In fact one piece of property here in the city is worth $30,000, and efforts are being made now to sell it at that price. She also owns $2,000 worth of Calumet mining stock, now quoted at $625 a share, which paid in 1900 320 per cent dividend, and also owns a home on Staten Island, N. Y., which is mortgaged for $3,000 and doubtless worth double the amount of the face of the mortgage. The security is now held in the savings bank, and their rule, I understand, is not to accept securities unless the real estate is worth double the face value of the mortgage.

In view of the report of the chairman of the committee I move to strike out lines 21, 22, and 23, on page 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, it is proposed to strike out lines 21, 22, and 23 in the following words:

The name of Mary Eddy Driggs, widow of William H. Driggs, late commander, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I feel disposed to say that it is my conviction that if a pension of $50 a month is allowed to the widow of General Wheaton this pension to the amount of $40 a month should possibly be granted in this case. I think they are both without any justification under the rules. But when I call to mind the interest the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] has taken in this case, I wish to say that I supposed he was in the Chamber, or at least not absent, when I called up this item.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I want to say that the Committee on Pensions, at a meeting attended by nearly every member, fully and at some length considered the bill granting a pension to Mrs. Driggs, and after careful consideration a majority of the committee voted in favor of reporting it.

As I said before, there are exceptions to all rules, and a majority of the committee regarded the Driggs bill as an exception. I was satisfied that a pension of $40 per month should be granted Mrs. Driggs. My recollection is that all the members of the committee except the chairman were also of that opinion. It was not a case that I had specially in charge.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think the Senator from Kentucky wants to be misunderstood. Quite a number of Senators voted consistently against it, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], and also the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. McCREARY. I did not know that. I did not know how many voted against it; but my recollection was that the day we passed it all present voted for it except the chairman. I regret that this matter came up in the absence of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO], who took a very deep interest in it. I believe that the paragraph ought to be retained in the bill. It was reported by a majority of the Committee on Pensions, and it comes under the head of bills that are exceptions to the general rule. I hope the item will be retained in the bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the memory of the Senator from Kentucky is somewhat at fault. At one meeting of the committee there was a tie vote on this bill and it went over to a subsequent meeting, and it was then adopted by a majority vote.

The distinction I make between this pension and the Widow Wheaton pension is this: General Wheaton was a soldier in the civil war, I understand, a gallant and heroic soldier, and he was promoted several times for gallantry and heroism. This man was never a soldier in the civil war. He did not enlist until after the civil war was over, and the minority report submitted by the chairman of the committee represents that his service was peace service. I believe that he was never engaged in one conflict in the Spanish war.

There is no reason on earth why this pension should be granted. It seems to me that it is rather an imposition on the generosity of the Government, because the party is worth at least $35,000 to $40,000, at the very lowest limit. The fact that her husband was a peace soldier rather than a soldier of war is a double reason why the pension should not be allowed. If this pension should be granted, every old soldier who served in the civil war and who saw actual service, and especially those who sustained wounds and injury or contracted disease in the service, certainly would have a right to complain at the allowance of this pension of $40 a month to the widow of a man who was a peace soldier, who enlisted subsequent to the civil war, and who possesses $35,000 or $40,000 worth of property.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCREARY. What amendment has just been agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to strike from the bill the lines read by the Secretary.

Mr. McCREARY. I did not understand it that way. I shall ask that the Driggs case go over, if it is permissible. The Senator from Florida took special interest in it, and if it is necessary, I will move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. I should like to have it go over until the Senator from Florida can be present.

Mr. McCUMBER. So far as that particular item is concerned, I would gladly concede to the Senator's desire. Even if it is stricken out of this bill I understand that it can be proposed upon another bill at any time when the Senator from Florida is here.

Mr. McCREARY. I prefer, however, to have it reconsidered. I voted with the majority in order to enable me to make that motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. McCREARY. Now, I ask that the paragraph in the bill which refers to Mrs. Driggs's pension be laid aside.

Mr. FRYE. We can not lay it aside without laying aside the whole bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not see but what it would be exactly in the same position as though it was stricken out. It would become no part of this bill.

Mr. McCREARY. It would not be a part of this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would still be reported upon favorably.

Mr. McCREARY. But could it not, by unanimous consent, be placed upon the Calendar to be taken up at some other time?

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not see, as a matter of parliamentary law, how a part of a bill can remain here and the other part go to the other House. This is an entire bill, with a number of beneficiaries, as I understand it.

Mr. McCREARY. It is an entire bill and it refers to a number of pensions. Each pension is granted in one paragraph. What I desired to do was to get unanimous consent to take the paragraph that refers to Mrs. Drigg's pension out of the bill and let it be laid aside, because I know the Senator from Florida takes a very deep interest in it. It is a matter to which he has given special attention, and he was called away and did not think it would come up to-day.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like it to be understood that I do not object to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that the entire bill shall go over.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not ask that.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not see how it is possible to retain a portion of it here and pass the balance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would suggest, as there has been a vote taken to reconsider the amendment, that the Senator from Oklahoma allow his amendment to pass, with the understanding that it is not a vote upon the merits of the measure at this time, so that the Senator from Florida may have an opportunity to bring it up, but that it is eliminated from this bill at this time so that it may be considered at a later date by the entire Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand that the original bill introduced for the benefit of Mrs. Driggs is now before the committee; that it is not in this bill, but it is only a part of it. There would not necessarily be another bill introduced, but at the next session of the committee, which will be next Monday, the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] can have the bill considered by the committee and it can be reported in another bill to the Senate and allow this bill now to pass and become a law. That is as I understand the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. McCREARY. I did not catch what the Senator from North Dakota said. I should like to have him repeat it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I merely suggested to the Senator from Oklahoma that if the amendment is carried to eliminate this particular provision from the bill under consideration, it shall not be considered as a final vote upon the merits, but simply for the purpose of eliminating it from this bill, whereby it may be considered on the merits at a time when the Senator from Florida is present.

Mr. McCREARY. What would become of that part of the bill which refers to Mrs. Driggs?

Mr. McCUMBER. It would be out of this bill. It would be exactly in the same position as though it had been stricken out, of course.

Mr. McCREARY. Does the Senator mean to say that he would be willing to report the next bill with this item in it in order that the Senator from Florida could participate in the debate?

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply mean that the Senator from Florida can offer it as an amendment to any other omnibus pension bill that comes before the Senate.

Mr. McCREARY. I regret very much that the Senator from Florida is not here. It is a pension claim which he has paid special attention to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly it would then be in a position whereby it would not be necessary to pass on it again in the Committee on Pensions. I wish to avoid that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If this item is stricken out of the pending bill it would be in no position on the Calendar of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. It certainly would not, but the Senator from Florida could offer it as an amendment upon any future bill the committee might report.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Or the committee could report this item as a separate bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. But I assume that the Senator from Florida, having secured a vote favorable to it from the committee, would not care about having it go back to the committee to be considered whereby that decision, which was by only a small majority vote at that time, might be reversed. I wish to protect any right that the Senator from Florida may think he has in the matter.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to move that this special paragraph be referred back to the committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that it would not be in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is another amendment I wish to offer. I move to amend by striking out lines 11, 12, 13, and 14, on page 3, for the reason that a similar bill has been passed by the House and is now included in one of the House omnibus bills on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, strike out lines 11, 12, 13, and 14, as follows:

The name of David Raulerson, late of Capt. Giles W. Ellis's company, Florida Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The bill (S. 6812) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows of such soldiers and sailors, and so forth, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pension at the rate stated per month the following persons:

Laura M. Granger, widow of Paul L. Granger, late of Company B, Thirty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12.

Mr. BRIGGS. On page 11, line 3, I desire to have a correction in the name made. I move to strike out "Ella" and insert "Ellen," so as to read:

The name of Ellen A. Smith, widow of Col. Andrew K. Smith, late surgeon, United States Army, retired, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. On the same page—page 11—I move to strike out lines 22, 23, and 24, and lines 1 and 2, on page 12. The reason for this amendment is that an identical bill has been passed by the House and is now included in the House omnibus pension bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, strike out lines 22, 23, and 24, and lines 1 and 2, on page 12, as follows:

The name of Peter Claude, late of Company G, Twenty-eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month, the same to be paid him without deduction or rebate on account of former alleged overpayments or erroneous payments of pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I desire to make an inquiry as to the order of business. What is the status of Senate bill 4812, to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That bill was laid aside temporarily at the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And it had been previously made by order of the Senate the unfinished business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was made the unfinished business by unanimous consent this morning.

The bill (S. 6845) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war, and to certain helpless and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pension at the rate stated per month the following persons:

Marvin Boget, late of Company I, Twenty-second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Rollin A. Pratt, late of Company K, First Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Charles Moyer, late of Company G, Forty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Fannie J. Sargent, former wife of John B. Sargent, late of Company B, Tenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $12.

Kate Spencer, widow of Charles B. Spencer, late acting second assistant engineer, United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $12.

Edward Seeland, late of Company C, Third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Hugh T. Crockett, late of Company A, Forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $40.

John P. Buckley, alias Newton J. Pilcher, late of Company G, Fourteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and Company A, Residuary Battalion, Fourteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Issacher R. Waggener, late of Company H, Twenty-fifth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and Company M, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Engineers, and pay him a pension of $30.

Robert W. Malcolm, late of Company A, Twenty-second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Jason P. Carey, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Maryland Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $50.

Constantin G. W. Bischoff, late of Company F, Fifth Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension of $30.

John W. Cullimore, late second lieutenant Company F, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Jefferson H. Montgomery, late second lieutenant Company B, Seventy-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Thomas Townsend, late principal musician Fifteenth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Charles Rice, late of Company C, Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

William Relph, late of Company C, Seventy-second Regiment, and Company E, Thirtieth Regiment, Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $36.

Daniel Caswell, late of Company E, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Emma A. Henry, widow of George E. Henry, late captain Company B, First Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $20.

John Worrel, late captain Company G, Ninety-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Philip D. Gibson, late of Company C, Fifty-first Regiment Massachusetts Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Thomas W. Manchester, late captain Company B, Ninety-seventh Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30.

Margaret K. Hern, widow of David W. Hern, late of Company B, Fourth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $24.

John Hancock, late major and assistant adjutant-general, United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $50.

Samuel H. Hurst, late lieutenant-colonel Seventy-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $50.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 6846) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pension at the rate stated per month the following persons:

John McGuire, late of Troop C, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $24.

George W. Walter, late of Troop A, Eighth Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $20.

Elizabeth Smith Tennent, dependent sister of Edward Smith Tennent, late of Company A, First Regiment Louisiana Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay her a pension of $8.

Jason A. Pelton, late of Company F, Thirty-second Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension of $20.

Augusta Burchard, widow of William Burchard, late lieutenant, Battery A, First Virginia United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $17.

Emil Kuhblank, late landsman U. S. S. Palos, United States Navy, and pay him a pension of $12.

Ellen Bernard Lee, widow of Fitzhugh Lee, late brigadier-general, United States Army, and pay her a pension of $50.

Laura M. Schofield, widow of William B. Schofield, late major and paymaster, United States Army, and pay her a pension of $40.

Augusta L. B. Curry, widow of Manly Bowie Curry, late major and paymaster, United States Army, and pay her a pension of $40 per month, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of the said Manly Bowie Curry until they reach the age of 16 years.

Charles H. Roth, late of Company A, Twenty-second Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24.

Willis J. Freeman, late of Company K, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension of $17.

Bartolo Canova, late of Captain Mickler's independent company, Florida Mounted Volunteers, Seminole Indian war, and pay him a pension of $16.

Mr. CLAY. I move to amend, on page 3, line 1, by striking out "forty" and inserting "fifty" before the word "dollars."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 1, before the word "dollars," strike out "forty" and insert "fifty," so as to read:

The name of Augusta L. B. Curry, widow of Manly Bowie Curry, late major and paymaster, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of each of the minor children of said Manly Bowie Curry until they reach the age of 16 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHAD HATCHERY ON THE KENNEBEC RIVER, MAINE.

Mr. FRYE. There is a very small, insignificant bill which I should like to have passed. It is the bill (S. 6460) to establish a shad hatchery on the Kennebec River, in the State of Maine.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "point," to strike out "at or near Gardiner," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishment of a shad hatchery in the State of Maine, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point on the Kennebec River, to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVENTION OF ORDER OF ELKS AT DALLAS, TEX.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 155) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for use at the national convention of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks to be held at Dallas, Tex., in July, 1908.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. FLINT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11778) to amend an act approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves."

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "Ventura," to strike out "San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves," approved June 11, 1906, be amended by striking out of section 1 the following words: "except the following counties in the State of California: Inyo, Tulare, Kern, Ventura, Los Angeles, San Bernardino, Orange, Riverside, and San Diego."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SOUTHERN APPALACHIAN AND WHITE MOUNTAIN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4825) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains. The bill has been heretofore read, Mr. President, and amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand the Senator from Colorado desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to make some remarks on the bill. I have some memoranda which I have not here this morning, because I did not understand the bill was coming up to-day. If the Senator will let it go over until to-morrow I will have my memoranda here and be ready to discuss the bill. If I had known early this morning that the bill was coming up, I could have had my papers here and could have spoken to-day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course I shall comply with the request of the Senator, Mr. President; but I desire to state that the occasions upon which we recur to the Calendar are so few, the session is approaching its end so rapidly, and the importance of this bill, in my opinion, is so great that I hope the Senator will not again ask me to let it go over when it is reached.

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator that, having noticed now that he expects to bring the bill up, I will get my papers and keep them on my desk so that I will be ready to proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

STEAM VESSEL PASSENGER LISTS.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6417) to amend sections 4467 and 4468 of the Revised Statutes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator from New York to explain briefly the purpose of the bill.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, under the old law all steamers carrying passengers had to give their names, addresses, and residences. In the case of excursions, which are frequent to-day in New York, it is discovered to be absolutely impossible to comply with the requirement on excursion steamers. This bill is to preserve the law so far as seagoing vessels are concerned, but to relieve the excursion steamers, so that they shall give to inspectors an account of the number, but not a list of the names, of passengers for short trips.

Mr. FRYE. There are committee amendments to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendments will now be stated.

The amendments of the Committee on Commerce were, on page 1, line 11, after the word "for," to insert "Provided, however, That a correct list of passengers received and delivered from day to day shall be kept, instead of a correct count, by the masters of seagoing passenger steamers in the coastwise trade and by the masters of passenger steamers on the Great Lakes on routes exceeding 300 miles;" and on page 2, line 8, after the word "count," to insert "or list," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 4467 and 4468 of the Revised Statutes be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4467. That the master of every passenger steamer shall keep a correct count of all the passengers received and delivered from day to day, which count shall be open to the inspection of the inspectors and officers of the customs at all times, and the aggregate number of passengers shall be furnished to inspectors as often as called for: Provided, however, That a correct list of passengers received and delivered from day to day shall be kept, instead of a correct count, by the masters of seagoing passenger steamers in the coastwise trade and by the masters of passenger steamers on the Great Lakes on routes exceeding 300 miles.

"SEC. 4468. That every master of any passenger steamer who fails, through negligence or design, to keep a count or list of passengers as required by the preceding section shall be liable to a penalty of $100."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend sections 4467 and 4468 of the Revised Statutes, relating to lists of passengers on steam vessels."

SUBTREASURY BUILDING AT SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3093) to provide for the enlargement of the present site, or the purchase of a new site, and the erection thereon of a building for subtreasury purposes at San Francisco, in the State of California.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 2, line 8, after the word "exceed," to strike out "one million" and insert "five hundred thousand;" and in line 14, after the word "this," to strike out "act" and insert "bill," so as to read:

That upon the present subtreasury site when so enlarged, or upon the said new site when so acquired, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected a suitable, commodious building, with heating, hoisting, and ventilating apparatus, vaults, and approaches, complete, at a total limit of cost, including additional land or a new site, as hereinbefore authorized, of not to exceed $500,000: Provided, That the balances of appropriations heretofore made for the purchase of additional land for the enlargement of the site and for the extension of the subtreasury building in said city of San Francisco, Cal., be, and the same are hereby, made available toward the purposes of this bill, and the limits of cost heretofore fixed for enlargement of the present site and for the extension of the subtreasury building be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I will say that I have submitted it to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and that it meets with his approval.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 9, after the word "Provided," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "repealed," in line 16, as follows:

That the balances of appropriations heretofore made for the purchase of additional land for the enlargement of the site and for the extension of the subtreasury building in said city of San Francisco, Cal., be, and the same are hereby, made available toward the purposes of this bill, and the limits of cost heretofore fixed for enlargement of the present site and for the extension of the subtreasury building be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the appropriation of $375,000 made in the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," is hereby made available in addition to the limit of cost hereinbefore fixed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT KEOGH MILITARY RESERVATION, MONT.

Mr. DIXON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6156) providing for the opening of the Fort Keogh Military Reservation to settlement, and for other purposes, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 582) thereon.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, that is purely a local bill, and I ask unanimous consent to have it considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, section 2, line 1, before the word "hundred," it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert "one;" and in the same line, before the word "acres," to strike out "forty" and insert "sixty," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That 160 acres of said reservation land is hereby granted to the State of Montana, the same to be selected by the governor of said State as near as may be in compact form and so as to embrace the post buildings and other improvements at Fort Keogh; and there is also granted to the incorporated city of Miles City, in said State, 160 acres of said land, to be selected by the mayor of said city from land along the eastern boundary line of said military reservation; and the use and possession of 160 acres of said reservation land is hereby granted to the Custer County Fair Association, to be held, used, and enjoyed by said association only so long and to such extent as said land is devoted to the purposes of a county fair for the county of Custer; the said land to be selected by the officers of said Custer County Fair Association as near as may be in compact form and so as to embrace the fairground improvements now existing: Provided, That each of said tracts shall be selected by the aforesaid officials, respectively, in legal subdivisions within twenty days after the duly approved plats of the survey shall have been filed in the local land office and according to such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: And provided further, That said city of Miles City shall by acceptance of the aforesaid grant of land assume and discharge all obligations of the United States to control Tongue River in its course through the lands west of the present limits of said Miles City.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 3, page 3, after the word "laws," in line 7, to strike out:

Provided, That persons entering irrigable lands within the limits of said reservations and other actual settlers in the vicinity may jointly cause the nonirrigable lands thereof to be inclosed and may use the same jointly for pasturage purposes, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and subject always to the right of any qualified person to enter any part or portion of such nonirrigable land under the public-land laws.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That all portions of said reservation, exclusive of the grants herein made and the possessory right given, which the Reclamation Service finds it impracticable to irrigate by artificial means, shall be subject to entry under the public-land laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 4, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the sum of $130,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act; the same to be reimbursed from reclamation funds as received from the lands reclaimed under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTHERN CHEYENNES AND ARAPAHOES.

Mr. DIXON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6543) to authorize the expenditure of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for subsistence and civilization of the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation, in pursuance of treaty stipulations, for subsistence and civilization of the Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILADELPHIA COMPANY.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. Mr. President, there are three short bills of a similar nature on the Calendar, for which I desire to ask present consideration. First, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6312) for the relief of the Philadelphia Company, of Pittsburg, Pa.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Philadelphia Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding, $2,741.60, being the amount of taxes collected by the United States under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898.

Mr. BACON. I will ask from what committee the bill comes?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. From the Committee on Claims.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER subsequently said: Mr. President, if I understood Senate bill 6312 correctly, the word "improperly" was not in the bill. It seems to me it ought to be. If the taxes were legally collected, they certainly ought not to be paid back. The word "improperly" is in the second bill. If necessary, I will move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 6312 was passed in order that the amendment may be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be considered as open to amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the bill by inserting the word "improperly."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, before the word "collected," it is proposed to insert the word "improperly," so as to read "the amount of taxes improperly collected by the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOGAN NATURAL GAS AND FUEL COMPANY.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3748) for the relief of the Logan Natural Gas and Fuel Company, of Columbus, Ohio.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Logan Natural Gas and Fuel Company (Incorporated), of Columbus, Ohio, $184.45, the amount of taxes improperly collected by the United States under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLUMBUS GAS AND FUEL COMPANY.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2911) for the relief of the Columbus Gas and Fuel Company.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments on page 4, line 1, after the word "pay," to insert "out of money not otherwise appropriated;" and in line 9, after the word "thousand," to strike out "six hundred and eighty-two dollars and twenty-one," and insert "eight hundred and twenty dollars and eighty-one," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of money not otherwise appropriated to the Columbus Gas and Fuel Company, of Columbus, Ohio, successors to the Central Ohio Natural Gas and Fuel Company, of Columbus, Ohio, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding, the sum of $1,820.81, the amount of taxes improperly collected by the United States under the war-revenue act of June 13, 1898.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I simply want to call the attention of the Senate to one matter. These three bills, as I understand, have all been recommended by the committee. Two of them have already been passed, and the other is about to be passed because of the decision of the circuit court of the United States that these taxes were illegally collected. I am correct in that, I think.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BACON. I think it is proper, Mr. President, that the bills should pass. I do not think it consistent with the honor of the United States to retain in its Treasury money that the courts of the country have solemnly decided does not belong to the United States, but belongs to individuals. I simply call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, while as to these particular parties at interest these bills are passed by the consent and approval of every Senator in the Chamber, there is to-day in the United States Treasury $10,000,000 that the Supreme Court of the United States has solemnly decided does not belong to the Government of the United States, but belongs to individuals, the proceeds of cotton which was sold and the money put in the Treasury of the United States. That has been the standing decision of the Supreme Court of the United States for nearly forty years. The money is there, and there is no dispute in the world about the fact that it does not belong to the Government of the United States. That has been determined by the highest court of the land. There has never been an effort made by the Government to have a review of that decision, and yet Congress after Congress passes, and the Congress of the United States, in the face of that solemn decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, keeps that money for the Government and refuses to return it to those to whom the Supreme Court of the United States has said it belongs.

I am not going to do, of course, what I might do—try to arrest these small matters on account of that injustice; but I simply want to point out to the Senate, and I want the country to see, the invidious distinction that is being drawn between those parties who are entitled to the cotton money by the decision of the highest court in the land and these parties who are now properly to be given their money under a decision of the circuit court of the United States.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not want to take the time of the Senate, but I want to most heartily acquiesce in what the Senator from Georgia has said. The money is lying in the Treasury, it does not belong to the Government, and it ought to be distributed to the people who are entitled to it. I think I reported a bill a year or two ago for that very purpose.

Mr. BACON. Yes; and it has been reported four or five times by the Senate Committee on Claims unanimously, without a dissenting vote. One of those reports was written by my honored friend the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] when he was chairman of the committee. It has been reported four or five times by as many committees in as many Congresses in the House of Representatives, and yet by one device and another the Senate of the United States steels itself against doing this act of justice.

Now, I want to say, in order that I may not produce any misapprehension, that, as I have said, there are over $10,000,000 arising from this fund——

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. Just let me finish the sentence. About half of it, however, does not belong to individuals. About half of it was the money of the Confederate States, and, of course, is now properly the money of the United States. But there is about $5,000,000, about which there is not a particle of dispute that it was the property of individuals, which has gone into the Treasury of the United States, and there is no difficulty about it except for Congress to authorize it to be paid out, under a judgment rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that it does belong to these individuals and does not belong to the United States.

I did not get up for the purpose of saying what might be unpleasant, but I wished to emphasize and show that under precisely similar circumstances Congress is pursuing another course. I mention it not with the expectation that anything will be done about it now, but with the hope that the matter thus being brought to the attenion of the Senate will receive the consideration and action to which it is entitled.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF GOLD COIN FOR GOLD BARS.

Mr. PILES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4263) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act amending the act entitled 'An act to authorize the receipt of United States gold coin in exchange for gold bars.'"

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, in line 4, on page 2, to strike out "or may impose a charge," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to amend an act amending the act entitled 'An act to authorize the receipt of United States gold coin in exchange for gold bars,'" approved March 3, 1901, be amended so as to read as follows:

"That the superintendent of the coinage mints and of the United States assay office at New York may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but not otherwise, receive United States gold coin from any holder thereof in sums of not less than $250, and pay and deliver in exchange therefor gold bars in value equaling such coin so received: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may make, in his discretion, such exchange without charge therefor."

Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Senator from Colorado what is the change in existing law?

Mr. TELLER. The general statute is that one may exchange $5,000 or upward, and the Department recommends this. Under it one may take $250 to the mint and exchange it.

Mr. KEAN. I only wanted to know what is the proposed change in existing law. It appears to be a very good bill.

Mr. TELLER. There is a letter from the Department saying it would be convenient to have the change made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS OF THE CHOCTAWS AND CHICKASAWS.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the resolution introduced by me in relation to the lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks present consideration for a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate without delay:

"1. Whether there has been withdrawn from the common lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws any lands for inclusion in a forest reserve or game preserve; and, if so, the number of acres so withdrawn and by what authority of law said withdrawal was made.

"2. Whether the lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws are owned by said Indians in fee-simple title or whether the Government of the United States has, or claims to have, any interest therein.

"3. Whether recognized and enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations have been refused the right to select any of the common lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws as their allotments, because of any withdrawal of any of said lands for the purpose of including said lands in a forest reserve or game preserve.

"4. Whether, under existing law, said Secretary has authority to sell and dispose of all unallotted common lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws as soon as allotments have been made to all persons entitled to allotment.

"5. Whether said Secretary proposes or intends to sell and dispose of all unallotted lands of said Choctaws and Chickasaws as soon as allotments have been made to all persons whose names appear on the rolls of 'citizens' and freedmen of said nations, as approved by him, and to distribute the proceeds derived therefrom among said persons so enrolled to the exclusion of the blood citizens who have been denied enrollment.

"6. Whether the act approved June 28, 1898, under which said rolls were made, directed said Secretary to enroll as Indians, or citizens of the Choctaw or Chickasaw nations or tribes, all persons of Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood who were bona fide residents of said nations on the day said act was approved, regardless of any assertion of right to such enrollment by said person.

"7. Whether the names of all persons of Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood appear on the rolls of said Indians as approved by him, and whether said rolls so approved are being used as a basis for the distribution of all the common property of said Choctaws and Chickasaws.

"8. Whether said Secretary proposes or intends to deprive all persons of their distributive share of said common property who are of Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood, and who have been denied enrollment as citizens or Indians of said tribes, and thereby denied allotments of lands as such through the negligence or mistake of administrative officers charged by law with the duty of making said rolls.

"9. Why said Secretary has not reported the facts to Congress with reference to the rights of those persons who have been denied enrollment as blood citizens of said tribes, in order that Congress might provide, by appropriate legislation, for the correct enrollment of said blood citizens.

"10. Whether persons who are practically full-blood Indians or who are possessed of Indian blood and as such entitled under the law to allotments of 320 acres of the average allottable lands have been enrolled as freedmen or negroes, and as such are entitled to only 40 acres of the average allottable lands of said tribes; and whether said Secretary has transmitted to Congress proposed bills and recommended the enactment of same into law, which declare the enrollment records showing the enrollment of said Indians as freedmen or negroes final and conclusive as to their blood."

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw the former resolution for which this is a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is withdrawn.

TAKOMA SPRINGS ICE COMPANY.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4375) authorizing the Takoma Springs Ice Company to lay a pipe line under certain streets and roads in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Takoma Springs Ice Company, a corporation, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct a pipe line along private right of way from the south side of Randolph place NE., crossing said Randolph place, also S and Fourth streets and Seaton place parallel with and adjacent to the right of way of the Metropolitan branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to T street at its intersection with Fifth street NE.; thence along Fifth street to Rhode Island avenue; thence along Rhode Island avenue to said Baltimore and Ohio right of way; thence crossing Rhode Island avenue and along Seventh street NE. to Michigan avenue; crossing Michigan avenue and along Brookland avenue to the north side of Bates road; thence along private right of way to Riggs road; thence along Riggs road from the west line of said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to the District line.

SEC. 2. That all plans of location and construction shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That excavations in the highways shall be made only under permits from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and subject to regulations prescribed by them.

SEC. 4. That the said pipe line and its appurtenances shall be constructed in a substantial and durable manner, subject to inspection by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. All changes to existing structures in public space shall be made at the expense of the company.

SEC. 5. That the said company shall deposit such sums as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may require to cover the cost of inspection and the cost of changes to public works in the streets caused by the construction of said pipe line.

SEC. 6. That in the construction and maintenance of its pipe line the company shall leave the space along said pipe line in good condition, to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The said space shall be left in at least as good condition as that of the contiguous roadway or parking space.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall prevent the District of Columbia at any time, at its option, from altering the grade of the street or highway occupied by said pipe line, or from altering and improving streets, avenues, highways, and the sewerage thereof; and the company shall change its pipe-line construction and pavements so as to conform to such grades and improvements as may have been or may be established.

SEC. 8. That the construction of said pipe line within the District of Columbia shall be commenced within one year of the passage of this act and be completed within two years from the passage of this act, in default of which this act shall be void and of no effect, and within sixty days from the passage of this act the said Takoma Springs Ice Company shall deposit with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia the sum of $1,000 to guarantee the construction of said pipe line within the time herein limited, said sum to be forfeited to the District of Columbia in the event of the failure of said company to commence or complete said construction as provided for herein.

SEC. 9. That each and every violation of the requirements of this act shall be punishable by a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $100, in the discretion of the court, such fines to be collectible in any court of competent jurisdiction as other fines and penalties are collected in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 10. That the said Takoma Springs Ice Company shall furnish the Commissioners of the District of Columbia with a bond or bonds, or such other security as said Commissioners may require, to guarantee strict compliance with the terms of this act and the conditions of any permit issued under authority of said act, and to insure the complete restoration of all pavements and other public or private property disturbed in laying said pipe line.

SEC. 11. That all the conditions, requirements, and obligations imposed by this act shall be complied with by any of the successors to or assigns of said company within said District.

SEC. 12. That this act shall take effect from and after the date of its passage.

SEC. 13. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Does the bill come from the District Committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WESTERN POWER COMPANY.

Mr. FLINT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15725) to relinquish, release, and confirm the title of certain lands in California to the Western Power Company.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BACON. I wish to know from what committee the bill comes?

Mr. FLINT. From the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. From the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF GOVERNOR MASON, OF MICHIGAN.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent to call up the joint resolution (S. R. 38) granting to the State of Michigan permission to use for its own purposes unused portions of condemned cannon granted to that State by joint resolution of June 23, 1906.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes to grant permission to use the residue of the six bronze or brass condemned cannon granted the said State of Michigan to make a life-size statue of Stevens T. Mason, late governor of that State.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SQUARE NO. 328, WASHINGTON CITY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5429) to facilitate the use for manufacturing purposes of square numbered 328, in the city of Washington, as authorized in the act of Congress of February 1, 1907.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 5, page 2, after the word "square," to strike out "said railroad track and the conduit and pipes hereby authorized shall be located as may be directed by the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and be laid and maintained under their inspection and such regulations as they may prescribe; and the cost of such inspection and of replacing the pavements, curbs, and sidewalks disturbed by said work shall be paid by the parties to whom the permits shall be granted."

And insert:

Provided, That for purposes of said overhead track no present grades of Twelfth street shall be disturbed, and that overhead track shall have a clearance of at least 14 feet above the curb of said street: And provided further, That the overhead track and the conduit and pipes hereby authorized shall be located as may be directed by the said Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and be laid and maintained under their inspection in such locations as they may prescribe, and the cost of such inspection and of replacing the pavements, curbs, and sidewalks disturbed by said work shall be paid by the parties to whom the permits shall be granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN V. VICKERS.

Mr. PAYNTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4313) for the relief of John V. Vickers.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, after the word "authorized," to strike out "and required;" and in line 6, after the word "Government," to strike out "to the end that the said John V. Vickers, his heirs or legal representatives, may be reinvested with all the title which he has heretofore conveyed to the United States Government, or that he be authorized to accept and approve lieu selections for the above-described lands in accordance with said act of Congress approved June 4, 1897, which was in force at the time the conveyances were made to the Government."

And to insert:

To the following-described land, to wit: Southwest quarter northeast quarter and southeast quarter northwest quarter and the west half southeast quarter, section 26, township 10 south, range 68 west of the sixth principal meridian, Colorado, embracing 160 acres: Provided, That the said John V. Vickers makes satisfactory proof of such conveyance to the United States of said land by the submission of an abstract of title together with the deed of conveyance to the United States of the same, which said deed and abstract or abstracts shall be retained in the files of the General Land Office.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized to reconvey, by proper deed of conveyance, all title which the said John V. Vickers has vested in the United States Government, to the following-described land, to wit: Southwest quarter northeast quarter and southeast quarter northwest quarter and west half southeast quarter, section 26, township 10 south, range 68 west of the sixth principal meridian, Colorado, embracing 160 acres: Provided, That the said John V. Vickers makes satisfactory proof of such conveyance to the United States of said land by the submission of an abstract of title together with the deed of conveyance to the United States of the same, which said deed and abstract or abstracts shall be retained in the files of the General Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The committee reported an amendment to strike out the preamble, which was agreed to.

WILLIAM E. MOSES.

Mr. PAYNTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4312) for the relief of William E. Moses.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 3, line 4, after the word "authorized," to strike out "and required;" and in line 6, after the words "to the," to strike out "end that the said William E. Moses, his heirs or legal representatives, may be reinvested with all the title which he has heretofore conveyed to the United States Government, or that he be authorized to accept and approve lieu selections for the above-described lands in accordance with said act of Congress approved June 4, 1897, which was in force at the time the conveyances were made to the Government."

And insert:

Following-described lands: South half south half southwest quarter southwest quarter and south half north half south half southwest quarter southwest quarter section 4, township 7 south of range 74 west, Colorado; south half south half southeast quarter southeast quarter and south half north half south half southeast quarter southeast quarter section 5, township 7 south of range 74 west, Colorado, 30 acres; southwest quarter southeast quarter lot 3, southwest quarter lot 3, north half lot 3, section 5, township 10 south of range 73 west, Colorado, 34 acres; northeast quarter northwest quarter southwest quarter northeast quarter, southwest quarter southeast quarter southwest quarter northeast quarter, east half southeast quarter southwest quarter northeast quarter, section 5, township 10 south of range 73 west, Colorado, 10 acres; east half east half southwest quarter southwest quarter, southwest quarter southeast quarter southwest quarter southwest quarter, south half southwest quarter southwest quarter southwest quarter, northwest quarter southwest quarter, southwest quarter southwest quarter, southwest quarter northwest quarter southwest quarter southwest quarter southwest quarter, section 4, township 10 south of range 73 west, Park County, Colo., 22⅔ acres; west half northwest quarter northeast quarter southeast quarter, southwest quarter northeast quarter southeast quarter, south half southeast quarter northeast quarter southeast quarter, section 5, township 10 south of range 73 west, Park County, Colo., 20 acres; southwest quarter west half southeast quarter, section 2, south half southeast quarter, section 3, township 8 south, range 71 west, of the sixth principal meridian, Colorado, embracing 320 acres; east half southeast quarter, section 4, and east half northeast quarter, section 9, township 10 south, range 16 west, New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, embracing 160 acres; west half northwest quarter and north half southwest quarter, section 6, township 10 south, range 16 west, New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, containing 156.03 acres; east half northwest quarter, section 21, township 10 south, range 16 west, New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, embracing 80 acres; southwest quarter northeast quarter and south half northwest quarter, section 18, township 10 south, range 16 west, New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, containing 119.52 acres; north half northwest quarter, section 3, and east half northeast quarter, section 4, township 10 south, range 16 west, of the New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, containing 160.55 acres; northwest quarter southeast quarter and southwest quarter northeast quarter, section 35, township 9 south, range 16 west, of the New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, containing 80 acres; southwest quarter northwest quarter, north half southwest quarter and southeast quarter southwest quarter, section 17, township 9 south, range 15 west, of the New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, embracing 160 acres; north half northeast quarter, section 35, southeast quarter southeast quarter, section 26, southwest quarter southwest quarter, section 25, township 9 south, range 16 west, and north half southeast quarter, southeast quarter northeast quarter, section 30, and southwest quarter northwest quarter, section 29, township 9 south, range 15 west, of the New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, containing 320 acres; lots numbered 17, 23, and 24, in section 5, township 11 south, range 14 west, New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, containing 120 acres; southwest quarter southeast quarter, southeast quarter southwest quarter, section 32, township 9 south, range 16 west, and northeast quarter northwest quarter, section 5, and northwest quarter northeast quarter and northeast quarter northwest quarter, section 7, township 10 south, range 16 west, of the New Mexico principal meridian, New Mexico, containing 200 acres: Provided, That the said William E. Moses makes satisfactory proof of such conveyance to the United States of said land by the submission of an abstract of title, together with the deed of conveyance to the United States of the same, which said deed and abstract or abstracts shall be retained in the files of the General Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The committee reported an amendment to strike out the preamble, which was agreed to.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6359) to change the name and jurisdiction of the inferior court of justice of the peace in the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, line 4, after the word "law," to strike out "and equity," so as to read:

Any member of said court may try any case within its jurisdiction according to law, regardless of the place and residence of the defendant therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 1, after the words "salary of," to strike out "three thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred," so as to read:

The judges of said court shall receive the same annual salary of $2,500 heretofore provided for justices of the peace by section 6 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 6, after the word "expenses," to insert:

In cases of absence on account of sickness, death, or expiration of the term of service of either of the judges of the police court or of the juvenile court, any one of the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia may designate one of the judges of the municipal court to discharge the duties of said judges until such disability be removed or vacancy filled. The justice so designated shall take the same oath prescribed for these judges.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I move that the committee amendment be amended by striking out "In cases of absence on account of sickness, death, or expiration of the term of service of either of the judges" and inserting the words "In case of sickness, absence, disability, expiration of term of service, or death of either of the judges."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 16, after the words "by the" to strike out "court" and insert "clerk," so as to read:

The assistant clerk may sign the name of the clerk to any official act required by law or by the practice of the court to be performed by the clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I move that the word "same," in the last line on page 3, be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, strike out the word "same," the last one on the page, so as to read:

The judges of said court shall receive the annual salary of $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. On page 4, line 2, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

In lieu of the salary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont whether the bill, as it now stands, excludes the equity jurisdiction of the court and confines it to the law jurisdiction?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. It does.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to know how it has been in the past and how it is now. Does the court have equity jurisdiction?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I did not understand that the court did have, but the committee thought it wise that those words be stricken out.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. He speaks of this as a court. Do these judges sit in banc?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The bill provides for the sessions of the court in a single building, but separately, and the supreme court judges direct the assignment of cases.

Mr. BACON. It speaks of a certain number of judges constituting a court. They are in a somewhat different position. Each has the same rank, and each holds a court. It does seem to me that if that is the scheme of the bill, that they simply sit in the same building, but each judge holding a separate court, they do not together constitute an inferior court. I do not think that is a proper designation. They do not sit in banc. They are not members of the same court. Each is a court in himself. I think the bill ought to be changed in that particular.

I listened attentively to the reading of the bill in order to learn in what way these judges would ever get together as a court. I do not understand that they do. But it is spoken of as a court, the inferior court, is it not?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The provision I think the Senator has reference to is as follows:

All pending actions and all actions hereinafter instituted shall be assigned for trial among the members of said court in nearly equal numbers and in such manner as may be agreed upon between them.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then—

The judges of said court shall hold separate sessions as heretofore.

Then it goes on and makes provision for a common clerk. The real object of this bill is that the present practice of having justices receive deposits for costs and other purposes, and be accountable for such deposits to the auditor of the District may be done away with. The auditor has great difficulty in settling with the justices. The bill provides, after bringing them together in this way, for the convenience of the public, really, that there shall be a clerk of this court who shall be under bond and shall receive all these deposits and who shall receive all penalties, fines, and everything of that kind, and shall also settle the accounts. The jurisdiction of the justices is not changed materially, except in one case it increases the jurisdiction from three to five hundred dollars, as a matter of convenience.

Mr. BACON. They are, then, in fact, made a court for the purpose the Senator indicates; in other words, there is a common scope of duty.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. There is a common scope of duty.

Mr. BACON. There is a sphere of action; and while they do not preside together they belong to one organization, with a representative clerical officer, having connection with each of them and performing a common duty for all of them.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is the condition.

Mr. BACON. I can see the purpose, but in the absence of that suggestion it struck me as rather anomalous to call a collection of judges a court when they never sat together. I can see that the purpose designed is a good one and justifies the name.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AARON CORNISH.

Mr. BULKELEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4806) to amend the military record of Aaron Cornish.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "organization," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the records of the War Department in the case of Aaron Cornish, late assistant surgeon, Ninety-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge from said organization: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTORATION OF ANNUITIES.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2405) for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, after line 8, to strike out all down to and including line 2, on page 4, in the following words:

Proceedings shall be commenced, verified, by the attorneys for said Indians, who are authorized by contract with said Indians, on file in the Department of the Interior, or assignees under said contract, and the said cause shall be advanced on the docket of the Court of Claims, and of the Supreme Court of the United States if the same shall be appealed; and the court shall find and award to the attorneys of said Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands of Sioux Indians a sum not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount of said judgment, and distribute the sum thus awarded to the attorneys and their associates as their respective interests may appear under agreements between themselves, which may be filed with the court, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay the said sum of money to the said attorneys immediately upon the rendition of final judgment and certification of the same to the Secretary of the Treasury by the clerk of the Court of Claims, which sum is hereby appropriated, the same to be reimbursed from the proceeds of such judgment.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Proceedings shall be commenced by petition, verified by Charles A. Eastman or Charles Hill, the attorneys in fact employed by said Indians under a contract bearing date November 27, 1896, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs June 29, 1897, and by the Secretary of the Interior July 1, 1897, or by any assignee of the said parties or any attorney by them employed to assist in the prosecution of said claim, and said suit shall be conducted by an attorney or attorneys associated with the attorney who shall have verified the petition, and the said cause shall be advanced on the docket of the Court of Claims and of the Supreme Court of the United States if the same shall be appealed, and the court shall find and award upon a quantum meruit to said attorneys and their associates the compensation which shall be paid to them for services rendered and to be rendered, and distribute the sum thus awarded to such attorneys and their associates as their respective interests may appear, under agreements among themselves, which may be filed with the court, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay the said sum of money, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said attorneys immediately upon rendition of final judgment, out of the proceeds of such judgment, if any, when an appropriation thereof is made by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. Before the bill goes any further, I only see the last sentence in the report, which says:

I respectfully return the inclosed bill without my approval.

That is signed by the Acting Secretary of the Interior. That is all I see. I have not read anything further, and I should like to have some explanation of it.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, that is very true. This bill was referred during the last Congress to a subcommittee, and after a very full hearing before the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], the then Senator from Idaho, Mr. Dubois, and myself it was reported to the full committee and unanimously reported to the Senate. A similar bill had been reported favorably prior to that time. A bill practically identical, covering the same facts and the claims of the Sisseton Indians, was passed two years since and referred to the Court of Claims. That court heard and determined the case, and it was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States and affirmed on the 24th of February of the present year.

This, Mr. President, is the only case, I think, in the history of the Government where there has been a forfeiture of annuities where they have not been restored. They were restored in the case of the Sissetons, to which I referred. The annuities and property of the Five Civilized Tribes were forfeited in 1862 and restored, and legislation further enacted even beyond the terms and conditions of the act of forfeiture.

If the Senator from New Jersey desires me to go fully into the matter, I am perfectly willing to do so, because, as I said, it was fully and thoroughly investigated by a subcommittee and by the full committee, and this is the second time it has been favorably reported.

This, of course, is simply to refer the claim to the Court of Claims, to hear and determine the amount, if any, that is due, giving credit to all sums properly due the Government from the Indians, and if any balance is found due, to render judgment. It is a case that is equitable and proper and just.

Mr. KEAN. The Department does not seem to think so, however.

Mr. GAMBLE. The office took the same position in regard to the Sissetons. If I may enlarge by adding a few words, I will state that by the treaty of 1835 the Government pledged to these Indians an annual annuity of $15,000 perpetually. By the treaty of 1851 the Government agreed to pay these Indians $61,400 for fifty years annually.

I do not know that I need to refer to the outbreak of 1862 in the State of Minnesota. I have no apology to offer for the Indians who engaged in it. But the fact is, Mr. President, every one of the Indians who participated in it either fled to Canada, was shot and killed, was imprisoned, or was hung under sentence. They have answered their punishment. The provisions of this bill give nothing to those who participated in that outbreak. As the record shows, some 800 to 900 of these Indians fled the country and went to Canada and still remain there. So all the guilty have been punished or are in Canada. Thirty-nine of them were hung and the balance of them went to Canada. The provisions of the bill do not apply to those. It is a meritorious measure, and I think it is justly proper that it should pass.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to ask the Senator another question. Does he not think that in the amendment proposed by the committee there ought to be some limitation on the amount of fees, and so on?

Mr. GAMBLE. I may say in reply that there were different attorneys employed in connection with this case, and this matter has been agreed upon between themselves. Ordinarily there have been, I will not say limitations, but a specific statement as to 10 per cent or 15 per cent, whatever it might be; but this I think is a fair and just provision, because it leaves it to a quantum meruit to be determined absolutely by the court.

Mr. KEAN. Not the amount of the fee.

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes; the amount of the fee is to be determined by the court, and I think that is much better than the other kind of a provision.

Mr. MCCUMBER. The Senator from New Jersey may have perhaps a little better insight into this bill than others, but I simply wish to call attention to the fact that the earlier treaties that were made, not only with the Wahpeton and Sisseton bands, but with what were known as the "Lower Sioux," bound those Indians not to make war against the Government of the United States. However, a provision was made in the treaty itself by which if any of the members of the tribe should commence any act of aggression against the persons or property of the whites, any damages committed by them might be deducted from the amount that would be their due.

Then the question arose whether the outbreak of 1862 was an actual war committed by the tribes against the United States or whether it was an outbreak by individuals of that tribe. Under the assumption that it was an actual war by the Indian tribes against the United States, the President of the United States, President Lincoln, declared forfeited the entire annuities that were to be paid under these particular provisions of the treaties. I think after due deliberation and after an investigation without prejudice, those who have considered the matter are satisfied, not only from an historical standpoint but from the evidence adduced in the investigation of the question, that the outbreak was the outbreak of certain individuals and not an outbreak of the entire tribe. In fact, the older men of the tribe and many of the younger men performed heroic endeavors not only to capture those who had committed the offenses, but also to protect the white settlers in that section of the country.

We have already deducted from the amount of those annuities everything that we could consider proper as a matter for deduction pertaining to the damages committed by these Indians. That has already been taken from their annuities.

At this late date, after having punished all who were guilty of any offense, your committee were of the opinion that it was an injustice to those who had been loyal to the Government to deprive them of that which properly belonged to them and their children, and therefore we reported in favor of the passage of the pending bill.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] has already explained what I consider to be a very proper amendment to the bill, relating to the payment of attorneys. It is true that this matter has been before the Senate for a great many years and attorneys have been employed. We can not tell how much each one has performed. Most of them were employed under contracts which provide for the payment of a certain percentage of what was collected, but many others who were to receive even a less percentage, perhaps, performed many times the amount of work. So it was thought best that the court should determine not only who are entitled to anything, but also what amount, if any, they are entitled to receive. I think this provision is quite proper.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from North Dakota is familiar with this matter, and I should like to ask him if he knows about what percentage ordinarily is paid to attorneys in these Indian cases. I noticed a while ago that a firm of attorneys received $750,000 in fees. It struck me as being an enormous amount.

Mr. MCCUMBER. It was an outrageous amount for the performance of the labors, although there was very much at stake in that case and the value of the property upon which their service was rendered was very considerable. The amount agreed upon was probably not to exceed 10 per cent of the judgment in favor of the Indians.

Mr. GAMBLE. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that the original bill provided that a sum not to exceed 10 per cent should be paid, and we thought it wise to strike that out and put in an amendment leaving it to the judgment of the Court of Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think with that provision left out of the bill the Indians will derive a benefit from the change, the amendment leaving it in the hands of the court?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I certainly think so. I think the court has been pretty fair ordinarily. In the other case the Senator refers to, I do not think the court decided upon the quantum meruit, but upon the exact terms of the contract; that the court held the contract was absolutely valid and it could not change the terms of the contract.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have an impression about this particular case, and I have looked at it several times, that we are straining a point to appropriate this money at all. I think there was a war on the part of those people. Some of them probably did not fight, but they did engage in a war, and some of them, of course, lost their lives.

I am not going to object to the bill, but I should like very much to protect the Indians, so that they may get part of this money at least and that it shall not all go to attorneys. I am afraid the Indians will not get any of it, because I have some knowledge, derived from other people, that as a rule the lawyers get the most of it in such cases.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit a suggestion, I have no doubt that the committee made the change in contemplation of a possible reduction below 10 per cent. I suggest that the bill be amended so as to read "in the discretion of the court, but not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery."

Mr. GALLINGER. That was originally in the bill, and I had prepared an amendment to make it read "not to exceed in the aggregate 10 per cent of the judgment."

Mr. MCCUMBER. I wish to say frankly to the Senator that I think he is taking a step which will result in the very thing that he does not want to accomplish. In other words, where you say that the court shall fix a sum not exceeding 10 per cent, I have noticed in every case of that kind the court has fixed absolutely 10 per cent and has taken it as the expression of a sentiment on the part of the lawmakers that that was the intention. We did not feel that even 10 per cent might be justified in this case, and therefore we thought, in view of what the court had done in another similar case, that it was best to leave it entirely within the discretion of the court.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course I yield to the judgment of the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection to the amendment if the Senator wants to have it that way.

Mr. CARTER. I will not offer an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Upon the statement of the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from South Dakota I will not offer the amendment. My only purpose has been to call attention to the matter in the hope that the Indians may be fairly dealt with when the money is distributed; that is all. If Senators are satisfied that the court will safeguard their interests in this respect, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the court should even fail to do that, when we appropriate the money to pay the judgment we could see that it was done.

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes; we have tried to safeguard the rights of the Indians to the utmost of our ability.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURT-HOUSE AND JAIL AT YUMA, ARIZ.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5820) ratifying an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona providing for the erection of a court-house and jail at Yuma, in Yuma County, Territory of Arizona.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Territories with an amendment to insert at the end of the bill the following provisio:

Provided, however, That no more than $50,000 shall be issued under the provisions of said act; and said act is ratified only to that extent.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, approved March 21, 1907, providing for the erection of a court-house and jail in the town of Yuma, Yuma County, Territory of Arizona, is hereby ratified, approved, and confirmed: Provided, however, That no more than $50,000 shall be issued under the provisions of said act; and said act is ratified only to that extent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURT-HOUSE AND JAIL IN MOHAVE COUNTY, ARIZ.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5816) ratifying chapters 57 and 61 of the session laws of the twenty-third Arizona legislative assembly providing for the issuance of bonds by Mohave County to erect a court-house and jail in said county.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURT-HOUSE AT ST. JOHNS, ARIZ.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5818) ratifying an act of the Arizona legislature providing for the erection of a court-house at St. Johns, in Apache County, Ariz.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TOWN SITES IN RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

Mr. BORAH. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6018) providing for the disposition of town sites in connection with reclamation projects, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in connection with town sites established within or in the vicinity of any reclamation project under the provisions of the acts of April 16, 1906, and June 27, 1906, in fixing the terms of sale for lots to provide, in his discretion, for payments in cash or in not exceeding ten annual installments. He is further authorized to expend from the proceeds of the sales of town lots in any town site heretofore or hereafter established under said acts, such sums as in his discretion may be necessary for the construction of schoolhouses, water and sewer systems, and other municipal improvements, and for the operation and maintenance therof, the expenditures herein provided for to be made through the Reclamation Service. The installments paid on the purchase of lots shall be available for such purposes to their entire extent as received. Upon the incorporation of any such town, which shall be done as soon as practicable under the State or Territorial laws, the Secretary of the Interior shall make no further expenditures for municipal improvements, except as may be necessary to complete those previously begun and to operate and maintain the works constructed until such time after incorporation as the town is organized and can take over the management and care thereof, whereupon the ownership of the improvements shall be transferred by the Secretary of the Interior on behalf of the United States to the proper town authorities.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized to reserve from entry under the public-land laws such lands as may be necessary for cemetery purposes, either adjacent to such town sites or at locations convenient for the purpose. He is further authorized to make appropriate regulations for the subdivision and sale of lots in said cemeteries at an appraised value through the Reclamation Service until such time as the town shall be duly incorporated under the State or Territorial laws, after which the lots shall be disposed of by the town authorities, and the proceeds of such sales by the town authorities shall be used for cemetery improvements and for general public improvements. The proceeds of such sales by the Reclamation Service shall be covered into the reclamation fund and be available for cemetery and general municipal improvements, subject to the provisions of section 1 hereof.

SEC. 3. That the survey, subdivision, and sale of lots for cemeteries and town sites heretofore and hereafter established under said acts shall be conducted by the Secretary of the Interior through the Reclamation Service. The proceeds of such sales shall be turned over to the receiver of the local land office, and patents for the lots shall be issued in the usual manner through the General Land Office.

Mr. PILES. I move to amend the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1 of the amendment, page 3, line 22, after the word "received," it is proposed——

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Washington to kindly withhold the amendment he has offered for a few moments, as I have suggested certain amendments to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which I think may well first be disposed of.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Washington will withhold his amendment for a moment——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PILES. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to suggest some amendments to the committee amendment. In section 1, page 3, line 8, before the word "reclamation," I move to strike out the word "any," and to insert the words "the Minidoka."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. On page 3, line 8, after the word "project," I move to insert the words "in Idaho."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I also offer an amendment after the word "installments," in line 12, on page, 3, to insert "with interest at 6 per cent per annum on deferred payments."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. In line 15, on page 3, after the word "acts," I move to insert the words "on said project."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. PILES. I now ask that my amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 3, beginning in line 22, after the word "received," it is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out all down to and including line 7, on page 4, as follows:

Upon the incorporation of any such town, which shall be done as soon as practicable under the State or Territorial laws, the Secretary of the Interior shall make no further expenditures for municipal improvements, except as may be necessary to complete those previously begun and to operate and maintain the works constructed until such time after incorporation as the town is organized and can take over the management and care thereof, whereupon the ownership of the improvements shall be transferred by the Secretary of the Interior on behalf of the United States to the proper town authorities.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before this bill is voted on I should like to get a little information about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire rise to the pending amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment which has just been stated will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I may be obtuse, and probably am——

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I should like to know if my amendment has been adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The one which has been stated has been agreed to; but there is another amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will wait until that also is acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington proposes an additional amendment, which will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, on page 4, line 15, after the words "Reclamation Service," it is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting a period and beginning the following word, "until," with a capital letter.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about remarking, Mr. President——

Mr. CARTER. Before the Senator from New Hampshire proceeds——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to the words "or Territorial" appearing repeatedly in the bill. Those words have no application there in view of the amendments which have been made. The words "or Territorial" may be stricken out in line 16, page 4, before the word "laws."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I will state to the Senator from Montana that that entire clause will go out under the amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES].

Mr. CARTER. Section 2 does not go out under the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. A portion of it will.

Mr. PILES. Yes; but I suggest another amendment.

Mr. BORAH. The next amendment which will be suggested by the Senator, as I understand, is to section 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] proposes an additional amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, on page 4, line 15, after the word "Service," it is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out down to and including the words "public improvements," on line 19, as follows:

Until such time as the town shall be duly incorporated under the State or Territorial laws, after which the lots shall be disposed of by the town authorities, and the proceeds of such sales by the town authorities shall be used for cemetery improvements and for general public improvements.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PILES. That takes it all out.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the amendment just adopted removes from my mind some difficulties that I encountered in hurriedly reading this bill. I was a very warm advocate of the legislation which has brought about these great reclamation projects. That legislation contemplated or proposed the sale of Government lands for the purpose of reclaiming certain arid and semiarid regions of the country. I very likely do not understand the purpose of this bill, but, in glancing at it, it seems to me we are now going to take some of the money and build up town sites, build schoolhouses, put in sewers, and do all sorts of things in the way of municipal improvements. Then, according to the bill as it was framed before the amendments just adopted, those improvements were going to be turned over to the municipal authorities a little later. Am I right or wrong in that suggestion, I will ask the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, the Senator is partially correct. Upon these reclamation projects certain towns have been organized. Those towns are without any means whatever of raising money with which to construct schoolhouses or sewers or any of those things which are essential both to the health and the education of the people. This is a condition which has been found to exist for some time upon these projects.

Now, it has become necessary in some way to build up the schoolhouses and to provide means by which the health of the people can be protected. This plan has been devised and approved by the Department and unanimously agreed upon and approved by the committee. But it must be conceded that there must be some method by which the people who are invited to live upon these lands must have educational means and must have their health preserved and protected. As it is, they have no property to tax and no means by which to do this. This is a simple process of carrying out to successful fruition the reclamation project.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that very likely is so theoretically. This is a paternal Government, or it is getting to be a paternal Government. But it seems to me rather remarkable that, after we have gone into the reclamation project and have provided that these Government lands shall be sold for the purpose of irrigation, we should proceed to divert a portion of the money to build up towns and give the people all the benefits that other people enjoy after they have earned their money. In the matter of the irrigation project, I think the money is to be reimbursed to the Treasury, but I do not see that there is any provision in this bill that the money we expend here to build up communities is to be reimbursed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that matter was thoroughly discussed before the Department and before the committee, and as the bill was originally introduced it made provision to that effect; but it was the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior and of those who are familiar with this matter that the increased value of the lots by reason of this project would more than compensate for the money expended.

Now, as an illustration, upon the project which we have in view in this bill there are two or three towns—that is, they purport to be towns—and side by side with this project is a scheme, which is carried on under the Carey proposition, and the difference in the price of lots on the same kind of land under the same conditions discloses very clearly that it will not be a loss, but a perceptible gain to the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I have in mind some communities in New England, where they are struggling to get a living on farms that are mostly rocks, that would be glad to have the Government step in and build schoolhouses and sewers for them and make them as comfortable as the people are out on the prairies of the West; but we have never thought that we had a right to come to Congress and ask for help of that kind.

I can not to-day bring my mind to the conclusion that this is good legislation. Of course it is going to benefit some poor people; of course it is going to build up towns and give them educational and sewerage facilities that will be conducive to health; but is that a legitimate object of government? Have we not gone far enough when the Government provides for the sale of these lands for the purpose of irrigating them and making them productive? Ought not the people on those lands then take care of themselves, as the people in all other sections of this country are compelled to take care of themselves, to earn a living, and get funds for the purpose of building schoolhouses, sewers, and other internal improvements?

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I think the Senator from New Hampshire is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I have feared, and I have been asking for information on that point.

Mr. PILES. This bill does not provide for the sale of agricultural lands and using the money derived from such sale for sewage purposes in the country or for the construction of schoolhouses in the country; but the Government, not only in the arid regions, but in all other sections of the country where the Government owns public lands, reserves for public purposes certain town sites. This bill simply provides that the money derived from the sale of the lots located within the limits of the towns shall be applied for the purpose of providing proper sewage facilities, the construction of schoolhouses, and so forth. All of the property within the limits of the towns being Government property, there is no other way of getting the money for this purpose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is an outright gift on the part of the Government. It does not change the fact a particle. The Government gives the lands, the lots are sold, and the proceeds of those lots are used for internal improvements. I feel, Mr. President, that I must object to the consideration of the bill to-day, so that I can look into it a little more carefully.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I will not, of course, object to that, but I want to make a suggestion to the Senator before the bill goes over. In looking into this matter he will find that the people who are being invited to purchase land under the reclamation projects, which the Government is much interested in having them do, are being embarrassed and retarded by the very fact that when they take their families there they take them to a place where the Government has provided no means, because there is no property there which can be taxed, by which their education can be had or their health protected. The question is, Is the Government not interested in having this land sold under such conditions as will bring fair prices in the market?

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course those people are not compelled to go there any more than they are compelled to go to any other part of our country where they are not provided with adequate facilities for health and education.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, if he will allow me, if those lots would not become taxable for that purpose immediately after they are sold?

Mr. GALLINGER. They would probably become taxable; but I should be glad to have the Government give me some property that I could pay taxes on. I would even accept some in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am showing that when the land becomes taxable there is a method of raising money; that is all.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if the bill is going over, I do not care to take the time of the Senate to speak on it at length; but, in my judgment, there is nothing in the reclamation act that would justify this proceeding.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. The other day a question was raised whether that act did not provide for the purchase of land by the Government. I have read it with care, and I find that it does not. It is only where there may be necessity for dams or something of that kind that a fair construction, perhaps, would allow the purchase of land; but there is no authority in any reclamation act for the Government to do anything more than that.

I have another objection to this bill, Mr. President. It interferes with the school systems of the country. If I were governor of the State of Colorado, I would not allow the Government of the United States to build a schoolhouse in the State of Colorado, and, as a citizen of that State, I should enter a very vigorous protest if the Government should attempt to do so.

The whole proceeding proposed is within a State. It looks to me as if the State that would come here and ask the Government to build schoolhouses for it and to do other things, and then plead the poverty of the people, must have got into the Union a little earlier than it should have done, or else the people have not a proper conception of their duty as citizens of that State. Mr. President, when this bill comes up again I shall have something to say about it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just a word. The people are not pleading poverty at all; but the conditions under which the reclamation act was passed and the conditions which now prevail preclude the possibility of taxing any property in that vicinity.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, with reference to the pending question, on the matter presented by the bill I desire, with the indulgence of the Senate, to say a word from the committee point of view.

It is true that the Reclamation Service will proceed, whatsoever may be done with the town lots in every reclamation project. The town lots, under existing law, are to be sold for cash, and of course conveyance promptly made; and thus the property will become taxable. When the money is paid in for the town lots under existing law it is covered into the Treasury to the credit of the reclamation fund, and so far reduces the cost to the farmer of the reclamation of each acre he may enter under the law.

The bill as originally presented contemplated its application to the entire country, and I think it is opportune to say that with reference to this proposed departure it is true that the Reclamation Service is very anxious and has insistently urged that authority be given to construct schoolhouses, to build waterworks, to lay sewer pipes, and to go into all the public utilities necessary for a community residing within a town site. I feel that this would make of the Reclamation Service a general contracting agency for the Government, with vague and indefinite authority to contract and an interminable task laid out for construction and interference with the legitimate activities of a growing community.

The American people, from the old town meeting in New England up to this hour, have understood how to organize municipalities and how to conduct them. It is a part of the educational work of each community to manage its own affairs, and I do not think it is wise policy for the Government to undertake to extend its paternal arm over the activities of each little growing community in the country, thus paralyzing its enterprise and pauperizing its sentiment.

But the bill pending, Mr. President, was amended at the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho by confining its provisions to a single irrigation project in his State, where I understood conditions were rather unusual, making the case a unique one. So understanding, as a member of the committee, I was willing to assent to the passage of the bill, but I can not assent to the passage of a bill which will form a precedent for like acts for other communities. If in this case, as stated, the conditions are exceptional, let relief be granted, but it must be in the nature of relief on this particular project. I believe it would be one of the worst things that could be done by Congress in the way of interfering with this Reclamation Service to enter upon this era of wild, unlimited construction in all the activities connected with the growth of cities and towns and villages in the country. The people will build these up themselves.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the bill goes over, I ask that it be printed as amended, so that we may have it in proper form when we take it up again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that order is made, and the bill will go over at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS ON LANDS OF FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15641) for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before taking up the committee amendments, I wish to say that I desire to offer an amendment that will include several of the committee amendments. I do not wish to be precluded from offering my amendment in Committee of the Whole by having the committee amendments agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. That can be done by unanimous consent, it being understood that the Senator may present his amendment without being precluded after the committee amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. With that understanding, I will withhold the proposed amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 1, page 2, line 1, before the word "Indian," to strike out "less than half" and insert "one-quarter or less than one-quarter;" in line 4, before the word "more," to strike out "half or;" in the same line, before the word "Indian," to strike out "half" and insert "one-quarter or less than three-quarters;" in line 7, before the word "or," to strike out "half" and insert "one-quarter;" in the same line, before the word "Indian," to strike out "half" and insert "one-quarter;" in line 8, before the word "and," to insert "including minors of such degree of blood;" in line 10, before the word "shall," to insert "including minors of such degree of blood;" and in line 20, after the word "act," to insert: "No restriction of alienation shall be construed to prevent the exercise of the right of eminent domain in condemning rights of way for public purposes over allotted lands. All restricted allotted land of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes shall be subject to taxation where such land has been leased, but taxes thus levied shall not become a lien against the land, but shall be paid by the lessee, and shall be a lien against any crops or values produced from the land," so as to make the section read:

That from and after sixty days from the date of this act the status of the lands allotted heretofore or hereafter to allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes shall, as regards restrictions on alienation or incumbrance, be as follows: All lands, including homesteads, of said allottees enrolled as intermarried whites shall be free from all restrictions. All lands, including homesteads, of said allottees enrolled as freedmen shall be free from all restrictions. All lands, including homesteads, of said allottees enrolled as of one-quarter or less than one-quarter Indian blood shall be free from all restrictions. All lands, except homesteads, of said allottees enrolled as mixed-blood Indians having more than one-quarter or less than three-quarters Indian blood shall be free from all restrictions. All homesteads of said allottees enrolled as mixed-blood Indians having one-quarter or more than one-quarter Indian blood, including minors of such degree of blood, and all allotted lands of enrolled living full bloods, including minors of such degree of blood, shall not be subject to alienation, contract to sell, power of attorney, or any other incumbrance, prior to April 26, 1931, except that the Secretary of the Interior may remove such restrictions, wholly or in part, under such rules and regulations concerning terms of sale and disposal of the proceeds for the benefit of the respective Indians as he may prescribe. The Secretary of the Interior shall not be prohibited by this act from continuing to remove restrictions as heretofore, and nothing herein shall be construed to impose restrictions removed from land by or under any law prior to the passage of this act. No restriction of alienation shall be construed to prevent the exercise of the right of eminent domain in condemning rights of way for public purposes over allotted lands. All restricted allotted land of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes shall be subject to taxation where such land has been leased, but taxes thus levied shall not become a lien against the land, but shall be paid by the lessee and shall be a lien against any crops or values produced from the land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 3, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That all land allotted to adult allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes and subject to restriction may be leased by the allottees, or in the case of minors as provided in section 6 hereof, for periods not exceeding five years without the privilege of renewal, except that oil, gas, or other mineral leases of adults for any period of time, and other leases of adults if made for more than five years, of any such restricted lands, may be made with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and not otherwise.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 2. That all lands other than homesteads allotted to members of the Five Civilized Tribes from which restrictions have not been removed may be leased by the allottee for a period not to exceed five years: Provided, That leases of oil, gas, or other minerals, and of restricted homesteads and leases for more than five years, may be made under rules and regulations provided by the Secretary of the Interior, and not otherwise, and leases of the lands allotted minors may be made as provided in section 6 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 24, before the word "the," to strike out "the age and;" on page 4, line 1, after the word "tribes," to insert "and of no other persons;" and in line 2, after the word "act" to insert: "and the enrollment cards of the enrollment records shall be conclusive evidence as to the age of said citizen or freedman: Provided, That if any such card shall be lost or destroyed said rolls shall be conclusive evidence as to the age of said citizen or freedman," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the rolls of citizenship and of freedmen of the Five Civilized Tribes approved by the Secretary of the Interior shall be conclusive evidence as to the quantum of Indian blood of any enrolled citizen or freedman of said tribes and of no other persons to determine questions arising under this act, and the enrollment cards of the enrollment records shall be conclusive evidence as to the age of said citizen or freedman: Provided, That if any such card shall be lost or destroyed said rolls shall be conclusive evidence as to the age of said citizen or freedman.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 7, before the word "That," to strike out the words "SEC. 3a:" in the same line, before the word "oil," to strike out "all" and insert "no;" and in line 10, after the word "shall," to strike out "not," so as to read:

That no oil, gas, and other mineral leases entered into by any of said allottees prior to the removal of restrictions requiring the approval of the Secretary of the Interior shall be rendered invalid by this act, but the same shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 5, line 3, after the word "restriction," to strike out "shall;" in line 4, before the word "removed," to insert "or shall be;" and in line 6, after the word "Tribes," to strike out "And provided further," and to insert "Provided," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That all lands from which restrictions have been or shall be removed shall be subject to taxation and all other civil burdens as though it were the property of other persons than allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes: Provided, That allotted lands shall not be subjected or held liable to any form of personal claim, or demand, against the allottees arising or existing prior to the removal of restrictions, other than contracts heretofore expressly permitted by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 5, line 23, after the word "by," to strike out "law" and insert "this act;" on page 6, line 2, after the word "representatives," to strike out "for the eastern judicial district of" and insert "within;" in line 3, before the word "as," to insert "who shall be citizens of that State;" in line 5, before the word "curators," to strike out "and" and insert "or;" in line 9, before the word "curator," to strike out "and" and insert "or;" and in line 12, before the word "curator," to strike out "and" and insert "or," so as to read:

SEC. 6. That the persons and property of minor allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes shall, except as otherwise specifically provided by this act, be subject to the jurisdiction of the probate courts of the State of Oklahoma. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby empowered, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, to appoint such local representatives within the State of Oklahoma who shall be citizens of that State as he may deem necessary to inquire into and investigate the conduct of guardians or curators having in charge the estates of such minors; and whenever such representative or representatives of the Secretary of the Interior shall be of opinion that the estate of any minor is not being properly cared for by the guardian or curator, or that the same is in any manner being dissipated or wasted or being permitted to deteriorate in value by reason of the negligence or carelessness or incompetency of the guardians or curator, said representative or representatives of the Secretary of the Interior shall have power, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 3, before the word "curator," to strike out "and" and insert "or," so as to read:

The probate courts may, in their discretion, appoint any such representative of the Secretary of the Interior as guardian or curator for such minors, without fee or charge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 6, after the word "except," to insert "by," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no restricted lands of living minors shall be sold or encumbered, except by leases authorized by law, by order of the court, or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty;" in line 12, before the word "expenses," to insert "necessary;" and in line 14, after the word "Oklahoma," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the sum of $10,000 of the above amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in the prosecution of cases in the western judicial district of Oklahoma.

So as to make the clause read:

And there is hereby further appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available and available until expended as the Attorney-General may direct, the sum of $30,000, to be used in the payment of necessary expenses incident to any suits brought at the request of the Secretary of the Interior in the eastern judicial district of Oklahoma: Provided, That the sum of $10,000 of the above amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in the prosecution of cases in the western judicial district of Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 18, to insert:

Any suit brought by the authority of the Secretary of the Interior against the vendee or mortgagee of a town lot against whom no fraud has been established may be dismissed and the title quieted upon payment of the full balance due on the original appraisement of such lot.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 9, line 10, before the words "at the," to strike out "substituting for the words 'a United States commissioner'" and insert "adding;" and in line 11, after the word "words," to insert "or," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That section 23 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1906, is hereby amended by adding at the end of said section the words "or a judge of a county court of the State of Oklahoma."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 9, line 14, after the word "restrictions," to strike out "from" and insert "upon;" in line 18, before the word "estate," to strike out "said" and insert "the;" and in the same line, after the word "estate," to insert "of said deceased allottees," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That the death of any allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes shall operate to remove all restrictions upon the alienation of said allottee's land: Provided, That no conveyance of any interest of any full-blood Indian heir in such land shall be valid unless approved by the court having jurisdiction of the estate of said deceased allottee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 19, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 10. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to abridge, change, or affect the rights of any citizens by blood or freedmen, or their heirs, of the Five Civilized Tribes, who may hereafter, by the order of court or of the Interior Department, be adjudged entitled to enrollment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 10, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Chickasaw Nation, any and all outstanding general and school warrants duly signed by the auditor of public accounts of the Chickasaw Nation and drawn on the national treasurer thereof prior to April 26, 1906, and submitted for payment to the United States Indian agent at Union Agency, at Muskogee, Okla., with interest at 6 per cent per annum from the respective dates thereof: Provided, That said Secretary shall not pay such warrants until he investigates the issuance and transfer of said warrants and is satisfied that the respective owners of said warrants purchased the same in good faith for a valuable and reasonable consideration and had no reason to suspect fraud in the issuance of said warrants.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 16, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior may permit any lessee having a coal and asphalt lease covering segregated coal or asphalt lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations in Oklahoma, which lease has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, to surrender any tract or part thereof and to substitute therefor, subject to the terms of the lease and approval by the Secretary of the Interior, adjoining land within said segregation substantially equal in area to the land surrendered.

And all royalties heretofore accrued or hereafter arising from mineral leases by Seminole allottees heretofore or hereafter made shall be paid to the United States Indian agent, Union Agency, for the benefit of the Indian lessor or his proper representative to whom such royalties shall hereafter belong; and all royalties accrued or hereafter accruing under any oil lease made under section 13 of the act of Congress approved January 28, 1898, entitled "An act for the protection of the people of Indian Territory, and for other purposes," shall be paid to allottees of the land included in such lease pro rata according to the area of their respective holdings, or to their lawful assigns.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 13, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 13. That all records pertaining to the allotment of lands of the Five Civilized Tribes shall be finally deposited in the office of the United States Indian agent, Union Agency, when and as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine such action shall be taken, and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Interior to furnish the various counties of the State of Oklahoma certified copies of such portions of said records as affect title to lands in the respective counties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 12, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 14. That section 15 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the final disposition of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1906, shall become operative immediately upon the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN obtained the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator from Oklahoma asks that the bill go over, I offer an amendment, which I ask may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the word "restrictions," in line 10, page 1, down to and including the word "prescribe," on line 16, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

All lands of said Indian allottees of one-quarter or more than one-quarter Indian blood shall be subject to all restrictions now provided by law.

All lands of Indian allottees of less than one-quarter Indian blood, except homesteads, shall be free from restrictions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may now go over until after the morning hour to-morrow, not to interfere with the unfinished business or appropriation bills.

Mr. LONG. The purpose of the Senator's request is to make it the special order for to-morrow?

Mr. OWEN. To make it a special order after the routine morning business to-morrow, not, however, to bar appropriation bills or the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the bill may be taken up for consideration immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow, not to interfere with appropriation bills or the unfinished business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COURTS AT SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Mr. CARTER. On behalf of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], who is temporarily absent from the Chamber, I request unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6074) to provide for holding terms of the United States circuit and district courts at Springfield, Mass.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN WASHINGTON STATE.

Mr. ANKENY. I wish to call up for immediate consideration the bill (S. 4183) to establish a fish-cultural station on the Tucannon River, in the State of Washington.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "station," to strike out "on the Tucannon River," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Washington, including purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Washington."

VESSELS FOR IMMIGRATION SERVICE, SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16515) authorizing the purchase of a steel ferryboat for use between Angel Island and San Francisco, Cal., and a steel cutter for use of immigration officials at San Francisco, Cal.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to secure, by purchase or construction, a steel ferryboat at a cost not exceeding $100,000, to be used in the immigration service between Angel Island and San Francisco, Cal., and a steel cutter, at a cost not to exceed $25,000, for the use of the officials of the immigration service at San Francisco, Cal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 30, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 29, 1908.

[Continuation of the legislative day of Monday, April 20, 1908.]

The recess having expired, at 11.30 o'clock a. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

REPRINT OF BILL.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill H. R. 21357, with permission to correct a typographical error.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21260, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The question was taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-six Members are present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members; as many as are in favor of the motion will, as their names are called, answer "yea," and as many as are opposed will answer "nay;" those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 267, answered "present" 9, not voting 111, as follows:

For this day:
Mr. CARY with Mr. WOLF.
Mr. POWERS with Mr. PRATT.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are 267, nays none, voting "present" 9—a quorum. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The ayes have it, the motion is agreed to, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, there is no country in the world where coal is mined under as favorable conditions as it is mined in the United States; there is no country in the world where the per diem production of the miners is greater than it is in this country; there is no country in the world where the workmen engaged in mining are of as high an average of intelligence as in the United States; and yet, notwithstanding that fact, notwithstanding the natural conditions we have and the intelligence of our workmen, there is no country in the world where the mortality in the mine is as great as it is with us.

During the past seventeen years, or from 1890 until 1906, the number of men killed in the coal mines of the United States aggregated 22,840. It was 701 in 1890 and 2,061 in 1906. The number of men killed in the coal mines in the United States for each 1,000 men employed was, in 1895, an average of 2.67; in 1906 it was 3.40, a decided increase. The number of lives lost in the coal mines of Belgium for each 1,000 employed was, in 1895, 1.40; in 1906, 0.94, less than one-third the number of whose lives were lost in the mines of the United States; and yet Belgium has the deepest mines in existence, the most gaseous mines known anywhere, and the most dangerous for men to work in. In Great Britain the number of men killed for each 1,000 men employed was, in 1891, 1.50; in 1906, 1.29, or much less than ours—just about one-half, or less than one-half, of the mortality there is in the United States—and yet in Great Britain they have deep mines, gaseous and dangerous to work in. In Prussia the number of men killed in the coal mines for each 1,000 employed was, in 1895, 2.54; in 1904, the last statistics that we have, 1.80; again a much less death rate than in our mines. There they have deep, gaseous, and dangerous mines. In France they have a rate killed per 1,000 men in the mines, in 1901, 1.03; in 1905, 0.84.

I cite these tables for the purpose of showing that under the rules, regulations, and laws governing the operation of mines in more dangerous territory than we have, there is greater freedom from accident than there is under our laws and our regulations. Belgium, France, Germany, and Great Britain have bureaus in which they investigate into the conditions existing in mines, experiment as to the causes that create the conditions, and endeavor to protect the lives of the men who are working in the mines in those respective countries.

Several bills have been introduced at the present session of Congress with a view to the establishment of a Bureau of Mines and Mining; not for the purpose of usurping the prerogatives of the various States, not for the purpose of taking from the various States the right to regulate the conditions existing in the mines within their respective boundaries, but for the purpose of establishing a bureau under the Federal Government that will investigate into the causes that lead up to the great disasters that are occurring continually in the coal mines of the United States, so that the information thereby obtained can be utilized by the various States for the protection of the lives and limbs of those engaged in the dangerous calling of mining coal.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. For the purpose of giving a comparison: The gentleman lives in Pennsylvania, and is a man versed in the laws of that State controlling mining. Now, what are the defects in the laws of Pennsylvania as compared with the laws of Holland and Belgium, where you say there are fewer accidents and yet they have deeper mines?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the defects of the law of the State of Pennsylvania and the laws of the State of Tennessee, and every other State in the United States where coal is produced, are that they are based upon insufficient information as to the causes of these accidents.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is the difference between the laws to prevent accidents?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the laws themselves vary considerably, the powers to enforce them vary considerably, and there are various conditions existing in the various countries concerning the composition of coal and the natural gases that are produced in the mines; and by the information secured by the governments of those countries they have been able to formulate their laws in such a manner as to protect life. In our country we have had no information produced by experiment or otherwise as to what extent coal dust accumulating in dry mines will cause explosions, and as to the extent——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the States should enact laws making employers responsible for all risks incident to the service in mines, would not that do more than anything else, more than any other kind of a law, to reduce the percentage of mortality in the mines?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it would do a great deal to reduce the mortality in the mines, but I take it that no gentleman will assert that the coal operators or other employers deliberately create conditions in the mines by which the lives and health of their employees are endangered. If they do, it is through lack of knowledge as to what creates the dangerous conditions.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Is it not true that this bill provides for an investigation and the securing of necessary information and the disseminating of that information for the use of the States, so that they may intelligently make laws to safeguard the miners?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. It does.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. To what bill is the gentleman alluding?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I am referring to the bill H. R. 20883.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. To what extent, say in your State or mine—because I want to help you to get at the evil if I can and get a remedy—are the owners of coal mines compelled to examine into and investigate the causes of these explosions and accidents?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. In each of the States where coal is produced a system of mine inspection is provided. In addition to that a system of ventilation is provided, and a certain minimum of air is required for each man engaged in a particular mine. That is provided by the laws as they exist now; but notwithstanding that provision we have these dreadful accidents where hundreds of men are destroyed in a second.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. Is it not true that in Pennsylvania the law requires examinations to be held of all bosses, superintendents, and overseers, and that they must have certificates pursuant to that examination before they are eligible to the various positions?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. That is true.

Mr. BRUMM. Now, having provided that by the State laws, is it not also true that the greatest difficulty is that these educated men, who have passed a thorough examination, have in almost every instance of large explosions or a great number of deaths, been unable to account for those accidents, and in many instances could not give any reason why those large explosions had occurred, showing a want of knowledge in the very line toward which this bill is directed?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. That is in a certain sense true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the gentleman get five or ten minutes more if it can be done. This is a very important subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in control of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, some time has been reserved for me later on. I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman, with the consent of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is agreeable to me, with the consent of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let it be yielded out of my time.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it is true that in the State of Pennsylvania and a number of other States the law requires that men in charge of mines shall pass examinations showing that they are qualified to take charge of those mines, but it is frequently the case that the courts hold that the employer, having employed a man certified by the State to be competent, is not responsible for any damage that may occur as the result of an accident, thus relieving the employer of all responsibility.

Mr. MADDEN. You have reference now to the mine inspectors, have you not?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. No; the mine foremen.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a fact, though, that in all States they have laws requiring competent mine inspectors, have they not?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. It is true that they have mine inspectors, and they require a minimum amount of air circulating through the mine, and they require other conditions; but the fact is that notwithstanding that inspection, and notwithstanding the requirements of the law at the present time, the death rate in the mines is continually increasing in the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman one question more. Are these men employed as mining inspectors supposed to be familiar with the mine work?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes; I do not know a State in the Union where the mining inspector is not required to be a practical miner, and in most instances required to pass an examination as to the practical work and the technique of mining.

Mr. MADDEN. Have they the right to order changes made?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes; within certain limits. Now, Mr. Chairman, the great difficulty is that even those learned in mining and understanding the whole business, understanding the whole limitations and resources at their disposal, are not in a position to determine what are the causes of these explosions in many instances. In the Naomi mine, in Pennsylvania, it was not known what the cause of the explosion was. In the Darr mine, in Pennsylvania, the cause has never been discovered. Down in the Monongah mine, in West Virginia, it was not known what the cause of that explosion was. There has been a difference of opinion as to whether or not dust will ignite without a mixture of gas in it. There has been doubt as to whether the sprinkling of dry mines, required by some of our laws, increases or reduces the danger of explosion. There are differences of opinion as to whether a silent electric current on a wire introduced into a mine, that does not come into contact with anything that will create a spark, will ignite the gas in a mine. There are other things at the present time in doubt, and under this bill proposed here, if it is enacted into law, a bureau is established furnishing the necessary equipment to make an investigation, and then these things can be determined through tests and experiments, and information furnished to the various State governments so that they may construct their laws accordingly. [Applause.]

I desire to submit for your consideration the following tables showing the rate of fatalities occurring in the mines of the United States and other countries for a number of years:

Number of men killed in the coal mines of the United States, 1890–1906.

1890	701	1900	1,493
1891	1,076	1901	1,594
1892	859	1902	1,828
1893	965	1903	1,794
1894	957	1904	1,999
1895	1,057	1905	2,097
1896	1,120	1906	2,061
1897	947
1898	1,049	Total	22,840
1899	1,243

Number of men killed in the coal mines of the United States for each 1,000 men employed.

1895	2.67	1901	3.24
1896	2.79	1902	3.49
1897	2.34	1903	3.14
1898	2.59	1904	3.38
1899	2.98	1905	3.53
1900	3.24	1906	3.40

Number of lives lost in the coal mines of Belgium for each 1,000 men employed.

1895	1.40	1901	1.16
1896	1.16	1902	1.07
1897	1.03	1903	1.14
1898	1.04	1904	.93
1899	.97	1905	.91
1900	1.05	1906	.94

Number of men killed in the coal mines of Great Britain for each 1,000 men employed.

1891	1.50	1899	1.26
1892	1.49	1900	1.30
1893	1.55	1901	1.36

During these five past years, in the United States, nearly 10,000 coal miners have been killed. With the same degree of safety in American coal mines as has existed in France and Belgium 7,000 of these miners would have been saved.

During 1907 the number of men killed and injured in the coal mines was approximately 9,000, the number of killed reaching the enormous total of 3,500, or nearly 50 per cent, over the year 1906.

During January, February, and March, the first three months of the present year, there have been killed and injured in our mines some 1,500 miners, or 18 to 20 for each working day.

It will thus be seen that the loss of life from mine accidents in the United States is increasing, and it already is three and a half times greater per thousand men employed than in France or Belgium and nearly three times as great as in England, although our coal mines are neither as deep nor naturally as dangerous as the mines of those countries. In other coal-producing countries the percentage of accidents is being continually reduced, and it has been demonstrated that government investigations into the causes of accidents in the mines and enactment of legislation in accordance with the information thus obtained have materially reduced the number of these mine disasters.

In the United States, where the situation is more complex than it is in the other countries because of our dual form of government, investigations of this character, if undertaken by the various coal-producing States, would lead to needless and costly duplication, with uncertain and conflicting results. The Federal Government can make a more complete investigation into the causes of these terrible accidents than any one of the States can do.

The life cost of our coal supply is too great to pass by unheeded. The situation requires immediate action on the part of Congress. Many lives are being sacrificed through lack of sufficient information of the means required to prevent them. In December of last year about 800 miners were killed in four disasters in the mines. On January 1, this year, nine men were killed and five injured by an explosion of gas at Carthage, N. Mex. On January 30 nine miners were killed at Hawks Nest, W. Va., by an explosion. On February 11 ten miners were killed at Central City, Ky. On February 21 three men were killed and seven injured at Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

On March 28 seventy men were killed at Hannah, Wyo., by an explosion in a coal mine. Just the other day four men were killed and a number injured in an explosion of gas at Ellsworth City, Pa. A number of other serious accidents have taken place, bringing the death and accident rate of the present year to an average of about twenty per day. These accidents are not due to lack of intelligence on the part of either the workmen or the managers, but to lack of necessary means to obtain information concerning the actual causes of the accidents and of the methods necessary to prevent them. A bureau of mines and mining, properly equipped, is absolutely necessary to make the experiments and tests that will furnish the desired information. The miners of our country are an intelligent and courageous class of men. They are engaged in the production of material that is the basis of our modern industrial and commercial activities. They are daily taking great risks in the hard and hazardous occupation which they follow. When accident has befallen any of their number, when the caving in of the roof, the flooding of the mine, or an explosion of coal dust or fire damp has cut off all means of escape, the innate courage of the miner asserts itself, and he will yield to no hardship, however great, nor shrink from any danger, however perilous, in his efforts to relieve his fellow-men.

Tell me in martial measures of the Charge of the Light Brigade; point with patriotic pride to the farmers who fought with the soldiers at Concord and Bunker Hill; repeat to me the story of the mighty conflict between the Blue and the Gray, when the "flower of American youth yielded up their last full measure of devotion" in defense of their respective flags, and my blood will thrill with patriotic enthusiasm and tingle through my veins in sympathetic response. Yet, with all my admiration for the heroes of the battlefield and their wonderful achievements in support of the rights of man, it does not equal my love, it can not measure my devotion to those sturdy sons of toil who, uninfluenced by the enthusiasm of numbers, without hope of present reward or future glory, deliberately enter the dark and dangerous caverns of the mines to carry relief to their suffering fellow-men or perish in the attempt. It is for the benefit of men of this character that I appeal to you to establish and equip a bureau of mines and mining. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] has thirty minutes remaining and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] thirty minutes remaining.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on June 26, 1902, I used this language in this Chamber:

> Shall we in the very heyday of prosperity prepare for our unnecessary and ever-recurring shocks, panics, crises, and commercial horrors?

On the 17th day of October, 1906, at St. Louis, I addressed the American Bankers' Association and said to them that unless something was done at the next session of Congress every banker there would wish something had been done.

In March, 1907, in this House, I called the attention of the House and the country to the conditions and predicted precisely what would happen. I was then speaking with regard to the now so-called "McKinney bill," which was the product of the American bankers' commission and was the result of my visit to St. Louis in October. That bill was a good bill. It was made for the express purpose of what was certain to happen in the fall of 1907. The panic came. Congress convened. On the 3d day of December the Speaker of this House appointed the Committee on Banking and Currency. On the 4th day of December, the very next day, the Banking and Currency Committee was called together by its chairman, and at the request of the chairman the names of the members were called, and the minutes show that the chairman then requested the clerk to call the names of those members present and that they respond informally and express their views as to the currency legislation necessary.

A committee was then appointed by the Banking and Currency Committee for the express purpose of drawing a bill. They proceeded to do so, and on January 8 the committee introduced a bill into this House. Immediately the committee advertised for general hearings, opening its room to anyone who might come to offer suggestions. Having closed the general hearings they proceeded to have special hearings upon the bill prepared by the committee. We sent for the leading bankers and economists of the United States and they came before us. Lyman J. Gage and others came before us, and what was the result? On February 29 the committee reported a bill, a financial and currency measure, and filed the report of the committee which I hold in my hand, consisting of 154 pages.

All of the economists, so far as I know, in the United States, all of the banking and economic journals in the United States, so far as I know, are now supporting this measure. Mr. Horace White, Mr. Gage, and Mr. Carnegie have written letters of approval among others.

[Reprinted from the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin of March 12.]

Andrew Carnegie, Ex-Secretary Gage, and Horace White on currency.

The three following letters, from Andrew Carnegie, Hon. Lyman J. Gage, and Horace White should be read and reread before voting upon any financial measure:

ALDRICH BILL A MAKESHIFT—ANDREW CARNEGIE WARMLY COMMENDS THE FOWLER MEASURE.

DEAR MR. FOWLER: You have started on the right line and your proposed bill is the result. There is only one right path—we must base our currency upon gold. Your proposed "redemption cities" is just following our Canadian friends. Their system has worked well. There is no reason why our own should not. Sooner or later we must follow other civilized nations and place our banking system upon the same lines—the sooner the better.

There is a great contrast between the House and Senate at the present juncture. The Aldrich bill is a mere makeshift. It can not be needed for many years to come. Panics have to grow. And when it is needed it compels the banks to use their much-needed funds to purchase bonds before they can get the increased circulation required.

The bill before the House, on the contrary, will accomplish a result imperatively needed and place our banking system on a par with the banking systems of other nations.

ANDREW CARNEGIE.

FORMER SECRETARY GAGE INDORSES FOWLER BILL—TIME MOST FAVORABLE FOR SECURING PUBLIC ATTENTION—MR. GAGE DECLARES THE MEASURE AT ONCE REMOVES THE WEAKNESS IN OUR GOVERNMENT FINANCES AND BRINGS THE BANKING BUSINESS IN TOUCH WITH KINDRED INTERESTS.

Lyman J. Gage, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, in the following letter to Representative FOWLER, unequivocally indorses the latter's currency bill. Mr. Gage summarizes some of the practical benefits that the measure is calculated to secure, if cooperated in by the banks of the country. The letter in full follows:

Hon. CHARLES N. FOWLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I want to congratulate you upon the report of your bill to the House by so strong a vote in the committee. Your labors are, however, I fear, but just begun. It is probable, on the other hand, that this period of time is, in all respects, most favorable to secure attention to the comprehensive measures which your bill includes. The usual inertia of the public mind on the supposed recondite subjects of finances, banking, and currency is broken. Every intelligent man is now disposed to "sit up" and think, and there is a consensus of opinion that "something ought to be done," and that that something should be fundamentally curative of the evils experienced and so well established on sound principles as to give effective guaranties that we shall not be exposed to similar ills in the future.

As I expect to return at once to my home in California, I shall be quite "out of the running," and I see no practical way in which I can aid, as I would be glad to do, the great public work you have undertaken.

The more I study the bill reported by the House Committee the more comprehensive and complete it seems to be. It at once removes the weakness in our Government finances and brings the banking business into safe and natural relations toward those interests which it is the primary purpose of the bank to promote and serve. These interests are production, manufacturing, and exchange.

I just mentioned the weakness in our Government finances. We are so accustomed to the situation that we are unconscious of it. This would come to our attention, however, with painful emphasis were we, under present conditions, to face a war involving perhaps an expenditure by our nation of a thousand millions a year—that is, three millions a day—a modest estimate, as the thoughtful must admit.

In my statement before the House I enumerated these weaknesses as, first, the present demand obligations outstanding against the Treasury under the name of legal tender notes—$346,000,000; second, the Government guaranty on $700,000,000 of bank notes.

To be sure, the Treasury holds as security for this undertaking a similar amount of its own bonds, but everyone knows that by this artificial contrivance the bonds so held are overvalued when put to the test in a free market by 20 or 25 per cent. The issue of millions of new bonds to meet the costs of war would strip the mask which now conceals the fact, and expose the weakness at the moment when greatest strength would be required. Thus nature revenges herself on the unwise and the imprudent.

The bill in question ought, then, to commend itself to the public mind in this: It provides a way, without cost to the people, which will in a comparatively short period of time discharge the liability of the $346,000,000 first noted, and convert every "greenback" into a gold certificate, behind which will be a good gold coin, dollar for dollar. Is not this a consummation to be wished? Does it not replace weakness by strength?

Scarcely less important, it eliminates entirely the unnatural guaranty of the Government to the bank notes and wipes out that liability, whatever may be the measure of responsibility therein involved. Further, by impounding, as it will if it have full operation, nearly the present sum total of the public debt into a fund provided by the banks, which shall effectively serve as a guaranty for bank creditors, whether as depositors or note holders, it substantially removes the present bonded debt from any competition with the new Government issue, if made necessary in the contingency of war.

Lastly, looked at from the Government side, it reduces to a minimum the burden of maintaining at a parity with gold $600,000,000 of silver, the commercial value of which in the world's markets is less than $300,000,000. It accomplishes this by giving full priority in the field where money circulates from hand to hand to silver certificates through denominations so small that they can not be released from active use.

All those things the bill, if it becomes a law and is cooperated in by the banks of the country, will secure.

Will it be cooperated in by the banks, and so made uniform and effective? That such cooperation is to the banks an advantage I am certain, but being an ex-banker myself I anticipate you will hear many objections from some who will conceive that the "guaranty fund" for deposits will be inimical to their present prestige and future superiority as compared to their neighbors or rivals. They will not go so far as to argue that the public should continuously endure afflicting losses from weak and unworthy methods of banking in order that their superior methods may gain prestige and profit, but they will argue against the theoretical equality which, it seems to them, the guaranty fund tends to establish. To these objections you and those who aid you in argument for the bill will have to point out that in the health and prosperity of all the real and lasting welfare of each is concerned. You will have to show that under the new régime character, capital, and ability will win as elsewhere they do win their appropriate reward. Fortunately, too, you can show that what the bill proposes in that direction is directly in the line of evolution, for it is to be observed that certain large cities are voluntarily adopting the principle of neutrality for which the bill contends.

The city of Chicago furnishes at the moment a striking and wise example. Surprised some time since that one of their banks—the Chicago National—with liabilities aggregating some $27,000,000, was in an insolvent condition, the clearing-house banks at a known large hazard to themselves took over the assets of the Chicago National bodily, assumed and paid offhand its liabilities. Not again to be surprised in similar fashion they agreed by common consent among themselves to have an agency of their own quite outside of the Government's official agency to keep close inspection and tab upon the methods, doings, and financial practices of each and every member of their organization and upon any other bank or banker in the city, for whom one of their number shall act as a clearing-house agency with power substantially to close the doors to any member by suspending that member from the clearing house. The power of control in the Clearing House Association is thus complete and absolute.

To be sure they have not entered into legal obligation for losses to the public through a weak or failing member, but with the power of examination and control thus assumed goes the duty to guardianship and protection. If they fail to administer and allow failure, always the results of vicious methods to occur in a fellow-member, can they escape without dishonor the moral obligation to protect the public from the results of their laxity or neglect? Their action in the case of the Chicago National establishes a precedent. It is to be remembered that it was established when they did not possess the present power of intimate knowledge and control. This gives a good warrant for the belief that now, under the conditions above indicated, they can not and will not depart from the method which precedent goes to establish. I am informed that both Kansas City and St. Louis are taking steps in harmony with those taken in Chicago. It will be to their advantage to do so since the public will not be slow to give preference to those cities which adopt the conservative method described.

What is thus or may be accomplished by voluntary action here and there in clearing-house cities the bill in question makes effective over the country through the twenty redemption districts proposed.

I have written too much already, but as this is probably my last word on the subject you will make due allowance if I have been guilty of verbosity. With good wishes, I remain,

Yours, very truly, LYMAN J. GAGE.

HORACE WHITE ON CURRENCY—WRITES HIS INDORSEMENT OF THE FOWLER BILL.

Congressman FOWLER has received the following strong indorsement of his currency bill from Mr. Horace White, former editor of the Evening Post:

NEW YORK, March 10, 1908.

MY DEAR MR. FOWLER: Yours of the 9th instant is received. When this session of Congress began I considered it unwise to attempt to amend our currency system by a single comprehensive measure. I did not then think that the public mind was ripe for it, although the discussion has been going on, in a limited circle, for nearly fifteen years. So, for the sake of brevity, I preferred the bill proposed by the American Bankers' Association, except that I did not favor a special tax on a particular part of the circulation.

If, however, the people are prepared, as they seem to be, to take into consideration a root-and-branch measure of reform like that of House bill No. 12677, I shall contribute such aid to its passage as I can.

It is a great merit that the bill reaffirms the principle that gold, not Government debt, is the true basis of a proper currency. It proposes to take away all soft-money cushions and false props of our monetary system, which might fail us in a time of trouble.

When the civil war came on, a large part of our currency, based upon State bonds, fell to a discount ranging from 10 to 50 per cent. Before the war ended our Government bonds and greenbacks fell to a still lower price, and the greenbacks remained below par for more than sixteen years.

Why should we continue to expose ourselves to such chances, even though the risk of war or internal convulsion now seems to be slight? If it is worth while to build a great navy in anticipation of conflict with foreign powers, is it not the part of prudence to put our Government finances and currency on a sure foundation, especially when it can be done without expense?

The plan proposed in your bill is feasible and will accomplish the end sought without any disturbance or contraction whatever. Moreover, the gold needed is within easy reach.

The next most important feature of the bill is that which provides for central redemption agencies, and a supervision of the banks by each other. Most bank failures are caused by speculation with the funds of the bank by improvident loans to the officers and their friends and favorites, in violation of law. Put a stop to such loans and you practically insure the depositors, note holders, and shareholders against loss.

I hear that the banks of Chicago, St. Louis, and Kansas City are taking steps voluntarily for such mutual examination and supervision. This is a wise extension of the powers of the clearing-house associations. Far better is frequent examination by one's neighbors and rivals in business than a diagnosis by the Comptroller after disease has set in.

With this practice established by law the mutual insurance of both deposits and circulation by means of a common guaranty fund deposited in the Treasury will be a very simple matter. Such coinsurance can not be considered either paternalism or socialism. The Government does nothing but hold the money contributed by the banks themselves, and pays it to those entitled to receive it.

The small banks are not put on an equality with the large ones as regards capital or earning capacity, but their liability to failure is minimized, and this is an advantage to the whole banking fraternity and to society in general.

To avoid ambiguity, it would be well to add to the seventeenth section of the bill a proviso that the Government shall not incur any liability in respect to the guaranty fund, except for its safe-keeping and disbursement according to law.

It is the A B C of banking science that circulation, notes, and deposits are alike potential demands on the bank's cash reserve, and that the banker can not determine which of the two forms his liabilities shall assume, and that it is a matter of indifference to him which form they do assume.

It is most desirable, however, to the community which he serves that his customers shall have the privilege of exercising their right to draw upon the bank in the form which they prefer. A considerable argument might be written on this text, but I forbear.

I concur in general with the report of the Merchants' Association of New York in favor of your bill dated February 21, 1908, and I remain,

Your sincere friend and wellwisher,

HORACE WHITE.

Not only that, but all over this country, from one end of it to the other, the commercial bodies, the boards of trade, the clearing houses, have sent letters of approval, and thousands upon thousands of people have been heard upon the same subject. This morning only I met a United States Senator on my way here and was discussing the financial and currency situation. He said, "We ought to do nothing except appoint a commission at this session. I have not received one single letter in support of the Aldrich bill, but I have received hundreds in favor of yours." There are no protests, so far as I know, throughout the length and breadth of this land to the measure which the Banking and Currency Committee reported to this House, with two single exceptions, as I recall them. Then what happened? We waited, and on March 30 there was reported to the House the Aldrich bill.

Immediately we advertised for a hearing, and sent out a thousand communications to all the clearing houses, to all the boards of trade, as far as we could get a list that would be of value. From all cities of the United States, beginning with Los Angeles and San Francisco, Takoma and Seattle, on the west; all the cities lying in between—Chicago, St. Paul, St. Louis, New Orleans—and all the cities of the Atlantic coast—Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Richmond—we heard the people, either in person or by communication. What was the result? There came no approval of the Aldrich bill from anybody outside of two single individuals, to whom I shall allude in a moment. I shall insert here a list of the names of the bodies that were represented and of the gentlemen who appeared before our committee:

List of the gentlemen who appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency in opposition to the Aldrich bill, together with the institutions and people they represented:

Mr. E. Southard Parker, president of the Metropolitan National Bank, of Washington, D. C.

Mr. Emory W. Clark, of Detroit, Mich., representing the Detroit Clearing-House Association.

Mr. Frank D. La Lanne, Philadelphia, Pa., representing 1,000 wholesale and retail merchants.

Mr. Victor Morawetz, chairman of the executive board of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Company and financial economist and leading member of the New York bar.

Mr. Horace White, ex-editor of the New York Evening Post and the Chicago Tribune and one of the leading financial economists and authors of to-day.

Mr. S. A. Harris, of Minneapolis, Minn., one of a delegation representing the business interests of Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Mr. J. N. Jackson, of St. Paul, Minn., representing the St. Paul Jobbers and Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. G. H. Partridge, of Minneapolis, Minn., representing the jobbers and manufacturers of Minneapolis, Minn.

Mr. D. S. Colver, cashier of the German-American National Bank, of St. Paul, Minn.

Mr. George C. Powers, president of the Second National Bank, St. Paul, Minn.

Mr. F. M. Prince, representing the First National Bank of Minneapolis, Minn.

Mr. Elmer H. Youngman, editor of the American Bankers' Magazine, of New York City.

Mr. Eugene Levering, president National Bank of Commerce, of Baltimore, Md., representing the Baltimore Clearing House Association.
Mr. James Clark, president of the Drovers' and Mechanics' National Bank, of Baltimore, and representing the clearing house.
Mr. Alexander Gilbert, president of the New York Clearing House, New York City.
Mr. John M. Miller, jr., vice-president First National Bank of Richmond, Va., and representing the Chamber of Commerce of Richmond.
Mr. Joseph Moore, president National Bank of the Northern Liberties, of Philadelphia, Pa., and representing the Philadelphia Clearing House Association.
Mr. Finley Acker, chairman of the banking and currency committee of the Trades' League of Philadelphia, Pa., an organization composed of over 2,000 commercial, manufacturing, and financial firms.
Mr. Fred W. Upham, president of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, of Chicago, Ill., representing more than 6,000 manufacturers of the State of Illinois.
Mr. Levy Mayer, attorney for the Illinois Manufacturing Association, of Chicago, Ill. The following gentlemen also were present at the hearing: Fred W. Upham, president, Upham & Agler, Chicago; W. B. Conkey, W. B. Conkey Company, Chicago; C. H. Smith, Western Wheeled Scraper Company, Aurora, Ill.; U. G. Orendorff, Parlin & Orendorff, Canton, Ill.; F. G. Allen, Moline Plow Company, Moline, Ill.; W. B. Brinton, Grand Detour Plow Company, Dixon, Ill.; John C. Spry, Southern Oak Lumber Company, Chicago; John T. Stockton, Joseph Stockton Company, Chicago; C. F. Wiehe, Edward Hines Lumber Company, Chicago; Charles Piez, Link-Belt Machinery Company, Chicago; John M. Glenn, secretary, Chicago. The names of the members of that board are synonymous with the great manufacturing interests of Illinois. The figures of the business they speak for are appalling; they represent nearly $2,000,000,000 annual output.
Mr. Charles B. Hamlin, corporation counsel of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, ex-Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.
Mr. Francis B. Sears, vice-president National Shawmut Bank, of Boston, representing the Boston Chamber of Commerce and the Boston Merchants' Association.
Mr. Alfred O. Crozier, of Wilmington, Del.

Gentlemen who appeared in favor of the Aldrich bill.

Mr. Charles G. Glover, president of the Riggs National Bank, Washington, D. C.
Mr. Charles G. Dawes, president Central Trust Company, Chicago, Ill., and ex-Comptroller of the Currency.
Mr. J. Howard Cowperthwait, of New York City.

As I stated, two gentlemen appeared in defense of the Aldrich bill. One was Mr. Glover, of this city, and after reading a statement which had appeared in the New York Herald, which I suppose was his statement, he added that he was in favor of issuing a thousand million demand obligations, and when he was pressed for an explanation of how the Government was to meet this frightful demand of a thousand million demand obligations, added to the thousand six hundred million already resting on the Treasury, what did he say? He said, "I do not want to discuss that question," and he plead guilty to having no information as to how it was to be done. The other gentleman who appeared to advocate the Aldrich bill was Mr. Charles G. Dawes, of Chicago, and after making us a long speech and he was brought down to the practical question involved, finally admitted that the Government would have to sell bonds to redeem these notes, and then when pressed to the last extremity asserted that he was in favor of making the national-bank notes a legal reserve, and also the additional five hundred millions that he favored issuing.

Those were the two defenders of this bill. Of all these people these associations and men that came before us representing the chambers of commerce and the boards of trade and the economists, including Mr. Horace White, Mr. Youngman, and several other leading economists, all of them asserted that the thing for us to do was to pass no legislation at this session, but to pass a broad commission bill. Following that course, on April 30 your committee reported a broad commission bill. What are the precedents for this broad commission bill? I will include in my remarks, for I will not have time now to go over it, the constitution of the commissions for the last seventy years, and prospectively one now for the review of the financial situation in Germany.

It has been the practice abroad, when an important subject of this sort had to be dealt with, affecting in one way or another nearly every member of the community, to create a commission containing representatives of these different elements as well as experts and members of the legislative body. The select committee on banks of issue, whose work was the basis of the law now governing the Bank of England, consisted of twenty-six members, among whom were Sir Robert Peel, who gave his name to the law; George Grote, the well-known banker and historian of Greece, and Sir Thomas Freemantle. The commission on the depression of trade and industry in 1886 contained twenty-three members, of whom only about one-half were members of Parliament. The royal commission on labor in 1892 contained twenty-seven members, among whom were Prof. Alfred Marshall, now the first living English economist, and Samuel Plimsoll. The gold and silver commission in 1888 contained only thirteen members, but they were nearly all experts, representing the interests of British India as well as of the London financial community.

Turning to other countries, the French commission to study the monetary standard, appointed July 22, 1868, contained only seventeen persons, but in this, as in other cases where a parliamentary government exists, it is not necessary to include so many members of the Chamber in order to secure the passage of what may be made a Government measure. Among more recent commissions the full representation of different interests has been more marked than in earlier years. Thus the inquiry which became the basis of the monetary reform in Austria in 1892 was made through a commission of thirty-six persons for Austria and twenty-one for Hungary, making a total of fifty-seven for the dual monarchy. The Japanese commission, appointed by imperial ordinance on October 14, 1893, consisted of twenty-two members, appointed, according to the ordinance, from administrative officers of the higher class, the professors of the Imperial University, the members of the Imperial Diet, and the men noted for their experience and learning in monetary matters." They appointed a subcommittee, which reported in July, 1896, to the minister of finance. The Berlin silver commission, which made one of the most valuable reports on monetary conditions in Germany, consisted of thirty-one members, of whom twelve were officials and nineteen private citizens. The Mexican monetary commission which adopted the gold standard in 1904 was also a large commission representing practically all important interests in the Republic. I have not the exact number, but it is my impression that the full commission contained as many as fifty or sixty persons. It was considered essential there, as in Austria-Hungary and Japan, that all interests which had been affected by the rise and fall of prices and chances in the rate of interest should be represented.

The work done in all these cases was very thorough, and the results, I think, are generally indorsed by experts and have proven of untold benefit to the countries where the new systems have been put in operation.

MONETARY INQUIRY IN GERMANY.

The recent pressure in the money market has led to an inquiry by the German Government on a scale somewhat similar to that proposed by the House Committee on Banking in this country by means of a large commission. The Government, having been interrogated in the Reichstag as to the reasons for the recent high rates of discount, the secretary of the state for the interior has announced an inquiry through an expert special commission. In order to make up such a commission of competent members, the governments of the several federated German States have been invited by the chancellor of the Empire to indicate to him those persons whom they consider qualified for such an inquiry and whose aid will be of value. The experts in question have been chosen from banking circles, as well as from industry, commerce, and agriculture. In addition to the appeal to the States, the Imperial Government has addressed itself directly to the Central Union of Banks and Bankers, to the Permanent Bureau of Commercial Congresses, to the Central Union of German Manufacturers, and to other allied industrial associations, and also to the Federation of German Agriculture, asking them in each case to indicate persons qualified to act as experts in the inquiry.

Our commission bill provides for eleven Members of the House, appointed by the Speaker, eleven members of the Senate, making twenty-two, retaining the legislative authority. What else? In accordance with the commissions that have been appointed for the last fifty years—yes, last one hundred years—throughout the world on such questions as this, we have included a large body of banking economists—six of them. Is there anyone in this House who would vote against such a proposition as that? Is there any Member from the Pacific coast who is going to oppose the appointment on this commission of a banker on the Pacific coast, of a farmer on the Pacific coast, of a representative of labor on the Pacific coast, of a representative of the merchants on the Pacific coast, and a representative of the manufacturers on the Pacific coast? Is there any Member of the great Mississippi Valley who is going to vote against having on this commission a banker from that region, a representative of the farmer, a representative of labor, and of the merchants and of the manufacturers in the Mississippi Valley?

Is there any Member that represents the Atlantic coast region who is going to vote against having a representative of the banking interests of the East, of having a farmer representative, or a representative of labor and a representative of manufacturers and of merchants of this great Atlantic coast? You will find, if you will read my remarks when they appear in the RECORD, that I will confirm with almost every commission that has been appointed on like subjects the wisdom of the appointment of such a commission.

Now, I want to call attention to the words in Saturday's RECORD of the senior Senator from Rhode Island, the leading authority of that body upon Government resources, and this is the all-important question for this House to consider:

> But a change has taken place. The revenues of the country are falling off. The deficiency in the month of April will be more than $11,000,000. The deficiency for the present fiscal year will be at least $60,000,000. What is the duty of Congress in this emergency? The appropriation bills now in this Chamber or in the other provide for an increase of appropriations over those made last year of a hundred and four million dollars; and the end is not yet. There is a public buildings bill, which will probably pass, which may add $20,000,000 to that, making an increase of appropriations in this fiscal year over the last of a hundred and twenty-four million dollars, and this with a deficiency in revenue this year of $60,000,000.

In other words, $60,000,000 deficit this year and $180,000,000 of a deficit next year. I will include in my remarks a tabulated statement showing from 1856 the surplus revenues and deficits, and you will find that since 1890, including these two years, there have been ten years in which there was a deficit and ten years in which there was a surplus.

On the 27th day of April, 1907—mark this, gentlemen—on the 27th day of April, 1907, the free gold in the Treasury was $145,997,000, and to-day there are fifteen millions of gold bullion and coin and twenty-four millions of gold certificates, a difference of about $100,000,000 altogether. They have already suspended gold payments; and if one of you gentlemen desire to go down stairs and draw your salary, you will probably find they will give you silver certificates or United States notes. I shall include in my remarks at this point an estimate made by the Treasury Department in 1902, showing that the cost of maintaining the $346,000,000 greenbacks up to date has been more than $1,000,000,000.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES,

[a] Not reported previous to 1889.

The following estimate was made by the Chief of the Loan and Currency Division of the Treasury Department:

COST TO THE GOVERNMENT OF MAINTAINING THE GREENBACKS.

Cost of the gold reserve, including liability for principal of bonds sold and interest thereon to their maturity.

Principal of bonds sold for resumption purposes:
1877 and 1878		$95,500,000
1894		100,000,000
1895		62,315,400
1896		100,000,000
Total principal		357,815,400
Interest at 4 per cent on the average amount of the free gold in the Treasury from January 1, 1879, to January 1, 1895		93,440,000
		451,255,400
Interest from January 1, 1895, to July 1, 1907, on $95,500,000 4 per cent bonds of 1907		47,750,000
Interest from January 1, 1895, to February 1, 1904, on $100,000,000 5 per cent bonds		45,416,666
Interest from February 1, 1895, to February 1, 1925, on $62,315,400 4 per cent bonds		74,778,480
Interest from February 1, 1896, to February 1, 1925, on $100,000,000 4 per cent bonds		116,000,000
Total cost, including liability, except United States notes outstanding		735,200,546
Add amount of United States notes still outstanding		346,681,016
Total cost and liability		1,081,881,562

If the United States notes had been funded on the 1st day of January, 1879, into the thirty-year 4 per cent bonds of 1907, then being sold, the total cost to the Government therefor, including interest from January 1, 1879, to July 1, 1907, would be as follows:

Principal of bonds	$346,681,000
Interest from January 1, 1879, to July 1, 1907	395,216,340
	741,897,340
Difference in favor of converting the United States notes into bonds	339,984,222

Now, what is the importance of that situation, gentlemen? It is this, that it is proposed to precipitate upon the Treasurer of the United States seven hundred and fifty millions of demand obligations. How are you going to redeem them? Mr. Glover did not know, Mr. DAWES was compelled to admit, as every man must, that the only way of escape is by selling bonds and buying gold for the redemption of the notes.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FOWLER. No, sir; I can not have an interruption——

Mr. BRUMM. I would like to ask the gentleman one important question.

Mr. FOWLER. I have not the time. We have here what is supposed to be an explanation, gentlemen, of what this redemption is going to be at the lips or, rather, from the pen of the Treasurer of the United States, and made a part of Mr. VREELAND's statement before the Banking and Currency Committee. I want to read it to you:

There seems to be an ill-founded impression that in case additional notes to the amount of $500,000,000 were issued there might be reason for apprehension of an insufficient amount of lawful money to redeem the same. However, when it is taken into account that we have of lawful money, consisting of $346,000,000 United States notes and $565,000,000 silver certificates and silver dollars, a total of $911,000,000, with which to provide for the redemption of $627,000,000 national-bank notes and $500,000,000 emergency currency, a total of $1,127,000,000, it shows that we have a percentage of 80.8 per cent lawful money in the country, besides gold, to redeem the present and contemplated issue of national-bank notes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. Gentlemen, is it going to be a real redemption of these notes to put in silver certificates and United States notes? Think of it. As a matter of fact they never redeem them in any kind of lawful money, for in the practice of the banks when they make their 5 per cent good they send a check which goes through the clearing house at New York, and when the balance is against the Government it pays out the gold. We have a deficit and likely will have for several years. I would like to ask this House to revert to history if they will and read the splendid speeches which were male here in 1862 upon the question of making the greenbacks legal tender, by Roscoe Conkling, Charles Sumner, E. G. Spaulding, George H. Pendleton, William Pitt Fessenden, John Sherman, and a large number of men to whom I would like to call to your attention if I had the time. Gentlemen, the legislation of this session of Congress may be the most fatal legislation in the history of this nation. Mark my word. Occasionally we hear it whispered around these halls, "Oh, we must do something."

That reminds me of a little experience I had out in Iowa in the great greenback campaign in 1878. One night in a farmer's family two neighbors had come in and began an argument, and the farmer, who undoubtedly had a very useless boy, at the end of the debate, when argument would no longer suffice, remarked:

If I did not know any more than you do I would go and butt my brains out against a feather tick and if that is too hard I would shoot myself in the feet, in the bowels, do anything, commit suicide, but I want you to do something.

Ah, gentlemen, are we going to be so foolish as that? Must we do something even though we commit political suicide? Are the Republicans of this House going to be so foolish as to try to fool the American people with a foolish measure? Nay, more, with something worse than a foolish measure—a measure that must prove fatal to our national credit. It is worse than foolish. It is dangerous, it is ruinous, and will drive the national credit of this country, as certainly as any bill is passed of this character, to default.

Now, is there any need of doing something? Take all of these thousands and tens of thousands of voices that were heard in our room, or heard from, and not one person, not one single person, with an only exception, thought it was necessary to do anything at this time. That one person knew so much as to say he did not know how to redeem the notes if we put out a thousand million dollars, as he desired. No other person thought it was necessary. Probably the best judge of the situation in this country would be Mr. Forgan, president of the First National Bank of Chicago, a man whose connections cover the whole commercial field of the great Middle West and are broader and more extended than any other banker in this country. He said:

Why, no! I have been wanting to take a vacation for six years and go to Scotland and spend the summer, and I am going this summer.

Again, gentlemen, I stated in November when this panic was at its height, that in the first part of the year the reserves of New York would be higher than they have been for seven years, but they have outstripped my declaration, and last Saturday they were $60,000,000 stronger than in any April since 1894. So you will find the reserves throughout the country and business conditions are such to add still more largely to them.

Mr. Forgan was asked this question by Mr. PRINCE:

Mr. PRINCE. Do you think there is now need of emergency currency legislation?

Mr. FORGAN. I do not; and I do not think a condition can ever exist in this country or any other country that will warrant the use or the issue of anything that could bear such an infernal name as "emergency currency," because as soon as you use it and you say that a single bank has issued emergency currency you have got the whole of your depositors on your back. Now, suppose that emergency does exist; if they believe an emergency exists, they will do as they have always done, and run on the banks. A proper currency prevents anything of the kind of an emergency ever getting into the minds of the public. They never know that an emergency exists. The banks may, but if the banks have the proper tools of their trade, the proper implements that will enable them to carry on their functions as bankers, they will serve the public in such a way that the public will never know that an emergency exists. But just as soon as you name a currency "emergency," just as soon as you use that word you invite distrust, you invite runs on your banks.

I heard something here yesterday from the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] about your depression. You have a depression, but let me say to you now, that if you hold the revision of the tariff over the American people for the next fifteen or eighteen months, you will have a persistent, continuous dry rot, and if you superimpose upon that the issue of $750,000,000 of fiat money, a sure inflation, this country will see a real panic, and you will need something more than emergency currency. You will want gold, gold, and still more gold furnished by the Government, because the banks will protect themselves against the Government and run upon the Government, and compel the Government to maintain all this money upon a gold basis. That is the banks' business. That is their duty. We were given a little advice in our committee the other day by a Member of this House. He told us that the wisdom of all is greater than the wisdom of few. When General Grant was confronted with the greenback bill in 1873, he did not think they all knew more than he did. And we all now know that he knew more than all of them.

In 1878 President Hayes knew more than all of the Republicans, who were political cowards wanting to be reelected to this House, and so in 1893 Grover Cleveland knew more than all the Democratic party, with William J. Bryan thrown in. [Applause on the Republican side.] So, gentlemen, we were advised. Now, we come to this House in the first place with a financial and currency measure supported by every economist and every economic journal in the United States; also thousands and tens of thousands of manufacturers, merchants, business men, and bankers. Again, having had before us a large number of the leading business men of the country, and they having advised us that under all the circumstances it would be better to have no legislation than the Aldrich bill, we have reported to this House a bill for a broad commission, representing all the regions of the United States, representing all the interests of the United States, and I want to tell you now, if there ever was a time for sound learning and sober thought, if there ever was a time when we should be honest with ourselves and honest with the American people, it is this very day. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that the gentleman from New Jersey consumed ten minutes and has five of the fifteen granted to him remaining.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I did not get the Chairman's announcement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] consumed but ten minutes of his last fifteen.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield the five minutes back to me?

Mr. FOWLER. I yield back my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASHBURN].

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Chairman, in his speech made on Friday, March 20, 1908, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] said:

> In reference to the antitrust question, I want to say that the antitrust bill introduced by Mr. Sherman, known as "bill No. 1, first session, Fifty-first Congress," was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, and it did not have a thing that Mr. Sherman ever wrote in it except the enacting clause. When it went upon the statute books it was the product mainly of the brains of four men, namely, Senator George, of Mississippi, Senator George G. Vest, of Missouri, Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, and Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Sherman would not have recognized the bill that was reported as his own if he had met it in the road. Or, if he had recognized it, he would have looked at it as a cow would look at a last year's calf through a crack in the fence. He might have thought he knew it, but he would have thought again that he did not.

Mr. Chairman, in the interest of historical accuracy, I desire to quote from a statement made in reference to this matter in his autobiography by Hon. George F. Hoar, then senior Senator from Massachusetts, corroborating in one particular the remarks made by my friend the other day, and in another amending it. In chapter 36, volume 2, Autobiography of Seventy Years, Mr. Hoar said:

> In 1890 a bill was passed which was called the Sherman Act for no other reason that I can think of except that Mr. Sherman had nothing to do with framing it whatever. He introduced a bill and reported it from the Finance Committee providing that whenever a trust, as it was called, dealt with an article protected by the tariff, the article should be put on the free list. This was a crude, imperfect, and unjust provision. It let in goods made abroad by a foreign trust to compete with the honest, domestic manufacturer. If there happened to be an industry employing thousands or hundreds of thousands of workmen, in which thousands of millions of American capital was invested, and a few persons got up a trust—perhaps importers, for the very purpose of breaking down the American manufacturer—and made the article to a very small extent, all honest manufacturers would be deprived of their protection.
> Mr. Sherman's bill found little favor with the Senate. It was referred to the Judiciary Committee, of which I was then a member. I drew as an amendment the present bill, which I presented to the committee. There was a good deal of opposition to it in the committee. Nearly every member had a plan of his own. But at last the committee came to my view and reported the law of 1890. The House disagreed to our bill, and the matter went to a conference committee, of which Mr. Edmunds, the chairman of the committee, and I, as the member of the committee who was the author of the bill, were members. The House finally came to our view.
> It was expected that the court in administering that law would confine its operation to cases which are contrary to the policy of the law, treating the words "agreements in restraint of trade" as having a technical meaning, such as they are supposed to have in England. The Supreme Court of the United States went in this particular further than was expected. In one case it held that "the bill comprehended every scheme that might be devised to restrain trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations." From this opinion several of the court, including Mr. Justice Gray, dissented. It has not been carried to its full extent since, and, I think, will never be held to prohibit the lawful and harmless combinations which have been permitted in this country and in England without complaint, like contracts of partnership, which are usually considered harmless. We thought it was best to use this general phrase which, as we thought, had an accepted and well-known meaning in the English law, and then after it had been construed by the court, and a body of decisions had grown up under the law, Congress would be able to make such further amendments as might be found by experience necessary.

[Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WASHBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I want to state to the gentleman that I did not want to do the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts any injustice, but was simply undertaking to show that the Sherman antitrust law, like a great many other acts passed by Congress, simply carried the enacting clause of a Member or a Senator who introduced the bill, and who got the benefit of somebody's else brain and work.

Mr. WASHBURN. And, as I stated, this statement of Senator Hoar corroborates what the gentleman from Georgia said in one respect and amended what he said in another.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield the balance of my time, twenty minutes, to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, some argument, some ridicule, some humor have been expended by the gentlemen on that side of the House in connection with the programme which has been pursued by this side. The other day the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN], with exquisite humor, which appealed to my sense of fun as much as anyone's else, took easily the leading rôle in the matter of fun making. He was funnier even than he thought to be. The gentleman illustrated his home breeding upon the farm by telling a delightful story about a dog and an ox.

Several MEMBERS. A cow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the ox's name was "Boss," a very appropriate name for an ox, because it is possible, although I will not vouch for it, that the etymologist may have originally included the word "boss" as among the derivatives from the Latin "bŏs," then "bōs," and then corruptly pronounced "boss," genitive bo-vis, that originally meant a female ox. It is possible that is why we now refer to a boss, especially to the species yclept Republican boss, as bearing every similitude to the ox. [Laughter.] The gentleman told how the Democratic dog got after the Republican ox named "Boss," who was in the pasture up to his knees in clover, quietly chewing his cud, and presumedly doing nothing, as oxen are in the habit of doing nothing when chewing their cuds in deep clover; how the Democratic dog undertook to drive him out of the pasture; how the ox became infuriated and took after the dog, and how, when they got out of the pasture of inactivity and into the field of legislation, it was observed that the dog was in the lead and the ox was doing the chasing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not materially care as to how or in what order we get out of the clover patch of cud chewing and legislative inactivity, nor how we get into the field of legislative activity. I am perfectly willing for the gentleman from New York to be of the persuasion when we get out in the field of active legislation, where we shall do something, that he has chased me into it—just so he gets out and does something is all I ask. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Just so the Republican party does something is all I ask. I have no doubt that even if evidently infuriated and nagged into it, it and its bosses will claim all the credit. What I want is legislation beneficial to the people.

Then my friend, whom I perhaps love personally more than almost anybody, went on to say that our political programme was "not even peanut politics, but of the mustard-seed variety." He was again more humorous even than he himself knew. The Democratic leadership is not of the peanut-fed variety. Peanuts are oleaginous in character, with a fat-producing tendency, a food producing a certain rotundity—a certain appearance of oily embonpoint about a man's figure, which certainly can not be predicated as a physical description of me, however it may be with other "leaders." [Laughter and applause.] I am glad to welcome the description of my friend from Washington of our politics as being of "the mustard-seed variety." Again he was wiser in his humor and more humorous in his wisdom than he knew, for there is nothing that produces so fine a blister, nor as quickly and as effectively, as a blister made out of mustard seed. [Renewed laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, undiscouraged and in pursuance of this policy so blistering to activity, I hold in my hand a petition, respectfully worded, kindly worded, humbly worded, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. To it are appended 162 names of men who are Members of the House of Representatives, or, rather, men whose constituents thought they would be Members of the House of Representatives when they were sent here. [Laughter and applause.] It contains the name of every Democrat who is a Member of this House except 4, who are out of town, and whom we are trying to reach by telegrams, and when we reach them there will be 4 more, which will constitute 166, the full membership of the House upon this side of the main aisle. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, it requires just thirty more names added to this to bring recognition and results. But first I will read you the petition, in order that you may know how respectful and polite and considerate it is.

Hon. J. G. CANNON: Mr. Speaker, we, the undersigned Representatives in Congress—

That is the only thing that could be even tortured into discourtesy—our calling ourselves Representatives [laughter on the Democratic side]—

We, the undersigned Representatives in Congress, request, each for himself and each for each of the others, that you recognize one of us, or, if you prefer, some other Representative, to move to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the further consideration of, and to suspend the rules and to pass, the Stevens bill, or any other bill, having the effect to put wood pulp and print paper on the free list.

A MEMBER. Put in the names.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have stated who they are. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the page to carry this petition down and put it on the table which has been placed in front of the Clerk's desk, out of the way of everybody, where ink and pen and blotters have been provided for all who sincerely desire legislative result. You know it is never too late to mend, and all of you who desire to join in this humble and polite request to the Speaker will have the opportunity. Oh, my friends, we only need thirty of you; that is all. [Applause on the Democratic side.] About that many of you—or almost that many—have introduced bills to put wood pulp and print paper upon the free list. Why, Mr. Chairman, the most eloquent argument that I have read in a long time (I missed its delivery and I was sorry, so I read it last night) came from the gentleman from New York, my friend, Mr. PERKINS. There has been nothing said upon this side of the Chamber that reached it in fullness of information, in cogency of reason, and in aggressiveness of expression and apparent anxiety for immediate action. It is unequaled as an argument in favor of putting wood pulp and print paper upon the free list. Not only the great State of New York is represented in this expressed desire, but the Middle West, in the person of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS], has sounded the free wood pulp and paper tocsin, too. I do not know just how many of you have written and introduced bills to that end, but I know that every one of you who introduced a bill meant what you said, of course. Now, Mr. Chairman—

While the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return, and if you have lately been, or expect to be, in any manner bulldozed or boss-ridden, why, think for a second; think of what a short life we live here and how necessary it is that we should be doing things while we are living during this brief day of our time.

I express a hope that at least thirty of you may sign the petition now on the table. If you do not like that petition because my name is on it, and the names of CHAMP CLARK and DE ARMOND and UNDERWOOD and JOHN WESLEY GAINES, and all these vile "publicans and sinners" on this Democratic side, get up one of your own composed entirely of the "unco guid." The Speaker can add the two together if he be not too excited. If thirty of you sign the Speaker can not refuse, because you, together with us, will then constitute a majority of the House of Representatives, and early in the session, when the rules were being adopted, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] said that the House could not handle itself. The Speaker said that whenever the House wanted to do anything the House always could do it. The Speaker was then asked if a majority of the House made a request to the Speaker whether that request would be heeded, and his reply, as I remember it, was, "A request of a majority of the House of Representatives will always be heeded by the Speaker." So if you Republicans put 30 names there to our 166 and get, by a familiar process of arithmetic, the number 196, we shall have a majority of the House of Representatives. I know that the eminently good natured man who presides over this House, who is so tolerant of opposition, so patient whenever there is a stumbling block athwart the pathway of his intent, will bow in his most elegant manner, with the gesticulation that is peculiar to him, and say, "Gentlemen, a majority of the representatives of the American people have a right to have their way, and I will recognize somebody." [Applause.] Do not be afraid. Why, gentlemen, I feel optimistic to-day, because I joined the optimists' club this morning, sending a dollar for a life membership in it, and I have had some optimist's literature sent me, and I find these lines to read for your edification, among other things. I will announce beforehand, however, that they are evidently not written by the poet laureate of the House, the Hon. JOHN DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, but seem to have been written by a man with some regard for both rhythm and rhyme.

Now, gentlemen, before I read, walk up and do your duty. Are there thirty of you that are not afraid to make a respectful and polite, even a humble request, in writing, of your own chosen Speaker, without having previously obtained his consent to request him? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] If there are, let us hear from you. Disregard the danger. Be independent. Play your own hand.

Though the path of life be stormy
Play the game.
Troubled waters may surround,
Disappointments will confound;
Yet, though heartaches still abound,
Play the game.

[Applause.]

Gentlemen, let me say that the danger is not so great as you think. It is chiefly an alarm growing out of peculiar gesticulations and an original hammering of the desk and an impatient voice. But if you just march up and say: "I will for once represent my constituents. I want free wood pulp and free print paper, and I will have the courage at least to ask of the Speaker to recognize somebody to move to consider a bill for it," upon my honor you will come out of it without any physical disfigurement. I know some of you gentlemen do not believe that, but you will. Do not take recourse in the idea that you will not benefit the publishers of the newspapers and their readers by your request and your vote. I know you will, because the other day the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] demonstrated and confessed that you would. After the argument had been made that putting print paper and wood pulp on the free list "would not reduce the price of paper, because that was not the reason of the rise in its price," then the gentleman from Pennsylvania, turning to this side of the Chamber, said:

The gentleman from Mississippi has warned us on this side frequently not to take counsel from those who are interested in the result of legislation, and now he is trying to force upon the House legislation in the name of those who are interested in the legislation, to wit, the newspaper men and the magazines.

And so forth.

He little thought of the argument he was making, and yet it was conclusive; because if the newspapers and magazine publishers are interested in this legislation, then it is because the first step in his reasoning was not sound, to wit, that putting paper and wood pulp on the free list would not reduce its price. They could not have any possible interest in making them free of duty except upon the supposition that the gentleman could not himself help making—that putting them on the free list would reduce the price and enable them to get paper cheaper. So I will leave you to his argument and admission on that subject.

My friends, I say again, Do not rely on a broken reed, do not rely upon the Cannon resolution of "inquiry." Why, your own Republican newspapers, among them a paper from the district of my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the Chicago Record-Herald of April 20, 1908, says:

If Speaker CANNON had hoped to turn the tables on the President and the advocates of immediate action on wood pulp and print paper duties by his "coup" in the shape of resolutions demanding injunction proceedings against the paper trust he soon realized that the strategem had proved a complete failure. The Attorney-General informed the anxious Speaker that the inquiry into the organization and methods of the combination was still in progress, that the evidence so far obtained did not warrant criminal prosecution, and that the investigation would be energetically continued with a view to appropriate action in the end in the event of such action being demanded by the completed record.

"Trust busting" as an alternative to every simple repeal legislation—and legislation urged not merely by publishers but by manufacturers and merchants approaching the question from the standpoint of forest preservation—was thus eliminated from the situation. The Speaker's best laid plans had gone agley. The necessity of acting on the Executive's recommendation to overhaul the wood pulp and paper duties without touching any other tariff schedule again stared the poor standpatters in the face. What was to be done?

Nothing? With over a hundred Republican Congressmen in open rebellion—

If there be 100 of you, let 30 of you unite with us in this humble, but polite, request which the Speaker will gladly and greedily grant. That is all that is desired of you.

With over 100 Congressmen in open rebellion, with the Democrats under the irrepressible WILLIAMS contemplating further prodding, and with great interests persistently asking why the obvious, simple, natural remedy should not be applied by the majority, the standpatters perceive that "nothing" would be a poor alternative indeed.

It is now announced that Speaker CANNON will offer a resolution for an independent Congressional investigation of the paper trust. This will be coup No. 2. Will it be a greater success than No. 1? Hardly. Why a separate investigation of the paper trust and not of any other combination? Why this utterly gratuitous reflection on the Executive Departments, to whose records all the State platforms point with pride?

Mr. Speaker, I saw the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] go down in the neighborhood of the mourners' bench, and I hoped for something in the shape of a signature result. I ask him to take the matter into prayerful and silent consideration for a few moments while I finish reading this article, and keep silent that he may hear. [Laughter.]

Besides, an investigation will take time—no one knows how much time. The restive legislators will scarcely be quieted by it. The champions of forest preservation need no investigation of any alleged restraint of trade to fortify their case for repeal of wood-pulp duties.

The CANNON scheme won't answer. The repeal remedy can not be dodged in any such way. The cry that the tariff question must not be touched, even gently, lest something appalling should occur alarms no one. There is no balm for the stand-patters save in repeal.

[Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I find this in the Poughkeepsie New Press——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very sorry that I did not have time to read an alleged interview with the present occupant of the chair [Mr. WATSON]. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCMORRAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. MCMORRAN. Mr. Chairman, it is seldom that I have felt inclined to talk on any public question before this House, but being a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, and having devoted considerable time within the past two or three months to the study of the currency question, and knowing from some observations that have been made that the members of that committee are sometimes called cranks, I have felt that I ought to address the House and give my views upon the currency question. I only regret that the time is so limited to discuss so important a question, and I regret very much that our time has been cut short, as I assume, largely by the efforts of that great Democratic spellbinder, the leader of the minority of this House. I was very glad to hear the gentleman state this morning that he had joined the optimists' club. If there is anybody who needs to join that club, it is our friend, JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, the leader of the minority, and if I am any prophet, I want to prophesy to the Members of this House that after the vote is counted next November that same gentleman will be looking for one of the largest pessimistic clubs in this country to join. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] He will see presented to him one of the largest majorities that the Republican party has ever rolled up in favor of reinstating the Republican party in power for another four years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, referring to the currency question, it is a very important matter, and I assume there are very few Members of this House that are informed upon it or who have given any study to the question. We had a great panic during the year 1907, and there have been innumerable reasons given as the cause for it, and in that connection I desire to call attention to a few figures on the subject of our cash and reserves. In 1897 this country had in cash in circulation nineteen hundred and six millions of dollars.

In 1907, last year, we had thirty-one hundred and sixteen millions of dollars, or an increase of practically 50 per cent. In 1897 we had in loans in this country, by national and all other banks, two thousand and sixty-six millions of dollars. In 1907 we had forty-seven hundred and nine millions of dollars, or an increase of 135 per cent as against 50 per cent of an increase of actual money. I also desire to call attention to the condition of the banks of this country during the year 1907 as to their reserves. The cash reserves of all banks, except national, was 8.28 per cent; private banks, 5.76 per cent; trust companies, 4.93 per cent; savings banks, 0.78 per cent, or an average of 5.61 per cent of all banks, except national. Is it any wonder that we had a shock? And had this condition continued it was only a question of time when the shock would have been stronger and would have done far more damage to the country.

Now, as to the remedies. The remedies proposed are without number. Everyone has a remedy, and I assume that my friend, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CLARK, on the other side, if he were permitted to make an answer, would say that he would be willing to reiterate his former declaration on the floor of this House, namely, to destroy all the custom-houses and then we would have a good currency and plenty of it. There have been several bills introduced before the Banking and Currency Committee. We have had the Aldrich bill, which we have given most careful consideration. We have had the Vreeland bill, and have given said bill the same consideration. The danger of the Aldrich bill is that it is an issue of currency which is practically fiat money. There is no provision in that bill for any gold reserve for redemption, and the same thing applies to the Vreeland bill. Mr. Chairman, we do not want to forget, as the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency has stated, that we have to-day only $150,000,000 of gold reserve as against three hundred and forty-six millions of greenbacks, six hundred and odd millions of currency and four hundred and odd millions of silver dollars, which are worth only 50 cents on the dollar intrinsically. When you issue five to seven hundred millions of currency in addition to this without providing any additional gold for redemption, you are going beyond the danger line.

Our currency should be built up by a stronger gold reserve, and I think that is conceded by every business man in this country to-day. Before we pass any legislation relating to currency, it is all important that we should have better knowledge than we have to-day, and I am strongly in favor of the commission that may have ample time to give full investigation to the necessities of this country at this present time. At the present time I want to say to the membership of his House that there never was a better time for the formation of a new currency law by such a commission as was outlined by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Our reserves are now being built up by the banks throughout the country. We shall have a period of rest for the next year, not only allowing the banks to build up their reserves, but allowing many of our American people to liquidate and get on a stronger basis. The currency to-day is more redundant, and will continue in that condition for many months, and until next August we shall have more currency, in my judgment, than the country needs. We have to-day, or will have by the 1st of July next, upward of four hundred millions of Government bonds that can be utilized for circulation. Assuming that something must be done for the interests of the American people, is it proper that we should assume to issue a currency based upon State, county, and municipal bonds when we have within our control over four hundred millions of Government bonds?

The Government bonds under which the present currency is issued are no burden upon the American people or upon the borrower, while the proposed form of currency, as advocated by the Aldrich bill and by the Vreeland bill, makes a tax upon the borrowers of this country, and I believe it is unfair, unjust, and uncalled for on the part of this Congress to pass any legislation of a currency nature that will impose any burdens upon the American merchant, the American manufacturer, or the American agriculturist.

In closing, I hope that the membership of this House will coincide with the recommendation of the Banking and Currency Committee and recommend a commission, giving them ample time to investigate this subject and to bring back to this Congress on the 1st day of December next a plan that will give a more elastic currency, such as the country is demanding. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

That in all cases, during the fiscal year 1909, where any building or buildings not reserved by the vender are on land heretofore acquired, or which may hereafter be acquired, for Federal building sites or for the enlargement of Federal building sites, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to rent such building or buildings until their removal becomes necessary and to make such repairs thereto as may be necessary to keep the buildings in tenantable condition, payment to be made from the proceeds derived from the rentals, the net proceeds to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and a report thereof to be submitted to Congress annually.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the paragraph just read, with the view of obtaining some information respecting the necessity for it. Are there any instances where the Government has bought sites for public buildings that such sites contain buildings not reserved and which are tenantable and the sites not needed by the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will state to the gentleman this chiefly refers to the buildings immediately in the rear of the post-office building in this city. We have acquired that block of ground, with the view of the ultimate erection of a building on it for the use of the Post-Office Department, and pending the erection of the new building we have been renting the residences and buildings upon these premises. Now, the items of repair and the like are difficult to compute in advance, and, being a purely temporary arrangement, we have provided that during the year they may rent these buildings and pay the absolutely necessary current repairs out of the rental, and cover the balance into the Treasury. Now we are simply extending this one year further.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is no appropriation then for the erection of a building on that site?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There is no appropriation and no authorization for the construction of a building upon this site.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The Government has simply acquired the site.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Simply acquired the site.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Intending some time in the future to erect a building there.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. In the rear of the present post-office.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I notice in a number of public-building acts that appropriations are made and authority given to acquire sites for public buildings in various towns without an appropriation for the construction of a building, and I did not know but that the provision might apply to such cases.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This refers to the city of Washington, where these residences are now rented by the Government and the current repairs paid out of the rent.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This is the only case known to the committee where the Federal Government owns a site and buildings and is not ready to put up a new building.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This is the only one that is in my mind. The law was carried last year to the same effect.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are not there places in the country, aside from Washington, where the Government has bought sites and has been renting buildings on them?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There have been such instances, but I do not know of any instance at the present time.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The buildings at Indianapolis are rented now.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I think perhaps they are, but I am not advised about that.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And does not this permit the Treasury Department to rent any sites, and therefore it may not prepare to construct the buildings as soon as possible?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It will not, but where a site has been authorized and acquired and a building has not been authorized it is certainly proper to rent the building during that period and cover the rent into the Treasury.

Mr. DRISCOLL. But without giving any leases for any length of time.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is not so contemplated at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. This only refers to the fiscal year 1909.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of 288 keepers of life-saving and lifeboat stations and of houses of refuge, $273,800.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in reference to the pay that is given the keepers of the life-saving stations, whether in case a man has become disabled by reason of his service for the Government, which is a hazardous and wearing service, any allowance of any sort is made for him?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state in answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] he is allowed one year's pay under the law.

Mr. PERKINS. He receives one year's pay, and that is all he receives?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir; that is all.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, does the gentleman think, where, as in many cases, and in a case that I have in mind of a keeper on Lake Ontario, a man who after heroic work for years, after saving a large number of lives, after constant exposure, without regard for himself, his health, or his safety, is at last so disabled that he can do no more for the Government, and, I suppose, no more for himself in any way, that is sufficient? It does seem that to turn a man onto the world disabled after such service as that, with one year's pay, is not just in comparison with what is received by those who expose themselves to no greater dangers in the Army and Navy.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Is not there a bill either reported or passed—and I confess ignorance as to exact details—which provides for the retirement pay for men engaged in the Life-Saving Service?

Mr. PERKINS. I did not know that there was such a bill.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Such a bill has come out of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in this session.

Mr. PERKINS. I should vote for it with very great pleasure.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My recollection is that a bill passed the House, but it only referred to officers and not to surfmen. My recollection is it passed the House at this session.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] that under the existing law a surfman who is injured in the performance of his duty—that is, permanently injured—is allowed one year's pay. That is, they carry him on the roll for one year. There is no law, however, providing for the retirement of the men in the Life-Saving Service.

Mr. MANN. The law provides if a man is killed in the Service that his widow or children may have two years' pay, and, if the Service desires, one year more of pay.

Mr. PERKINS. Suppose he becomes entirely disabled in the Service. What does he get when he is obliged to throw up his position?

Mr. MANN. He gets nothing.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] think that that is more dangerous than the Railway Mail Service?

Mr. PERKINS. I think the Railway Mail Service is a dangerous service.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is all they get, namely, one year's pay when they are injured.

Mr. MANN. We had before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce a number of bills proposing pensions, retirement lists, and things of that sort.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I suppose you are against all sorts of civil pensions?

Mr. MANN. They were considered at length in the committee, and a majority of the committee was opposed to the creation of a pension list or a retirement list.

Mr. PERKINS. Was that retirement based merely upon length of service or was it a retirement where a man by reason of excessive exposure had become physically unable to do any further work, as often occurs in the Life-Saving Service?

Mr. MANN. Both schemes were represented in different bills before the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. The committee has not reported any of those, and does not expect to?

Mr. MANN. The committee in lieu of all those claims reported the Lovering bill, which has passed, and is now a law, making an increase in pay slightly in some of the cases, giving a ration in all cases, and extending the former law which gave two years' pay to a dependent mother as well as to the widow and dependent children.

Mr. PERKINS. Where would the gentleman draw a line between making a retiring allowance to a person who exposes himself to danger in the Navy, for instance, in the service of his country, and one that does precisely similar work and is exposed to equal dangers in the Life-Saving Service?

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman asks me the question, of course I think it is an easy matter to draw the line between a military service and a purely civil service. It has always been the theory of the Government, as I understand it, to give some preference to people engaged in military service, so far as being retired is concerned, over those employed in the civil service; but so far as this particular service is concerned, I may say to the gentleman that personally I have long been inclined to the opinion that they were entitled to a pension if injured in the service.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that there is a material difference in the two services. In the first place, the men in the civil service, all along the line, get better salaries than those in the military and naval service of the United States.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Take us now, in the condition of peace that we have enjoyed with few breaks for a hundred years, does not the gentleman think that the Life-Saving Service corps is more dangerous than service in the Navy?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have no doubt that a railroad brakeman or fireman has a more dangerous employment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DRISCOLL. My time has not expired, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Besides that, the man who enlists in the military or naval service for three years, four years, or five years, can not retire if he finds that service disagreeable or if he does not like it, whereas people in most other services, the railroad or other dangerous service, can retire when they like. So that I think that should all be considered before we inaugurate the policy of civil pensions all along the line.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not believe, if we are going to inaugurate a system of civil pensions, that we ought to include miners, railroad men, and all men engaged in dangerous occupations?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Well, I have never advocated, and do not now, the policy of pensions for people engaged in civil life.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Does not the gentleman think the time will come, and at at no very distant date, when we will be compelled to do it?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not believe in climbing mountains until I come to them, and we have not come to that mountain yet.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I believe we ought to get ready to climb that mountain now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the pay of surfmen in the Life-Saving Service shall be computed according to the number of days in each month, respectively, and not as required by section 6 of the act of June 30, 1906, making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to reserve the point of order on that paragraph and would like an explanation as to the necessity for the change of law in this paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that the reason for the change and the necessity for it is this: Under the rule that obtains in the payment of employees of the various Executive Departments as applied to the Life-Saving Service, it transpires that sometimes a substitute loses a day's pay and sometimes the principle and the substitute both lose a day's pay, and at other times only one loses a day's pay under the computation fixed by the rule under the statute. The surfmen do not understand why they sustain this loss, and think that somebody in the Department is responsible for it, and not the law. The gentleman in charge of this Service, Mr. Kimball, said it was very embarrassing to them, and caused more or less dissatisfaction among the surfmen, their employees; and for that reason they would like to have this provision inserted, so that they would pay a man for the time he actually worked; and if the substitute happened to go to work on the 31st he would get pay for that day, and not have to work two days for one day's pay. That is the reason for this change.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman from Minnesota that there is no explanation in the report as to the change, and the change in the bill does not explain itself. I did not clearly understand the change that is made.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman who appeared before the committee, Mr. Kimball, in charge of that work, said:

I would like to call the attention of the committee to the letter that the Secretary of the Treasury has sent to Congress asking that the method of paying the surfmen be changed. The letter is in House Document No. 806. The recommendation of the Secretary is that this proviso be added:

Then follows the proviso we have inserted. I asked him the question: "What is the reason for that recommendation?" Mr. Kimball said:

That method of computation for the Government usually is a very convenient method, but it operates very unjustly to our surfmen. The reason is stated as well as I can state it in the text that follows. The men do not get what is actually due them. In some instances they lose two days' work; that is, the compensation for two days' work, and others lose one day. As it is now both the substitute and the man lose a day sometimes and the Government gains two days. They think they are not treated right.

Then he goes on with a further explanation for the provisions to carry it out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The result of this amendment staying in here would be merely to pay the man for the day that he actually worked?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

For expenses of the Revenue-Cutter Service: For pay and allowances of captain commandant and officers of that rank, senior captains, captains, lieutenants, engineer in chief, and officers of that rank, captains of engineers, lieutenants of engineers, two constructors, cadets, cadet engineers, commissioned surgeon, two contract surgeons, two civilian instructors, and pilots employed, and rations for pilots; for pay of warrant and petty officers, ships' writers, buglers, seamen, oilers, firemen, coal heavers, water tenders, stewards, cooks, and boys, and for rations for the same; for allowance for clothing for enlisted men; for fuel for vessels, and repairs and outfits for the same; ship chandlery and engineers' stores for the same; actual traveling expenses or mileage, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, for officers traveling on duty under orders from the Treasury Department; commutation of quarters; for maintenance of vessels in the protection of the seal fisheries in Bering Sea and the other waters of Alaska, and the enforcement of the provisions of law in Alaska; for maintenance of vessels in enforcing the provisions of the acts relating to the anchorage of vessels in the ports of New York and Chicago, and in the Kennebec River, and the movements and anchorage of vessels in St. Marys River; for temporary leases and improvement of property for revenue-cutter purposes; not exceeding $15,000 for the improvement of the depot for the Service at Arundel Cove, Maryland; contingent expenses, including wharfage, towage, dockage, freight, advertising, surveys, labor, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under special heads, $1,994,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, in lines 18 and 19, strike out $1,994,000 and insert in lieu thereof $2,191,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I think I ought to make an explanation to the committee of the reason for this material increase.

Since the estimates were submitted to the House, Congress has enacted a law increasing the pay of the Revenue-Cutter Service, and it is in consequence of that law that this increase becomes necessary.

Mr. MANN. An increase in pay and an increase in numbers.

Mr. TAWNEY. An increase in pay and an increase in numbers. The amount required to be added to the appropriation "Expenses Revenue-Cutter Service, 1909," to carry out the provision of the act of April 16, 1908, is as follows:

1 captain commandant	$4,828.00
6 senior captains	7,023.60
1 engineer in chief	4,076.48
6 captains of engineers	10,977.60
For increase in pay of retired officers serving in the civil war:
26 captains, 12 first lieutenants of engineers, 2 second lieutenants of engineers	20,273.25
Increase in pay to grade of captain commandant of former chief of division, retired	750.00
Increase of commissioned officers:
5 second lieutenants, 5 second lieutenants of engineers, 10 third lieutenants of engineers, 10 cadets, 10 cadet engineers	19,142.50
20 per cent increase of pay for all enlisted men	114,607.20
Longevity pay of warrant officers	5,453.78
Longevity pay of petty officers	3,283.48
Clothing allowance, enlisted men	7,000.00
Total	197,415.89

All of these items make up the aggregate of the amendment submitted, which is made necessary by reason of the law passed at this session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, some of the items which the gentleman gives are not new items in the sense of being totally new amounts. Some of them are new items merely in the name as given, with some increase in salary. Now, can the gentleman tell us what total increase is proposed by the amendment and asked for by the Department, over what the estimates would otherwise have been?

Mr. TAWNEY. One hundred and ninety-seven thousand four hundred and fifteen dollars and eighty-nine cents.

Mr. MANN. I want to compare it with the totals as they would have been.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can the gentleman state what it was represented the increase would be under this law?

Mr. MANN. My recollection was it was $175 or $200.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In the list which you read there, did you not read the salary of retired officers of the Army?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I read—

For increase in pay of retired officers serving in the civil war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do they get more than the officers who did not serve in the civil war?

Mr. TAWNEY. They seem to get more under the recent law than the other retired officers.

Mr. KEIFER. I think not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. All retired officers who served in the civil war, both those who served in the Army and those who served in the Navy, as well as in the Revenue-Cutter Service, get more pay than they would receive if they had not served in the civil war.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that provision existed prior to this session of Congress?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How do you come to be making provision for retired officers of the Army in a section relating to the Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. MANN. This is not for retired officers of the Army.

Mr. TAWNEY. They are retired officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service who served during the civil war—that is, who served in the Army during the civil war and afterwards became officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Have they already got a retired list in this Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. MANN. I am surprised that the gentleman from Missouri forgets the gallant fight that he and I made several Congresses ago.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am sorry that we did not win out.

Mr. MANN. We were defeated, and a retired list was created.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois parted company with us afterwards.

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman from Missouri parted company with the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois went over to the enemy in this matter.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why are you talking about retired Army officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. TAWNEY. They are not Army officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service, because there are no Army officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. MANN. These retired officers to which reference was made are officers of the Revenue-Cutter Service who, during the civil war, served in the Navy.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And they get more pay than other men who do the same work?

Mr. MANN. They get more pay than they would have received if they had not served in the civil war. At the last session of Congress we passed a bill by unanimous consent increasing a man's retired pay on that account, and that man only had five days' service, I think, in the Academy at that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask one more question for information. Is there any retired list already created out of the Revenue-Cutter Service?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; the Fifty-sixth or Fifty-seventh Congress enacted a law creating a retired list in the Revenue-Cutter Service, since which time officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service have been retired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Already got them on the list?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; on the list under the law passed in the Fifty-seventh Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. If the gentleman from Missouri will let me interrupt——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the Fifty-seventh Congress we passed a law placing officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service on the retired list, and a few days ago we passed a law here placing the enlisted men of the Revenue-Cutter Service on the retired list.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I voted against both of them.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I did all I could the other day against that bill making this pension roll, but I did not get much help.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry. I notice, on page 2 of the report, that the committee say that the appropriation of $50,000 for the transportation of silver coin is omitted. Why do you do that?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think when that item is reached——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand, but I want to know beforehand, so that I can be looking the matter over.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will answer the gentleman when we reach that item.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to be forearmed as to what the reason is, so that I may be able to show that the reason is not valid.

Mr. TAWNEY. Our reasons are the same as they were at the last Congress.

Mr. KEIFER. We do not care to discuss this in advance.

Mr. TAWNEY. We will discuss it when the item is reached.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to discuss it now. The gentleman does not give any reason in the report, but I know the reason—we are held up by the express trust. The Government and everybody else is being robbed, and it is an outrage.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was greed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to transfer the U. S. S. Vicksburg, with her outfits and armament, to the Treasury Department for the use of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, after line 9, insert:

"That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to settle any and all claims of the widows and orphans and survivors, specified in the report of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, of the General Slocum disaster, which occurred in the East River, New York Harbor, on the 15th day of June, 1904, by the burning of said steamer General Slocum."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Very well; I will reserve it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered by me in good faith. It is just, and should be adopted. You all know the sad story. The steamer General Slocum, an excursion boat, plying in the waters around New York Harbor, was burned to the water's edge on the 15th of June, 1904, and over 1,000 men, women, and children lost their lives in the terrible tragedy. The cause of the catastrophe was due largely to the criminal negligence of the Government inspectors. They failed to do their duty. The inspection they made was a farce. The life-preservers on the steamer were rotten. The fire apparatus was useless. The crew were raw deck hands, who were never drilled, and at the critical moment tried to save only themselves. When the fire broke out pandemonium reigned, and amid the tumult and the scorching flames hundreds and hundreds of helpless men, women, and children, caught like rats in a trap, were burned to a crisp on the ship, and hundreds and hundreds of others, just as helpless, were scorched and burned until, frantic, they threw themselves into the rushing waters only to be drowned. The horrors of that day will never be forgotten. It is too terrible a scene to contemplate even now. Fathers who were there lost their reason, and mothers, unable to save their children, went mad. The frightful scenes that ensued will never be effaced from the memory of this generation. It took strong men to write what they saw, and the horror-stricken country shrank from reading the sickening details.

The Government, Mr. Chairman, ordered an investigation. That is generally the case. That investigation dragged its slow length along for weeks and months, and the testimony and findings in the matter filled a good-sized book, with the contents of which many here are thoroughly familiar. It was ascertained by this Government investigation that the terrible loss of life of this lamentable tragedy could have been prevented, to a very large degree, if the officials of the Government charged with the responsibility of proper inspection had performed their duty in accordance with the law. It was proven conclusively that the life-preservers and the fire apparatus on board of the General Slocum were old and rotten and absolutely useless; and this fire apparatus and these life-preservers had only recently been inspected by the Government inspectors, who had passed them as being in compliance with the provisions of the statutes of the United States. The law had been flagrantly violated. The testimony proves conclusively that if these inspectors of the Government had done their duty and enforced the law, the frightful loss of life never could have occurred.

Now, sir, after the official investigation had conclusively demonstrated the criminal negligence of these Federal officials, some of whom were indicted, and some of whom have been tried, and, I believe, others are yet to be tried, the Government dropped the case so far as any relief is concerned. The captain, however, of the steamer has been convicted and sentenced to a long term of imprisonment. But these prosecutions and these convictions can not bring back to life the dead; can not restore to the living the loss they have sustained in the death of their beloved relatives; and can not compensate the injured and the maimed and the deformed. They have no legal redress—only an equitable claim on the Government for relief. Their only hope of relief is by an act sending their cases to the Court of Claims, or an appropriation by Congress to pay them a sum of money in full settlement as proposed in this amendment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will my colleague permit an interruption?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. When the bill introduced by my colleague for the relief of the survivors of the Slocum disaster was in the Committee on Claims in a former Congress I actively supported the measure and sought to secure action by that committee. I labored hard in the committee to obtain a report which would bring the matter before the House, but the committee differed with me. I regret the Claims Committee will not report some measure which might eventually give some measure of relief to these unfortunate people.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman is quite familiar with all the circumstances in the case. I know he did all he could to aid me to get some relief for these poor people. As he says, the Committee on Claims refused to report the bill in the last Congress. But I reintroduced the same bill in this Congress. It is now pending in the Committee on Claims, and if this amendment is beaten to-day, or goes out on a point of order, I shall continue the fight to get a favorable report on my bill now in the Committee on Claims, and I know my colleague, who is an influential member of that committee, will give me all the help he can. I shall fight this matter to the end. Justice must be done to the survivors of the Slocum disaster. Their cause is just, and sooner or later it will prevail.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss all the details in the case at length; I have not the time at my disposal to do so. But on the 4th day of December, 1905, as soon after the calamity as possible, I introduced in Congress a bill for the relief of the General Slocum survivors. The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims. That bill provided that these cases be sent to the Court of Claims for adjudication. There was a long hearing before the Committee on Claims, and it was contended by members of the committee that there was no legal liability on the part of the Government; and if there was any responsibility on account of the negligence of these inspectors, it was an equitable claim against the Government and that the only way relief could be had for the poor widows and orphans was by an appropriation bill. Hence, after consultation on the 7th of February, 1908, I introduced a bill making an appropriation to settle these claims, which bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Committee on Appropriations granted a hearing, but refused to report the bill. Now, I want to get the judgment of this House in regard to this matter. I offer this amendment to get a vote in this House—to find out who are for and who are against these people. These bills have been pending in this House for several years, and I have never been able to get the matter before the House—never been able to get a vote. There are hundreds of these poor little orphans and widows that are to-day objects of charity or supported by friends. They should be provided for in some way by the Government, and if this amendment offered by me is now adopted they will all be satisfied, and the agitation for governmental relief will cease and the case will be closed. The Government should look after these widows and orphans and survivors, because they were made widows and orphans by reason of the neglect of the Government officials. That was proved by the Government investigation held in the city of New York. There is no other remedy save Government relief, and this amendment is just and should be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps this amendment is subject to a point of order on the ground that it is new legislation, but I hope that no gentleman on that side of the House will insist on the point of order. Give us a chance in the House to vote for or against this amendment on its merits. That is all I ask. I will say here that if this amendment is adopted these people will be satisfied, but if this amendment is stricken out on a point of order raised by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] or some other Republican, then these people will be here at the doors of Congress, session in and session out, until relief is granted. I shall keep up the fight for justice until the battle is won. Just remember what I now say. I hope the point of order will not be made, and that the gentleman will permit this question to be voted on in the House. Let us have a record vote. Let us find out who are for and who are against the unfortunate survivors of the General Slocum catastrophe—one of the great tragedies of the century—one of the most heart-rending events in all history. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For wages of plate printers, at piece rates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of printers' assistants, when employed, $1,624,255, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes or Treasury notes of larger denomination than those that may be canceled or retired, except in so far as such printing may be necessary in executing the requirements of the act "To define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this paragraph refers to the cost of printing, and so forth, and to our paper moneys, I hope it will not be trenching too much upon the attention of this generous committee to read a bill, which I introduced in 1901, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, numbered 3169, entitled,

A bill to exempt news paper and paper used in printing from tariff duties, and to amend the tariff laws.

It provides as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That news paper and printing paper of every description intended to be used for printing newspapers, books, circulars, commercial blanks, notes, posters, labels, embracing and including all papers intended to be used as stock in newspaper or job printing offices, and all rags, jute, pulp, fiber, of every description, including all material intended to be used in the manufacture of paper herein described, shall be admitted at all the ports of the United States, when imported, free of duty; and the act approved July 24, 1897, entitled "An act to provide revenues for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," be amended to conform hereto.

Mr. Chairman, that bill I introduced in 1901. Of course a Republican House would not make it law. The Committee on Ways and Means did not then think enough of the proposition to report it. Of course we would not have had this paper trust about which we hear so much talk and complaint, nor the taxation of American intelligence, and so forth, by the paper trust if my bill had been made law. I am very glad to see the President come along six years after I introduced this bill, adopt the idea, and recommend it to Congress, and while on one side I rejoice at that, yet I regret very much to see that the President is in the minority with his own party, while the Democrats are a unit for this trust cure. Sooner or later I am satisfied that we will get relief under such a plan. I felt myself that it should have been done long, long ago, and I am glad to see so many—about sixty-eight Republicans—on that side who have come to the conclusion that there is real merit in the proposition which I suggested several years ago, and I think the first to do so.

The Clerk read as follows:

For postage stamps and foreign postal cards for the National Museum, $500.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 4 on page 19 insert the following:
"Gallery of art: For the adaptation of the Smithsonian building to the purposes of an art gallery."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the Committee on Appropriations would not resist this amendment. The act of 1846 which incorporated the Smithsonian Institution contains this provision:

SEC. 5586. Whenever suitable arrangements can be made for their reception, all objects of art and of foreign and curious research and all objects of natural history, plants, and geological and mineralogical specimens belonging to the United States which may be in the city of Washington, in whosesoever custody they may be, shall be delivered to such persons as may be authorized by the Board of Regents to receive them and shall be so arranged and classified in the building erected for the Institution as best to facilitate the examination and study of them.

And so forth.

In other words, it was the intention of Congress originally that the Smithsonian Institution should include within its functions provision for an art gallery, and from 1846, when this organic act was passed, down until the present time, year by year, Congress has made provision for the accumulation and preservation and display of objects of art. Not very long ago, within two or three years, Harriet Lane Johnston provided in her will for the disposition of all her pictures, constituting somewhat of an art gallery. They were to be given to the National Art Gallery. The question as to whether or not there was a National Art Gallery was raised by the executors of the will, the Smithsonian Institution intervening, and it was decided by the court that such National Art Gallery did exist in the Smithsonian Institution. In other words, it held substantially as argued by counsel, as follows:

First. In founding the Smithsonian Institution it was the intention of the Government to provide for an art gallery.

Second. Congress had always recognized the art gallery, and made constant provision therefor in the legislation from 1846 to the present day. The debates and records and journals of Congress will furnish abundant recognition on the part of the Government of the National Art Gallery.

Third. The Smithsonian Institution has developed its art collection from a potential National Art Gallery into an actual one, with many collections exceedingly large and valuable, including the Morse, Gatlin, King, Capron, etc., collections. It is constantly growing, receiving only recently the valuable Freer collection.

Now, in point of fact this accumulation of pictures and other objects, not only of art, but objects of curiosity and mineralogical specimens of various kinds, have all been stored to the best advantage possible in the Smithsonian Institution and in the National Museum, which was erected adjacent to the Smithsonian Institution. Now, however, Congress has provided for a new building, for the construction of a great National Museum, which will be finished in the coming year. The purpose is to take all of these collections, except the art collections, over to that new National Museum, and what the Smithsonian Institution now would like to have done would be to have the upper hall of the Smithsonian building, which was originally intended for an art gallery, so provided with skylights that all this accumulation of works of art may be gathered together into that one gallery. Mr. Walcott, the Secretary, stated before the committee as follows:

There is another item in the estimates for making certain alterations or adaptations in the Smithsonian building, $60,000. The Smithsonian building as originally planned was to have skylights over the central portion and to use that part of the building at least for fine art objects. With the completion of the new building, the natural history collections in the Smithsonian building and the present Museum building will be all transferred to the new building, making that a natural history museum; the old National Museum building will become a museum of industrial arts and the present Smithsonian building a museum of fine arts, so as to classify and separate the material and get it systematically arranged. This estimate of $60,000, as explained in submitting the estimate, is to adapt the central part of the Smithsonian building—that is, the upper portion, putting in skylights, certain partitions, and an elevator—it is quite inaccessible at the present time—and so arranging it that it can be used for art objects.

Now, the chairman said, "Could this work be deferred for a year without serious injury to the Institution?" And that brings me to this proposition, Mr. Chairman: The estimate for the National Museum for this year was $200,000. The Secretary of the Smithsonian said that for the present year they could get along with $50,000. That leaves $150,000 that must be provided for next year. Why not provide the $60,000 this year rather than provide $60,000 next year in addition to the $150,000 which will then have to be provided? Mr. Chairman, there has been an accumulation in this institution of pictures, works of art such as belong to an art gallery, to the value of $1,200,000. It does seem to me that a fair and just regard for the dignity of this Institution, for the welfare of the city of Washington, demands that this mere bagatelle, this little sum of $60,000, should be given, so as to put the Smithsonian building into the condition that was intended for it originally, and I do hope that the Committee on Appropriations, which has been fairly generous to the Smithsonian Institution in this appropriation bill—I do hope that that committee will not resist this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, it is important that we distinguish between the Smithsonian Institution acting as such in the execution of the Smithson trust and the Smithsonian Institution exercising special powers conferred upon it from time to time by Congress. This Institution was organized to administer the Smithson trust. The conferring of powers upon this Institution in the administration of that trust should constitute no basis for appropriations in the future from the Federal Treasury. From time to time after this Institution was created to administer the Smithson trust Congress, finding in this agency a valuable means for the transaction of certain governmental functions, has provided that they should be conducted under the Smithsonian Institution. Now, the provision that this Institution in the discharge of the Smithson trust shall or may do certain things does not constitute an authorization for an appropriation by Congress from the Treasury of the United States to carry out these objects. It does seem to me that the original act cited by the gentleman from Pennsylvania throws no light upon whether it would be in order to appropriate this money now.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman from Iowa whether or not in the original act any provision was made that at any time in the future the Smithsonian Institution should be used for the purpose of an art gallery, or any part thereof be set aside for that purpose?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman claims the language is broad enough for that purpose, but that was an authorization for the use of the Smithson trust fund, if it was an authorization at all, and not an authorization for the appropriation of money out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. To make myself clear, Mr. Chairman, I contend, first, that the organic act creating the Smithsonian Institution for the administration of this fund contemplated a national art gallery. I claim, in the second place, that the supreme court of the District of Columbia has decided, in a case in which that was the very question involved, that the art collection of the Smithsonian Institution did constitute the National Gallery of Art.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] kindly send the decision to which he refers to the Chair, and also the original statute?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It was in reply to that contention that I suggested that even if the language could be so construed, and even if the court held that it should be construed, that it was an authorization for the expenditure of the Smithson trust fund that would not be an authorization for the expenditure of money from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. DALZELL. I would say to the Chair that I have here an abstract from the Revised Statutes, which constitutes a part of the organic act. I find I have not the decree of the court, but I send to the Chair the argument in the case and say to him that the decree affirmed the claims set out in this argument.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Not only is it true that any authorization in the organic act was an authorization with reference to the use of the Smithson trust fund and not with reference to money in the Treasury of the United States, but the Smithsonian Institution building does not belong to the United States. It belongs to the Smithsonian Institution, the trustee of the Smithson trust fund. And there is no authority of law for appropriations from the Treasury of the United States for changes in or modifications of this building, which is a part of the Smithson trust fund as invested. There are no appropriations carried here in reality for the Smithsonian Institution at all. The appropriations that are carried are carried for the execution of certain governmental duties which have been intrusted to this Institution.

Mr. SULZER. What is now to prevent making a part of this building an art gallery? Is there anything in the law now to prevent that?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. SULZER. What is there now to prevent a part of this Smithsonian Institution being set aside, if so desired, for an art gallery?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that there is nothing that I know of to prevent it if the Smithsonian Institution sees fit to set it aside, but there is no authorization of law for Government money for the improvement of a building that does not belong to the Government of the United States and that we have got no right to control.

Mr. DALZELL. The Smithsonian Institution is undoubtedly a very unique one. It was incorporated in order to carry out the terms of the will of James Smithson, who left his money to the United States for an institution to be founded, the object of which was to be "the diffusion of knowledge among men." Now, while it is true that the United States is simply the trustee for the administration of that sum of money left by Mr. Smithson, the Smithsonian Institution is a United States institution. It is the agent by which the United States administers its trust. It is governed by a Board of Regents composed of fourteen members, three from the House, three from the Senate, the Vice-President, the Chief Justice of the United States, and six members chosen outside of Congress or the Government, but chosen by Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, are they made officers by statute, or is it under some other kind of provision?

Mr. DALZELL. They are made officers by the organic law—the statute. From time to time Congress has appropriated and does appropriate for these various branches under the Smithsonian Institution. The National Museum, for instance.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The National Museum is intrusted to the Smithsonian Institution to operate.

Mr. DALZELL. Under the organic law it is provided that this art gallery is intrusted to the Smithsonian Institution. As I say, during all these years it has accumulated pictures amounting in value to $1,200,000. The Smithsonian Institution has a building which the gentleman says does not belong to the Government of the United States. It is aided by the funds of the United States from time to time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] as to whether or not the Government of the United States in years gone by has been appropriating money for the Smithsonian Institution?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It has not. I deny that it has been appropriating money for the Smithsonian Institution.

The CHAIRMAN. At any time?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. At any time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES]?

Mr. DALZELL. Will the Chair look at pages 17, 18, and 19 of the appropriation bill that is before him? Under the heading of "Under Smithsonian Institution" all of these various arms are referred to.

Mr. MANN. May I make a suggestion right there?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question, because I feel interested somewhat in the way he is. I have a good many requests asking me for the report of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. DALZELL. The report of the Smithsonian Institution is paid for and the publication is paid for out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why, of course it is,

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a rather late day to claim that the Smithsonian Institution is not dependent upon the United States Congress every day for its support and maintenance.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, like my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, I have the honor to be one of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, but I can not quite agree with him as to the parliamentary status of the amendment. The Smithsonian Institution, as organized by the act of 1846, and by some subsequent legislation, is controlled by a Board of Regents. It expends its own money for its own purposes. Now, the act of Congress provided that the fund of Mr. Smithson was to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States and draw, I believe, 5 per cent interest up to $1,000,000. It may have been 6 per cent, I am not sure.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Six per cent.

Mr. MANN. So that it has a fund in the Treasury of a little less than $1,000,000 upon which it draws interest and owns some property bearing interest in addition to this fund. The Smithsonian Institution as an institution confines its expenditures to its own money. It expends no funds of the Government and controls none.

The CHAIRMAN. What fund was the building erected from?

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, it was constructed out of the funds.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It was constructed out of the interest.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, it was constructed out of the Smithson fund. It is maintained out of the Smithson fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is the principal point in this question—as to whether this building as originated was provided or builded out of a fund for that purpose, the funds of a private institution, or whether it was furnished by the Government; whether, in other words, it is a public building.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me, I will read the act of 1846, approved August 10:

> The fund arising from the bequest of said Smithson, amounting to $515,169, authorized to be loaned to the United States Treasury, at 6 per cent per annum interest, from September 1, 1838, when the same was received into the Treasury; so much of the accrued interest to July 1, 1847, amounting to $242,129, or so much thereof as the Board of Regents deem necessary, appropriated for the erection of suitable buildings and for other current incidental expenses; and the 6 per cent interest on the said trust fund ($515,169) appropriated to be paid in half-yearly payments, on the 1st of January and the 1st of July in each year, for the perpetual maintenance and support of said Institution.

So that amount, $242,129 of interest received from this fund, was diverted to the construction of the building.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. PARSONS. Does the Government now pay 6 per cent interest on that Smithson fund?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Up to a million dollars.

Mr. PARSONS. Then, is not that in effect an appropriation to the Smithsonian Institution far in excess of the cost?

Mr. TAWNEY. This was the contract entered into by the Government with those in charge of the Smithson fund. Under the act of 1846, approved August 10, $242,129 of the $515,169 of interest was appropriated for this building.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to say, even after the reading of the appropriation, whether the building was constructed out of the fund of the Smithsonian Institution or out of a donation made by the Government. The building is maintained, as I understand it, out of the Smithsonian fund, and I had always supposed was constructed out of that fund. The fact that the appropriation bill and the current appropriation law carries other items for the Smithsonian Institution has nothing to do with the question, as I undersand it, of the Smithsonian Institution funds themselves. The accounts are kept separate. The accounts of the Smithsonian Institution are not audited by the Department in Washington, while the appropriations are audited by the Government officials.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That building is of stone, and constructed upon land belonging to the United States, and is a fixture. Is not the title to the building in the United States?

Mr. MANN. I am surprised that the gentleman does not know the difference between red brick and stone.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I thought it was stone.

Mr. MANN. No; it is very noticeable that it is brick.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is not movable?

Mr. MANN. I hope it is not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is a permanent fixture, on land belonging to the United States.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I was mistaken as to the material out of which it is built. It is brownstone.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois where the title to that building is, it being constructed on land belonging to the United States?

Mr. MANN. The title to the building is, I take it, in the Smithsonian Institution. The Smithsonian Institution has absolute control of the building under a contract with the Government.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It might have control of it, but not have the title.

Mr. MANN. I do not know where the title to the real estate is. The title to the building is in the Smithsonian Institution, I suppose.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not see how it could have got there. The Government is the administrator of the trust, under the will of Mr. Smithson, and the means by which the Government administers the trust is the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the will of Mr. Smithson provided that Congress should by law, which was enacted, provide for its disposition, and that became a contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that section 5588 undoubtedly determines that proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It puts the title in the Smithsonian Institution.

The CHAIRMAN. It says:

> The site and lands selected for buildings for the Smithsonian Institution shall be deemed appropriated to the institution, and the record of the description of such site and lands, or a copy thereof, certified by the chancellor and secretary of the Board of Regents, shall be received as evidence in all courts of the extent and boundaries of the lands appropriated to the institution.

So that the title is evidently in the institution.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that, Mr. Chairman, because the Smithsonian Institution is treated at the meetings of the Board of Regents as entirely separate from the organizations which are placed under the control of the Smithsonian Institution by the appropriations of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to section 5590 of the Revised Statutes, which expressly covers the point at issue. The Chair will find it on page 1080. Section 5590 reads as follows:

> So much of the property of James Smithson as has been received in money and paid into the Treasury of the United States, being the sum of $541,379.63, shall be lent to the United States Treasury, at 6 per cent per annum interest; and 6 per cent interest on the trust fund and residuary legacy received into the United States Treasury, payable in half-yearly payments, on the 1st of January and July in each year, is hereby appropriated for the perpetual maintenance and support of the Smithsonian Institution; and all expenditures and appropriations to be made, from time to time, to the purposes of the institution shall be exclusively from the accruing interest, and not from the principal of the fund.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from New York will permit me, I have here the testimony taken before the Committee on Appropriations two years ago, when this subject was under consideration before the committee. I read from the statement of Mr. Adler. Mr. Sullivan, who was then a Member of Congress from Massachusetts, said:

Let me ask a question about the $515,000. How long was it allowed to accumulate without any expenditure being made?

Mr. ADLER. The fund actually came into the possession of the United States in 1838, and the expenditures, except for legal expenses which were authorized by Congress, did not begin until 1846.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Then there were accumulations for eleven years before any expenditures were made?

Mr. ADLER. And the accumulated fund was added to the original fund.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Have the expenditures from the fund been constant ever since?

Mr. ADLER. Oh, yes; except that there were savings, which went into the brownstone building which was built out of the income.

That is the statement of the gentleman who was, I believe, the acting secretary in charge of the Smithsonian Institution two years ago.

Mr. SHERLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not; but I desire to speak to the merits. I understood the point of order was reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I just stated, I shall not attempt to discuss the question whether the amendment is in order, but will speak to its merits. I am heartily in favor of such an undertaking and such legislation. I believe that we should establish in Washington a national art gallery, properly house it, and properly care for it, and I hope that the time will come in America when our artistic instinct will be sufficiently developed to cause the repeal of the duty that now exists upon paintings and objects of art. [Applause on the Democratic side.] To my mind there has never been a more absurd extension of the protective principle than the extending of it to works of art. There is to-day a duty of 20 per cent upon oil paintings, statuary, and other works of art. Now, there can be no possible excuse for such a law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me to correct him, it is only 15 per cent, and it only applies to private collections. If they were owned by the Government, they would come in free.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken, I think. The tariff act reads:

Painting in oils or water colors, pastels, pen-and-ink drawings, statuary not specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is that the Dingley bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the Dingley bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think there has been an amendment since, because the present law, I am quite sure, is only 15 per cent.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, Mr. Chairman, whether there be an amendment that would permit the Government to bring in works of art free or not, there ought to be absolutely no restrictions upon any citizen bringing in such objects of art. No artist who has the slightest claim to consideration needs legislation to protect his genius, and no amount of legislation can ever protect a man against competition of brain. Not only is that true——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me suggest to the gentleman that most of the great galleries are provided for by donations from private individuals who first buy and then by will give to public collections, or donate them during their lifetime.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is true. As I was saying, there can be no justification for this law on the ground of protecting the American artist. No American artist worthy of the name has ever asked for such protection. There can be no justification of it on the ground that you are taxing a luxury, because art is not a luxury and should never be treated as such.

I want to see it possible to bring from all parts of the world objects of art, great paintings, those that represent the work of the old masters, as well as those of the modern school, and see them housed, as far as possible, in one great museum of art, and I want to see that museum of art open to the public—and while I am speaking of that I would like to add that I hope when that happens that that museum will be open on Sundays as well as on week days, that the poor of the city of Washington, that the people who work and labor through the week, may have an opportunity to view it. When that is done, we will find an improvement in the public taste of America, we will find a development of national character, of national art, that will ten times over justify any expenditure that may be necessary. I for one would like to see the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania prevail. If it is not in order, I would like to see the point not made in order that legislation may be had. I join in the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and trust that the chairman of the committee will not feel it necessary to insist on his point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the point of order. The Smithsonian Institution is an institution chartered under an act of Congress for a specific purpose. The charter of the Institution is found in the Revised Statutes, sections 5579 to 5594. The provisions of the statute set forth the character of the governing body, the manner in which its members shall be selected, and certain restrictions upon their power. In order that there might be no question as to where the title to the property rested, the charter specifically prescribes that the land selected for the building shall be deemed the property of the Institution. The land was donated by the Government to the Institution, and the Institution erected the building out of its endowment.

It is no more a public work in the meaning of the rule than the Columbian Hospital in the city of Washington, under the charter of which Congress is entitled to representation in its board of directors; and in addition to the Columbian Hospital there are several other institutions under whose peculiar charters Congress is entitled to have representation on the governing boards. This is a corporation created by Congress for the purpose of carrying out a specific work. The title to the land is not in the United States. By the act incorporating the Institution it has been vested in the Institution itself. Even if the Congress has appropriated money to erect buildings upon land in the possession of and belonging to the Institution, under the well-recognized rules of law the buildings belong to the Institution which has title to the land.

If the reasoning that is urged were to be followed, then every time Congress incorporated any kind of an institution with a quasi public function it would be in order, under the rules, to appropriate money to improve buildings erected thereon, either erected originally by the Government and donated, or erected out of funds belonging to the particular institution. This act discloses that the United States, in order to make effective the provisions of James Smithson's will, incorporated an institution theretofore unknown and took various safeguards to protect the endowment of the Institution. I submit, however, that the Institution can not in any sense be considered as a part of the Government or its endowment or buildings part of the Government property.

Mr. PARSONS. How, then, does the gentleman explain the decision of the court in the case referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], to the effect that the Smithsonian Institution is a national gallery of art?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was not present when the gentleman referred to that decision.

Mr. DALZELL. Mrs. Harriet Lane Johnston by her will provided that her art collection should go to the National Gallery of Art, if it were established in Washington. The executors and the United States and the Smithsonian Institution, all parties to a suit in, I think, the supreme court of the District, but I am not certain as to the title of the court, raised the direct question——

Mr. PARSONS. Was the United States a party?

Mr. DALZELL. I think so—raised the direct question of whether or not the Smithsonian Institution or the National Gallery of Art in the Smithsonian Institution was entitled to take these pictures under the will. The court decided that it was, and decided it was established by the act of 1846, the organic act, which I have read to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. There seems to be a confusion of terms. What does the gentleman from Pennsylvania understand by the National Gallery of Art—the buildings or the collection of art?

Mr. DALZELL. I mean the collection of art.

The CHAIRMAN. Separate and apart from any building? Then it is a national collection of art in the view of the gentleman.

Mr. DALZELL. No; it is not a national collection of art, separate and apart from any connection with the Smithsonian Institution, because it has been gathered by the Smithsonian Institution and given to the Smithsonian Institution by reason of the mandate of the organic act, which authorized the Smithsonian Institution to take just such things, and the Chair will recollect that when the United States accepted this trust and created the Smithsonian Institution as its agent to administer the trust, the very first act that it did was to appropriate to the Smithsonian Institution for the purpose of the trust the very valuable ground on which the building is erected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman, I desire to call his attention to the language of section 5586 of the Revised Statutes. The question that was raised in the case referred to by the gentleman, I suppose, was whether a certain institution already in existence would be entitled to receive an art collection under a name designated, but not in common use by the institution. At the time the case arose there was only one institution in Washington——

Mr. MANN. There was no such question about the name in that case. The term "National Gallery of Art" is a new term wholly, just coined.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am using the expression used by the gentleman—whether this institution in Washington, the only existing institution that would in any way come within the terms of the will, was the institution that could receive the collection. Section 5586 of the Revised Statutes, which is part of the charter of the Smithsonian Institution, is as follows:

SEC. 5586. Whenever suitable arrangements can be made from time to time for their reception, all objects of art and of foreign and curious research, and all objects of natural history, plants, and geological and mineralogical specimens, belonging to the United States, which may be in the city of Washington, in whosesoever custody they may be, shall be delivered to such persons as may be authorized by the Board of Regents to receive them, and shall be so arranged and classified in the building erected for the Institution as best to facilitate the examination and study of them; and whenever new specimens in natural history, geology, or mineralogy are obtained for the Museum of the Institution, by exchanges of duplicate specimens, which the regents may in their discretion make, or by donation, which they may receive, or otherwise, the Regents shall cause such new specimens to be appropriately classed and arranged. The minerals, books, manuscripts, and other property of James Smithson, which have been received by the Government of the United States, shall be preserved separate and apart from other property of the Institution.

While I have not read the case, I have no doubt the question arose whether under this charter this particular institution was the institution intended in the will, and whether under this provision of its charter it had the power to accept such a collection. It would not in any way, however, decide that the Smithsonian Institution was a part of the United States or that its possessions were part of the property of the United States.

Mr. DALZELL. The Smithsonian fund was not given to the Smithsonian Institution; the Smithsonian fund was given to the United States and belongs to the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Only as trustee.

Mr. DALZELL. It was certainly given to the United States for a particular purpose, and it belongs to the United States. The Smithsonian Institution is only the agent created by the United States to administer the fund.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was given to the United States upon the express condition that an institution should be established at Washington for the diffusion of knowledge. Let me read from the preamble. Title 73, Revised Statutes, which is the charter of the Smithsonian Institution, says—this is the preamble of the will which is incorporated into the statutes:

James Smithson, esq., London, in the Kingdom of Great Britain, having by his last will and testament given the whole of his property to the United States to found at Washington, under the name of the "Smithsonian Institution," an establishment for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men.

It was given upon an express trust, and the United States, by enacting this charter and establishing the Institution, has carried out the trust.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Suppose the Smithsonian Institution should erect a new building in a new location and move the collections into it. Then would the land on which the new buildings were erected belong to the Smithsonian Institution; and if so, where would the title to the old land belong?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, this act provides that the land selected for the buildings——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Exactly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That that land originally belonging to the Government shall be deemed appropriated to the Institution. Now, let me suggest this to the gentleman. If any corporation bought land and put up a building on it, to whom does the gentleman think the building and the land would belong?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No; but the point is this, whether it has absolute title to the present location, or a title not absolute, one which it could not convey if the Institution were to erect a new building elsewhere.

Mr. PARSONS. But——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from New York will permit me to suggest that in declaring that certain land shall be deemed to be "appropriated," this law does not use the language ordinarily employed in conveying title in fee, not at all. If this "appropriation" of land conveyed an absolute title in fee to the Smithsonian Institution, that is one thing. But if the language means only that the land is appropriated to the Institution for the purpose of the Institution, together with the exclusive right to possess and control it while used for such purpose, that is another thing. If a new building should be constructed for the Institution, a larger and better one, then the title to the site on which the new building might be constructed would under this statute be "appropriated" to the Institution, would it not? But would the Institution still continue to hold the title in fee to the old site?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it would under the act; I think it would. I have read the statute, and I believe it would. Now, I do not know what——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not think that is the intent of the statute. I think by using the word "appropriate" it appropriated the site to the Institution for the purposes of the Institution so long as the land should be so used, but did not give it the absolute fee to sell or dispose of if the Institution should move to a new place. Unless the fee is given it is not the absolute owner, and the United States has still an interest in the title.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is satisfied on this point.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, before ruling I wish to make one statement, not especially on the point of order, but in answer to the criticism of the gentleman from Pennsylvania against the committee for not having incorporated this estimate in this bill. The proposition is to appropriate money from the Treasury of the United States for a practical remodeling of a building that does not belong to the United States, for the purpose of converting that building into a national gallery of art. Now, there may be sufficient space in this building to accommodate all of the gifts which the Smithsonian Institution receives or has received. This remodeled building may be used for the purpose intended without destroying the architectural symmetry of the building or its usefulness for the purposes for which it was originally constructed; but in any event, the building belonging to the Smithsonian Institution exclusively and not to the United States, the committee did not feel warranted in making an appropriation for the remodeling of the building for a national gallery of art. The committee would much rather have appropriated a sufficient amount of money, if it is deemed wise to have the gallery of arts for that specific purpose, allowing it to be owned and controlled by the Government of the United States as it may see fit. But further than that, one of the branches of the Smithsonian Institution, the National Museum, is in a state of transition. That branch will soon be moved from the old National Museum over to the new building, and whether or not they will be able to vacate enough space in the Smithsonian building to accommodate the National Gallery of Arts, if it is decided by the Smithsonian to locate it there, is not yet known definitely, and can not be known until the National Museum is completed and the various departments in the Smithsonian building that belongs to the National Museum have been moved over into the new building. Now, in view of these facts the committee felt there was a practical objection to our giving favorable consideration to this proposition at this time.

The statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is that, in view of the fact that we have appropriated $180,000 less for furnishing the new National Museum than was asked for by the officers of the Smithsonian Institution, therefore we ought to have been more liberal and we ought to have allowed this $60,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, the reduction in that estimate was made with the consent of the officers of the Smithsonian Institution themselves. They conceded it was possible for them to determine how much they would need to furnish the National Museum until they had occupied it or were about ready to occupy it, and that much of the furniture would have to be made specially for it, and with $20,000 they could get along very well. By next fall they would know more definitely how much was needed for that purpose. So there is nothing in the statement that because they reduced their estimate to that extent for furnishing the National Museum they ought to have the $60,000 for this National Gallery of Arts.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman contend that this institution is not a public institution? Is that the point of his contention? If it is, I want to ask him a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. The building belongs to the Smithsonian Institution, which is a corporation created by an act of Congress. I will let the gentleman from Tennessee determine for himself whether it is a private institution or a public institution. It is not an institution, however, that belongs to the United States. The building was constructed out of the trust fund given to the United States for this specific trust.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, the President—not Mr. Roosevelt, nor Mr. McKinley, nor Mr. Cleveland, nor, if you please, Mr. Taft or Mr. Bryan, should either of the latter two be President—but the President is one of the officers by the statute. Now, can the President of the United States administer a private establishment as President?

Mr. MANN. The President is merely an honorary officer and has nothing to do with the conduct of its business.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Vice-President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and so forth——

Mr. MANN. They are not members of the Board of Regents that control the Institution.

Mr. TAWNEY. The control of the Institution is under the Board of Regents, and I have uever before heard anyone claim that the President had anything whatever to do with the practical management of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I may be able to help elucidate the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the proposition.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I simply want to say this: That I contend it is a public institution and that Congress administers it; that everything must be reported, by the very words of the law, to Congress. The very last paragraph of the act requires that the President, as President, and the various other officers that I have named, as such officers, are officers to administer the corporation, and that the President, as President, and those officers, as officers, can not administer a private trust, and therefore it is a public institution and contemplated by Congress as being a public institution. Now, the gentleman said just now that the President had nothing to do with it. Let us see. Section 5585 reads:

SEC. 5585. The members and honorary members of the Institution may hold stated and special meetings, for the supervision of the affairs of the Institution and the advice and instruction of the Board of Regents, to be called in the manner provided for in the by-laws of the Institution, at which the President, and in his absence the Vice-President, shall preside.

Now, then, another section, section 5579——

Mr. MANN. The section which the gentleman reads refers to them as honorary members.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Section 5579 distinctly states:

SEC. 5579. The President, the Vice-President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Postmaster-General, the Attorney-General, the Chief Justice, the Commissioner of the Patent Office, and the governor of the District of Columbia, and such other persons as they may elect honorary members, are hereby constituted an establishment, by the name of the "Smithsonian Institution," for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men; and by that name shall be known and have perpetual succession, with the powers, limitations, and restrictions hereinafter contained, and no other.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when President McKinley was President he was an officer; when Mr. Roosevelt became President he became an officer; and when his successor becomes President he will become one of the officers. Now, how in the world can the President of the United States, as President, be one of the officers of a private institution? His powers are defined by the Constitution, except such as are given him by law of Congress. Congress has made him an officer. Has Congress the power to make the President, as such, an officer of a private institution?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is as follows:

Insert after line 4, page 19:
"Gallery of Arts: For the adaption of the Smithsonian Institution building for the purposes of an art gallery."

The Chair thinks the amendment is subject to the point of order. Whether the Smithsonian Institution be a public institution, a private institution, or a quasi-public institution, it is quite sure that neither the building of the Smithsonian Institute nor the ground on which that building rests belongs to or is the property of the United States. It is quite true that this is an institution authorized by the United States, and by acts of Congress, but that does not make it a Government building or a Government project. It is also true that section 5586 of the organic act recites:

Whenever suitable arrangements can be made for their reception, all objects of art—

And other things mentioned—

shall be delivered to such persons as may be authorized by the Board of Regents to receive them, and shall be so arranged and classified in the building erected for the Institution as best to facilitate the examination and study of them.

That refers, not to the building, but to the collection of art. Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to change the building. The Chair thinks that it is not "a work in progress," and therefore is subject to the point of order.

It is quite true that the supreme court of this District rendered a decision, which the Chair has not had an opportunity to examine fully, but from a cursory examination it appears that this decision has reference to the National Art Gallery, or collection of art, and not to the building itself. The court finds:

First. In founding the Smithsonian Institution it was the intention of the Government to provide for an art gallery.

The Government might provide for an art gallery and yet not provide for a building in which to place the art gallery.

Second. Congress has always recognized the art gallery and made constant provision therefor in the legislation from 1846 to the present day. The debates and journals and records of Congress will furnish abundant recognition on the part of the Government of the National Art Gallery.

The Chair has no doubt on the proposition that that does not refer to the building, but to the art gallery. It is quite separate and apart from the building or grounds. The same may be said of the other point made in this decision. The Chair thinks this is a proposition to change a building which does not belong to the Government, and is not, therefore, "a work in progress," and is subject to the point of order. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. POLLARD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 16268) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6600. An act authorizing the St. Louis, Brownsville and Mexico Railway Company to construct bridges across the Rio Grande at some point at or near the town of Brownsville, in Cameron County, Tex.;

S. 6572. An act to authorize the Ruston, Natchitoches and Northeastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across Bayou D'Arbonne, in Louisiana;

S. 6540. An act to authorize the Copper River Railway Company to construct two bridges across the Copper River, in the district of Alaska;

S. 6487. An act to govern seagoing barges;

S. 6458. An act to authorize the Yellowstone Valley Steel Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River in Montana; and

S. 2932. An act providing for the appointment of an assistant treasurer of the United States at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 2932. An act providing for the appointment of an assistant treasurer of the United States at the city of Seattle, in the State of Washington—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

S. 6458. An act to authorize the Yellowstone Valley Steel Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River in Montana—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 6487. An act to govern seagoing barges—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 6572. An act to authorize the Ruston, Natchitoches and Northeastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across Bayou D'Arbonne, in Louisiana—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

To further enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce compliance with section 20 of the act to regulate commerce, as amended by the act approved June 29, 1906, including the employment of necessary special agents or examiners, $50,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire at this place to offer an amendment by inserting, at the end of line 9, just before the word "fifty," the words "three hundred and," making it read "three hundred and fifty thousand."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask that this paragraph, with the amendment pending, may be passed for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 20, line 9, before the word "fifty," insert the words "three hundred and," so that it will read "$350,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I would ask the gentleman to let this amendment, with the paragraph, go over, as several gentlemen take an interest in it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph may be passed until I can present to the committee proof sufficient to show that it was not properly informed of the wants of the Department in reference to this matter when the committee itself reported on it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will allow it to pass, but I do not think the gentleman can present anything to the committee which will change the judgment of the committee, because some of the committee have considered the matter fully. When does the gentleman want to take it up?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Preferably at the conclusion of the bill, but not earlier than to-morrow.

Mr. TAWNEY. I can not do that. I will agree that it be taken up to-morrow morning. I am prepared for the committee to present the reason for the recommendation the committee has made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I want to state to the chairman, what he may undoubtedly know, this is the provision to which the President calls attention in his message. I have talked with the gentleman who is in charge of this work this morning, and have asked him to prepare for us a statement which I might present to-morrow morning, and I would not like to have it taken up until the House has it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why did not the gentleman that the gentleman refers to prepare a statement for the information of the committee? Why did he not give the committee the complete information that it is entitled to in the preparation of this item?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will state to the gentleman that the explanation the one in charge made to me was that the Commission failed to fully present the matter to the Committee on Appropriations when the statements were made, and they probably assumed—I do not know whether there was any information before the committee or not—they assumed that the committee had full information, and that there would be a proper allowance for this special work provided for under section 20 of the act of 1906.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me ask the gentleman this question: When this gentleman stated that he thought there should be a proper allowance, did he believe that his judgment or the judgment of the committee and the House should control? In other words, which is proper, his judgment or our judgment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suppose he assumed that the usual course would be followed, and that the committee would rely to some extent at least on the judgment of gentlemen who had these matters specially in charge.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that so far as I am concerned, relying upon the information furnished to the committee, I have grave doubt as to the propriety of allowing even $55,000 for this purpose.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield? Is it the gentleman's point that the need of this money was not sufficiently presented to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the point.

Mr. SHERLEY. In that connection does the gentleman know what evidence the committee had before it?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not, and that is why I am asking time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman think it is rather unusual to state that the committee did not have sufficient information, when the gentleman has not read the hearings before the committee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I make that statement on the authority of the gentlemen who came before the committee, who stated to me that they had not presented their needs with sufficient fullness.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that they had ample opportunity, and took advantage of the opportunity to talk at great length in regard to the matter, as the hearings will disclose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There was no reflection on the committee. The reflection was on themselves.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman who made the statement was not a member of the commission.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I know that; but he was the gentleman whom the commission has relied upon to do this work.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. His superiors were before the committee, and testified fully on the subject.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not informed as to that. I am referring now to the publicity clause.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan and to the members of the committee that we will let this matter go over until we go into the Committee of the Whole to-morrow morning; but that the whole question involved here is one of policy, whether you are going to embark upon the policy of a general audit system for all the railroad companies of the United States, or whether you will adopt the other policy, the one recommended by the committee, of providing for them a sufficient force to make such examinations as are necessary for the purpose of determining whether or not the law is being complied with.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I shall be very glad to discuss the question with the gentleman before the House as to what the intention of this Congress was in the passage of section 20 of the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say that before adopting the policy we did, some of the principal members (with the exception of the gentleman from Michigan) of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce were conferred with and consulted as to what was the real intent of that act in respect to this subject. I ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand the gentleman from Michigan to ask unanimous consent that this go over.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the gentleman from Michigan to ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed until the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole to-morrow morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that lines 5 to 10, inclusive, on page 20, be passed without prejudice until to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to say that if the time is fixed definitely I shall have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Until to-morrow morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Immediately after the reading of the Journal?

Mr. TAWNEY. Immediately after we go into Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to keep informed regarding compliance with the "Act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads," approved March 2, 1893, and to execute and enforce the requirements of the said act, including the employment of inspectors, $100,000. Hereafter all inspectors employed for the enforcement of said act shall also be required to make examination of the construction, adaptability, design, and condition of all mail cars used on any railroad in the United States and make report thereon, a copy of which report shall be transmitted to the Postmaster-General.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new paragraph after line 2, page 21, as follows:

"Hereafter the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be, and is hereby, authorized, at its discretion, to investigate, test experimentally, and report on the use and need of any appliances or systems intended to promote the safety of railway operation which may be furnished in completed shape to such Commission for such investigation and test entirely free of cost to the Government. For this purpose the Commission is authorized to employ persons familiar with the subject to be investigated and tested, and may also make use of its regular employees for such purpose."

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman if the only material difference between that and the item in the bill is the authority to employ others for making the inspection?

Mr. MANN. As I read the provision in the bill—I suppose it was inadvertence in the preparation of it—it does not confer any authority at all. This is the situation: Under the general resolution that was passed a year or so ago, and under the provision of last year, the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to make investigation of the block-signal system and automatic appliances for the control of railway trains; and a number of different propositions have been presented to the Commission for investigation which did not come within the terms of that resolution and that appropriation. They desire, and I think the country desires, that they shall have the power where the appliance or scheme is presented to them free of cost to make an investigation of it if it relates to a safety device in any way whatever.

This amendment provides that these schemes for appliances shall be presented to the Commission free of cost to the Government, which would not be covered by the amendment in the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. What is the object of the examination that is to be made?

Mr. MANN. The object would be to report to Congress, I suppose, and I suppose, also, to pass upon the advisability or practicability of the various devices or appliances.

Mr. PERKINS. With a view to legislation or advertising the value of the device to be purchased by the railroad?

Mr. MANN. Both with a view to legislation and with a view to making a recommendation which might be acted upon by the railroads. It is perfectly patent that all the railroads of the country can not make experiments individually of all of the specific appliances which may be presented to them.

Mr. PERKINS. You give the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to make the investigations, but it has to be made on some railroad.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly; in the same way they are now making experiments. They obtain permission of the railroad to make the experiment on that railroad.

Mr. PERKINS. And this would be free of all cost to the Government?

Mr. MANN. Free of all cost to the Government except for the Government officials who may watch the experiment.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ESCH. Under a resolution adopted in the last Congress $50,000 was appropriated for the use of this train-control board. How much of that sum is still available?

Mr. MANN. I understand that the most of it is still available.

Mr. ESCH. Would your amendment cause additional expense to be paid out on that appropriation?

Mr. MANN. I propose to offer an amendment to the next paragraph, if this goes in, authorizing that fund to be used for both purposes.

Mr. ESCH. So your amendment will not entail any additional expenditure?

Mr. MANN. It will, but not any additional appropriation.

Mr. ESCH. That is what I mean.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether his amendment is a substitute of what is in the bill or an additional paragraph?

Mr. MANN. It is put in as an additional paragraph, but I shall offer another amendment striking out that provision in the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment may be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate in regard to the use and necessity for block-signal systems and appliances for the automatic control of railway trains, also any other mechanical appliances intended to promote the safety of railway operation, including experimental tests, at the discretion of the Commission, of such of said signal systems and appliances only as may be furnished in connection with such investigation free of cost to the Government, in accordance with the provisions of the joint resolution approved June 30, 1906, is hereby reappropriated and made available for expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "nine," line 15, page 21, the following: "For the purposes named in this and the preceding paragraph."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that would make the reappropriation of this money available for both of these purposes. Now, I would suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that he have inserted in the item in the paragraph commencing with line 6 these words:

Also any other mechanical appliances intended to promote the safety of railway operations.

As it reads, that is a mere description of an appropriation heretofore made, and in view of the fact that we have covered that in the paragraph, would it not be advisable also to strike that out? There are no appropriations already made for that purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. No. I think that would be true, if the gentleman is certain that his language provides for that additional authority to the Commission to investigate.

Mr. MANN. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then I would suggest the striking of it out.

Mr. MANN. The question would be on this amendment first.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; if this amendment is adopted, then it should be further amended by striking that out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Then I propose a further amendment, Mr. Chairman, in line 6, to strike out the language to which I referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, lines 6, 7, and 8, strike out the following words:
"Also any other mechanical appliances intended to promote the safety of railway operations."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, my information is, in a general way, that there are more accidents now than possibly in previous years. Is it a fact, and if it is a fact, why is it so, since we have been doing all that it seems we have been able to do heretofore to prevent accidents? I have asked the question quite often, and I want to get some information on the subject.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that on some lines there has been an increase in railway accidents. The gentleman will understand that more than half of the accidents which occur and are reported are accidents to trespassers. Of course there are very few devices which we now have which will do away with these accidents except as we do away with grade crossings. Undoubtedly, also, while the safety air brakes have added vastly to the safety of travel, they have, to a certain extent, added to the danger of making up trains in yards, because those air brakes have to be coupled in addition to the coupling of the trains. Undoubtedly there are many things of that sort. I think, myself, on the whole, and I made quite an exhaustive report on the subject of the resolution a year or so ago in reference to accidents, that any increase is really owing to the increase in traffic. The gentleman will readily see that on a single-track road, when its business increases 50 per cent the danger increases more than 50 per cent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, the gentleman's information is that there are more accidents, even to the railroad employees with these devices than heretofore?

Mr. MANN. Oh, the number, of course, is undoubtedly greater.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can the gentleman tell me how much it costs to run the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. MANN. I can not tell you. I think about $750,000 a year.

Mr. MACON. I think it is right here, Mr. Chairman—$935,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much has it increased under what is known as the "Hepburn law?"

Mr. MANN. That is a question which, if the gentleman is here to-morrow morning after we go into Committee of the Whole, he will probably hear discussed under the Townsend amendment. The Townsend amendment proposes to increase one item from $50,000 to $350,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In connection with the question of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to a report which appears in to-day's New York Sun, to the effect that the New Hampshire railway commission blames a railway wreck upon the Hepburn law—that is, the law prohibiting railway telegraphers from working more than a certain number of hours a day.

Mr. MANN. That is not in the Hepburn law, I may say to the distinguished gentleman from New York. That was a separate act passed in the last Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that. It is referred to as the Hepburn law. I forget who the author of the act was.

Mr. MANN. The original author was Mr. Murphy of Missouri.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This states that a railway commission in the State of New Hampshire attributes an accident to the fact that Congress passed a very necessary and beneficial act to prevent the employment of railway telegraphers for more than a certain number of hours.

Now, has the gentleman from Illinois any suspicion that the report can be accurate?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I suppose it might be at some place they only had one telegraph operator where before they had two——

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; here they say they had three instead of two.

Mr. MANN. It would be a great draft upon the imagination to make anyone think that to make men work eight hours a day was harder on them than it was to work twelve hours a day, and yet that would be true of the gentleman from New York and possibly true of myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to refund money covered into Treasury as internal-revenue collections which under authority of law have heretofore been refunded or returned, $30,000.

For miscellaneous expenses, internal-revenue service, additional to the sum appropriated therefor in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1909, $15,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the paragraph just preceding the one which the Clerk has just read. My attention was not called to it at the moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, in line 3, strike out the word "have" and insert in lieu thereof the word "has."

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a mere verbal correction.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Punishment for violations of internal-revenue laws: For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations, $125,000; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make a detailed statement to Congress once in each year as to how he has expended this sum, and also a detailed statement of all miscellaneous expenditures in the Bureau of Internal Revenue for which appropriation is made in this act: Provided, That necessary books of reference and periodicals for the chemical laboratory and law library, at a cost not to exceed $500, may be purchased out of the appropriation made for the fiscal year 1909 for salaries and expenses of agents and surveyors, fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries of storekeepers, and for miscellaneous expenses.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have the following amendment to offer, and that is to strike out the proviso in this paragraph. In offering that amendment, I will state that this proviso was carried last year in the sundry civil bill. It belongs properly in the legislative bill and it has been so transferred and is now carried in that bill and was reprinted here by mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 21 to 25, inclusive, on page 22 and lines 1 and 2 on page 23.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of fractional silver coin: For transportation of fractional silver coin, by registered mail or otherwise, $60,000; and in expending this sum the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to transport from the Treasury or subtreasuries, free of charge, fractional silver coin when requested to do so: Provided, That an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury or such subtreasuries by the applicant or applicants. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress the cost arising under this appropriation.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to this paragraph, to strike out the word "fractional," in line 3, the word "fractional," in line 4, and the word "fractional," in line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, lines 3, 4, and 8, strike out in each line the word "fractional."

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against the proposed amendment on the ground that it is not authorized by existing law and changes existing law.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, that is the most curious point of order I have ever heard.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I am not to blame because it is curious to the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman's suggestion is that we can not strike anything from the bill because it would change existing law; that is the point, because we might strike out the whole paragraph. This question has been put in other forms before——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order for a moment, if the Chair will permit. As a matter of fact, the operation of striking out "fractional" is to authorize the transportation of standard silver dollars, and consequently, while the gentleman states he is striking out something, he is in fact including something. Now, the operation of it is this. There is no general law authorizing the transportation of standard silver dollars. From time to time through a number of years appropriations were made authorizing that transportation to be made within the limits of the appropriation. The appropriation made in the bill of last year has been exhausted and the transportation of standard silver dollars has wholly ceased. There is no appropriation, there is no current law upon the subject, because the appropriation has been exhausted and the Treasury Department some weeks since issued an order refusing to circulate standard silver dollars at Government expense. Therefore, to strike out the word "fractional" is to reinitiate the transportation of the standard silver dollars, there being no law authorizing their free transportation now extant.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is there any law authorizing the transportation of fractional silver coin?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. There is no law, but no point of order was made on this paragraph. Now, the proposition is not to move an amendment germane to the subject-matter, but an amendment to strike out words bringing an entirely new subject-matter into the section.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; my amendment will be for the purpose of making a good proposition a much better one; that is the purpose of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman a few moments ago said he was opposed to this proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], and that it was an express company steal.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am going to offer an amendment right here to create competition between the express companies, and the carrying of some of this coin by mail.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I suggest there is no provision of law for the transportation of standard silver dollars. When the appropriation is exhausted, and the authorization ceases, there is not any authority to appropriate money for the transportation of these standard silver dollars. I am not discussing the question now as to what would be the status of this amendment if there was a current appropriation, and for the time being an authorization to carry these standard silver dollars, but I insist when there is no law authorizing their transportation at Government expense, and whatever law has ever existed upon that subject was limited by the appropriation, and the appropriation for the current year has been exhausted and their transportation has absolutely ceased for weeks, that to rule an appropriation for their transportation is not in order upon this bill, and that under the guise of striking out certain words the gentleman from Ohio is including the doing of a work not authorized by existing law.

Mr. KEIFER. If I can have order a moment, I would like to see whether the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH] is right, either in fact or in his notions of parliamentary law. In the first place, he says there is no law authorizing the transportation of silver dollars. I remember that I made the fight day after day and night after night here before we got in an appropriation for the present fiscal year to carry free of charge silver dollars, and he has forgotten that in so short a time. What the gentleman meant to say, Mr. Chairman, was that we did so poorly in making that appropriation that we did not appropriate enough; that it was exhausted. This is the only ground for saying there is no law. The appropriation was exhausted last February, substantially, and completely exhausted on the 24th of March, and then suspended by order of the Secretary of the Treasury, with a deficiency under existing law yet to be met in the deficiency bill soon to be reported here. But the proposition of law that he makes as a parliamentary matter is still more remarkable. He says that there is no law for carrying fractional silver coin. He is right about that, possibly, but he says because nobody made a point of order against this provision that you dare not amend it at all in any way. The rule has been established, and there are numerous precedents. One is that if a point of order is not made against a provision of an appropriation bill that was subject to a point of order, you may then amend that, although a point of order would have been sustained against the whole of it. There is an abundance of such precedents if we choose to look them up. They are familiar to the Chair, no doubt. There does not now seem to be any reason why I should go into the question of existing law further. There has not been a time since 1881 up to the present time when there has not been a law authorizing the carriage of silver dollars by the Government free.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield? Are there not some precedents also like this, that where an item has been carried in a bill for years and years, as in this case, it becomes a law and is not subject to a point of order?

Mr. KEIFER. Well, the point of order is that you can not amend a provision here by moving to strike a part of it out; that because somebody did not make the point of order against the whole of it it is not subject to amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the Chair is not ready to rule, I would like to set history straight a little with the gentleman from Ohio. As a matter of fact, the contest was made here a year ago about putting in an appropriation for this purpose.

It was defeated repeatedly in the House. In the Senate an amendment was put on carrying this appropriation, and in conference that was put at a sum which all history showed would carry on the work but a part of the year. It did carry it on but a part of the year. The appropriation was exhausted, and the Secretary of the Treasury ordered that no more coin be hauled at Government expense, and it is not being done.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, let me say that the provision of the bill and the act provided $50,000 to carry silver dollars for the fiscal year—all of it and not a piece of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] whether he claims there is any provision of law for carrying silver coin outside of that to be found in the current yearly appropriation bill?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not think so, neither as to the fractional silver nor as to silver dollars, but the transportation of silver is what we are proposing to provide for.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order is not well taken for two reasons. In the first place, I think it would be entirely in order to offer this section as a provision in this bill, either by the committee or by a Member, so that it would read "for the transportation of silver coin." In the first place, it is to carry out a Government work. The Government is in the business of coining silver.

It is a part of the Government's business to make money for the people. To carry that money into circulation it is necessary to deliver it where the people can get it and use it. There is a large amount of the money of this country in the shape of coin—silver dollars. In order to maintain the circulation of that money it is necessary to pay the cost of the shipment of the silver dollars from the Treasury to the banks.

Now, as to whether it is wise or not to do that may be another question. But to-day, as the law is, we have a large amount of silver coin. In order to convey that coin to the people it has been customary for a number of years, in appropriation bills, to provide for the transportation of that coin from the mints to the banks. That is the existing law to-day. It does not make any difference whether the appropriation is exhausted or not. That is a matter that does not concern this question at all. The last bill carried an appropriation for the transportation of silver coin, and that will continue to be the law until the 1st day of July next. Therefore it is in order to propose an appropriation in this bill to carry out the same proposition. But more than that, Mr. Chairman, I do not think there can be any question about the proposition of amending this provision in the bill, even if this was the first time it had ever been offered. What is the object of the provision in the bill? What is the purpose? It is not, Mr. Chairman, to carry fractional silver coin alone. The purpose of the provision is to provide for the carrying of silver coin. It merely describes what has to be transported. Suppose that this provision provided for the transportation of silver half dollars. Would it not be in order, Mr. Chairman, to amend the provision by providing that it should carry silver quarters and silver dimes?

Well, if you can amend by providing that it shall carry silver quarters and silver dimes, why can you not also amend by saying "silver dollars?" Why, it is absolutely in line with the general intention of the paragraph, and is merely an amendment of the paragraph. If you brought in a provision, as was suggested the other day, and the argument was made by a gentleman on the other side—made by the gentleman who is now arguing the point of order against this proposition—that if you brought in a bill here providing for the purchase of a black horse it would be in order to strike out the word "black" and substitute "white;" or if you brought in a provision providing for the purchase of a white horse, it would be in order to strike out "white" and allow the appropriation to purchase any kind of a horse.

Now, the word "fractional" in this provision is merely descriptive of the kind of silver coin that you shall transport. It is merely descriptive of a class of silver coin, and it is perfectly in order to cover a different kind of coin described or an additional coin by changing the words in the provision.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is conceded the paragraph itself is subject to the point of order, and that if the point of order had been made it would have been sustained upon the ground that there is no existing law authorizing the appropriation of money for the transportation of coin, either fractional silver coin or silver dollars. The proposition, and the only proposition, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that is involved under our rules is, whether or not the amendment that has been proposed is germane to the paragraph; because under the rules if a paragraph is permitted by general consent to remain in a bill which is subject to a point of order, then it is in order for any Member to offer an amendment that is germane to the subject of the paragraph. Consequently, all that is presented to the Chairman in this amendment is the question whether the amendment proposed is germane to the subject of the legislation in the paragraph. As the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has well said, the subject attempted to be covered by the paragraph is the transportation of silver coin—any kind of silver coin—and not simply fractional coin.

The word "fractional" is used, but that is merely a descriptive word. The subject of legislation is the transportation of silver coin. For instance, if the bill had provided for the transportation of 100,000 silver dollars, it certainly would have been in order to have inserted as an amendment 150,000 or 175,000. The word "fractional" is an adjective, describing the silver coin that is to be transported. The main object of the paragraph is to provide for the transportation of silver coin; that is, not only fractional silver coin, but any silver coin, shall be transported free. The committee has reported in favor of transporting free fractional silver coin, but the House, in its judgment, by amendment, may decide that not only fractional silver coin, but silver dollars, may be transported free; and therefore it seems to me that there can be no question about the germaneness of the amendment, and if the amendment be decided to be germane, then under the rules I submit it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to amend the paragraph by striking out the word "fractional" wherever it occurs. The gentleman from Iowa makes a point of order that, there being no law authorizing the transportation of silver coin, the amendment operates as a change of existing law. The Chair so thinks. The paragraph, however, it is conceded, was itself subject to a point of order; but no point of order having been made, it was subject to amendment, provided the amendment be germane. The question, then, is, What is a germane amendment? As the Chair understands the law, the carriage of coin, as, for example, standard silver dollars, and the carriage of fractional coin are two separate and distinct legislative propositions; and while any amendment would be germane which would perfect the carrying out of the paragraph, no amendment is in order, in the opinion of the Chair, which introduces a separate and distinct legislative proposition; and therefore the Chair thinks that the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I wish it to be understood that the paragraph is not passed. We will have further propositions to make with reference to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph is not passed until the next paragraph is read. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 62, noes 47.

So the motion of Mr. TAWNEY was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 21260, the sundry civil appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 20063) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 15725. An act to relinquish, release, and confirm the title of certain lands in California to the Western Power Company.

H. R. 19463. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on April 28 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 603. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 20471, the naval appropriation bill, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House disagree to said amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, for fear a division might not be granted, I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I desire to know, under the rule under which we are now acting, in case the negative vote on this proposition should be in the majority, whether that would not adopt these amendments en bloc?

The SPEAKER. It would agree to the amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. And pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. And pass the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And help us to get home sooner.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 188, nays 43, answered "present" 7, not voting 149, as follows:

WITHDRAWAL OF OBJECTION TO EXTENDING REMARKS.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to withdraw my objection to the request for unanimous consent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Pending the announcement of the vote, the gentleman from Illinois withdraws his objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to extend his remarks in the RECORD. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no further objection.

RECESS.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until to-morrow at 11.30 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting a response to the inquiry of the House as to the investigation ordered by resolution of the House, No. 795, of the Fifty-ninth Congress (H. R. Doc. 897)—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for rent of building at Richmond, Va. (H. R. Doc. 898)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of appropriation for expenses of the arbitration of the questions relating to the Northeastern fisheries (H. R. Doc. 899)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation for printing, binding, and casing the Navy Code (H. R. Doc. 900)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolution were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MARSHALL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1385) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1539), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FRENCH, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 18983) for the relief of clerks of courts exercising jurisdiction under section 3 of the naturalization act, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1540), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19246) authorizing the sale of certain public lands to the State of Idaho, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1541), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 384) requesting the Secretary of the Interior to furnish the House of Representatives certain information in regard to the Shawnee Training School at Shawnee, Okla., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1542), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BANNON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 390) to confer jurisdiction upon the circuit court of the United States for the ninth circuit to determine in equity the rights of American citizens under the award of the Bering Sea arbitration of Paris and to render judgment thereon, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1543), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HIGGINS, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4748) to amend an act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district," approved March 3, 1899, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1546), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. KIMBALL, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 21311) to ratify and confirm an act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, authorizing the manufacture and distribution of electric light and power in the district of Wailuku, on the island of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1547), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H.
